Johnny Hoff was playing show with another boy, using the apple tree for a trapeze. Their "feet didn't catch together" and Johnny fell, breaking his arm again.

Myrtle Dills closed her first year in the employ of Harter & Co., Monday. She received a fine parasol as a token that her faithful service had been appreciated.

Mrs. Judge McClellan witnessed the terrible scene in Detroit, when the balloonist fell 1000 feet and was dashed to pieces. The shock completely prostrated her.

Dr. and Mrs. Siver at Ft. Wayne, are the happy parents of a little girl, an event dating from the first of the week. We send congratulations from the many friends in Auburn.

Gertie Caruth was twelve Tuesday, and had a number of little misses invited in honor of the occasion. They had a nice time, and left wishing Gertie might have another birthday soon.

Duncan Clark's Female Minstrels drew a full house last night. The performance was good, in many particulars superior to anything of the kind that has ever appeared before a Sedalia audience. —Bazoo, Sedalia, Mo., Sept. 7, 1890.

ALL TAKE NOTICE: The Auburn District Fair Association has provided a safe and convenient check room at the SOUTH ENTRANCE to the EXPOSITION BUILDING, where dinner baskets, robes, wraps, etc., can be checked for only "5" cents.

The institute is a great success every way, and we regret that we cannot give greater attention to it, and more complete reports in the paper, but sickness in the COURIER force has prevented. We have seen enough however to say it is one of the very best ever held in the county. The work is of the highest order of excellence, and the lectures so far, are unexcelled. We cannot refrain from giving a word of admiration for Miss Tarney, whose clear, clean-cut instructions, on a rather difficult subject are models, every way. And what especially pleases us is, she is a DeKalb girl—a Jackson township girl.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon; if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Delicate ladies, do not fail to use this great cure, because it will put the bloom of freshness and beauty upon your lips and in your cheeks, and quickly drive away your disabilities and weaknesses.

The Waterloo fair has secured special trains over the Lake Shore, from Wauseon on the east to Goshen on the west. The Jackson road usually holds its local freight so as to accommodate those who cannot go on the passenger trains. tf

Miss Sadie Showers, on south Cedar street, who has been visiting at Dayton, Ohio, the past few weeks, returned Monday. She reports herself as well pleased with the city and its attractions, but still recognizes many redeeming features in Auburn.

The Lutheran church has secured the services of a new pastor, Rev. J. D. Brosey. He begins his ministry next Sunday, Sept 6, on which day there will be services both morning and evening, and regularly thereafter. All are cordially invited to attend.

Goshen Democrat: The Lake Shore now has a large force of men at work east and west of South Bend, laying a second track. So much of this track has been laid, that with a little more work the road can be double-tracked between Cleveland and Chicago.

MARRIED: At the residence of the officiating minister, Elder James Barton in Richland township, August 27, Edward McDonald to Miss Loretta Rice. The young couple are residents of this county, and enter on the new life with the good wishes of many warm friends.

J. A. Quince, of Ft. Wayne, was here this week in the interest of the McDermut Business College, with which he has been so long connected. He is now one of the regular teachers, and like the typical DeKalb boy he is, he proposes to keep himself at the front. It appears to be a lucky thing to hail from DeKalb.

John Aber is building a green house at his residence on south Main street. John is a hustler from way back, and we very naturally get to saying:

There may be flies on you and flies on me,
As we spend our time pushing the Faber;
But it's plain enough for all to see,
There are no flies on ABER.

For years no fair in northern Indiana has had a better reputation for fair dealing, big crowds and excellent displays than Ligonier fair. This year promises to excel all former attempts, as the managers have secured a number of new attractions and propose to hold a fair second to none in Northern Indiana. New buildings are being erected, the race track is being put in first-class condition and large premiums are offered. These things, coupled with the liberal management, should make the Ligonier fair a success. The dates for 1891 are October 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th.

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician, will be in Auburn at the Hollister House the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his services in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. 34tf

While you are at the fair, the Union Bakery, on W. 7th street, wants you to call and see what they have in the line of fine breads, pies, cakes, etc.

T. J. Saxton made a divide with us on pears this week, furnishing some grown at his home, that were very nice, they would fairly melt in one's mouth. Thanks.

As you pass through town on your way to the Auburn fair, be sure and stop at Brandon's for a package of Immense baking powder. You get a pound for twenty cents.

Before many years have passed, Main street will be paved with cement from one end to the other. Proper pride and capital are the essentials for the beautification of a town.

We are continually receiving new goods of all kinds, and our trade is steadily increasing because, selling for cash, we can undersell all other dealers in our line of business, at the Fair, Garrett, Ind,

The Reading Room is well patronized. W. A. Rose, the superintendent reports that during August, nearly 800 young people took advantage of the privileges of the establishment. There is scarcely an hour, but there are readers present,

Our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sewell were here Monday, and we had an old-fashioned visit. Mrs. Sewell has been in this county 55 years, and Mr. S. 21. They are still hale and sound, and we hope may enjoy life in old DeKalb many years yet.

J. B. Scott, who has been attending the institute this week has been some time engaged in selling the Peerless Atlas of the World, a work that covers all the ground its name indicates. It is a great work, and it is surprising that it can be sold for $1.25.

A letter from J. D. High, now at Atchison, Kansas, reports a severe storm there the week before. Houses were blown down, some horses killed and people hurt. Hail fell to the depth of six inches at a point near there. He sends regards to the friends out here.

Mrs. Mary Falling, of Onondaga county, New York, a sister of T. J. Saxton, is here on a visit. She reports the greatest drouth in that part of the state, ever known by the oldest inhabitants there, and that crops are light, except cherries and plums which are abundant.

R. W. Cobb, who has been at Lakeside, Ohio, during the summer, has returned. The season at that popular resort, has been a very successful one. Mr. Cobb now goes to the pacific coast, and will remain there for some time. He went Tuesday noon, over the Lake Shore road.

Dr. Buchtel is negotiating for a different organ for the Presbyterian church, one of a style different from the vocalion that was there, which though a good instrument, was not altogether what was needed. The Doctor is an expert in music and musical matters and we believe will give us a good instrument.

Have you ever been hungry when you came to Auburn? For want of the knowledge of a good lunch room, did you wait till you got home to get something to eat? If you have, don't repeat it again, but go to Cory Shugers', on West Seventh street. He has facilities for gratifying thirst and hunger that are gratifying. 32tf

Judge Zollars, of Ft. Wayne, called on us last week while here. He had just closed the big suit in which he was counsel, and thinks it was one of the most hotly contested he has had for some time. The Judge is one of the ablest men in the state, and it would not surprise us if northern Indiana, would demand his nomination for governor next year. We have already called attention to this growing sentiment, and shall watch its development. Certainly no better man has been talked of so far.

The Hicksville Independent attempts to poke fun at Secretary Husselman of the Auburn fair, because the latter refused to sell a license for "hokey-pokey" to a Hicksville citizen. The Independent is wrong and Cal Husselman is right. The Hicksville "hokey-pokey" may be or may not be,—what it should be, an unusually deadly form of ice cream; but we wish to inform our contemporary that the "hokey-pokey" sold at several fairs up this way for the last two years, was identical with the "razzle-dazzle," that suddenly became so popular at several of those places. In fact the hokey-pokey-razzle dazzle gentry were arrested at various times and places for selling liquor without a license. As our secretary said, we have no use for that kind of fellows. If the Hicksville man can prove that he will sell just what he says he will, he will have no difficulty to get a license at the great Auburn District fair, that begins here next week, Sept. 7 to 11 inclusive.

Word comes from Jackson township that a good deal of pilfering has been done for some time. The parties suspected are about to move to another locality and it would be well for those having houses to rent, to be careful.

Hip, hip, hurrah! There is a fair on the grounds east of town next week, and the Union Bakery wants people who come to Auburn on that occasion to call and learn their facilities for furnishing baked goods to a whole army of hungry folks.

J. W. Doty has been agent for that excellent agricultural paper, the Orange-Judd Farmer, for several years. He will be at the Auburn fair as agent, and take subscriptions at reduced rates. Don't forget this for it is an extra chance to get a good paper cheap. 34-36

Coop Ralston had a severe hurt last Thursday. He was putting up a wind-mill derrick for the Zimmerman company somewhere near Churubusco, when in handling it, it fell across his left foot and leg straining it severely, and it is a wonder the limb was not crushed or broken.

Have you tried South American Nervine—the gem of the century? The great cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and nervousness. Warranted the most wonderful stomach and nerve cure ever known. Trial bottles 15 cents. Sold by Robbins & McCord, druggists, Auburn.

The little child of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rose, of Garrett, died Sunday forenoon, after an illness of a week or two. It was cholera infantum first and then chronic diarrhoea followed. It was a bright little boy and will be greatly missed. The funeral was at the M. E. church Monday afternoon.

The types got us mixed a little in the Waterloo correspondence, in regard to C. P. Urie. He has located and bought property at Butler, and is agent for the Lake Shore road there, and not as stated at Waterloo. It was caused by a Butler item being accidentally "made up" with those from Waterloo. Some queer things happen.

Dr. Buchtel is now making regular trips to Waterloo, as he is treating Mrs. A. J. Sinclair of that place. He was called there a week or two ago in consultation over the case, with Dr. Fisher, of Elkhart. The case is a severe one, with little hopes of her recovery. But the doctor has been very successful in many difficult cases and we earnestly hope Mrs. S. may recover.

The entry books of the Auburn fair are now open and the secretary will be in his office in the Nicky & Gandy Hall, over the Boston Clothing store, every day for the transaction of any business connected with the fair. Make your selections now and make your entries early. This will be the first and largest fair of the season and the officers desire everything to move along smoothly and hum as they go. Remember the date Sept. 7 to 11.

A. C. Acker, who came from Lagrange last spring, and who is a partner in the firm of Murphy & Acker, city painters, has added his name to our roll of honor, by welcomeing the COURIER as a weekly visitor to his home. He means to keep posted as to the things pertaining to the county in which he lives. Besides being a first-class painter, he is a thorough musician and is at present leader of the Auburn Band. We gladly welcome the gentleman as a valuable citizen in our community.

M. E. Griswold of Montpelier was in town Monday in the interest of the fair, which comes off the next week after ours. He met with the G. A. R. folks here, to talk about an excursion to Montpelier on Wednesday, of their fair. The Auburn post will meet next Monday to see how many can go, and if enough can do so, a special train will come over from Butler to get all who go whether G. A. R or not. Special rates will be given on Thursday and Friday also, and perhaps special trains.

John Mitchell, who went west and southwest last spring on an extended trip, found many old DeKalb people on his journey. Among them was Jason Beard, whose encounter with a cyclone in which his brother lost his life, is no doubt remembered by our people. He is now an extensive stock raiser and doing well. G. W. Reed, who used to teach near Waterloo is near him and doing well. Mr. Mitchell's trip took him through Oklahoma, New Mexico, Colorado, etc. He may possibly locate somewhere out in that section at some future day.

Friday afternoon, as Clyde Brandon was coming over from Garrett, on the B. & O. fast train, he wanted to get off at the Junction. The train it seems did not stop, so he was compelled to get off while it was in motion. In stepping to the ground, he sprained one of his ankles very severely and his expressions of delight were not very favorable to that railroad's present system of passenger traffic.

That editors of the "Century Dictionary" should permit so gross an error to deface a page of that work is as surprising as it is censurable. In revision of the work into which it has slipped by unintentional oversight its offensive restriction will be, of course, expunged.

WOMANLY devotion to an unworthy scamp was never more forcibly instanced than when the deserted wife of Letter-Carrier Barlow, of Chicago, tearfully pleaded with the authorities for leniency for her disgraced husband. Barlow had deserted his wife two years before, had ill-treated her while he did live with her, and in many ways had forfeited all claims upon her respect and affection; yet, when he was detected in his thieving, this devoted little woman was the first to offer him comfort and to intercede in his behalf. Truly, the depth of woman's love is yet unfathomed.

AWAY with such a hybrid, such a monstrosity, such a Frankenstein freak of a word as "electrocution" for inflicting the death penalty by electricity. It is an etymological absurdity, because the criminal is not "cuted" by electricity or anything else. He is not even executed. It is the sentence of the law that is executed, as any other sort of authoritative order is executed. Some punishment fitting the crime should be devised for the man who invented the words "electrocute" and "electrocution." They should be boycotted by every speaker and writer of good, honest English.

THE landing of 95,000 bushels of wheat at Liverpool in unbroken bulk from Chicago is an interesting event in the history of international transportation. It saves elevator charges at Buffalo, canal or railroad freights to the seaboard and the heavy terminal charges there. If the exploit of the Wetmore could be repeated safely and reliably throughout the season of navigation there would certainly be a field for a fleet of such vessels, and the effect upon the Liverpool wheat market would be pronounced. The Wetmore is a credit to Michigan enterprise and to the skill of her builders.

WITHIN the memory of a multitude of living people it was the custom of Americans upon all festive occasions to boast that "America was the land of the brave and the home of the free," and they rejoiced over each ship-load of immigrants that reached our shores. But times have changed. There is no longer any rejoicing over the incoming multitudes, but a sober reflecting on how immigration can be reduced in quantity. The immigration for the current year will doubtless reach more than 600,000. Over 400,000 reached the port of New York alone. Those that have been returned as unfit for citizenship are so few as scarcely to deserve notice, while the number wholly lacking in all essentials of the American citizen were undoubtedly greatly in the majority. What will happen if this class continues to pour in upon us and increase with the years it is not difficult to surmise.

OFFICIAL secrecy has no place in a popular government. In a despotic country, where the sovereign is the state, his majesty's counsel is necessarily reserved to himself and his cabinet. Under the rule of an aristocracy the purposes of the rulers are shrouded in darkness, and the blows of the Senate of Rome or the Council of Venice were accustomed to fall without warning. But, under a system founded upon the intelligence and choice of the whole people, it is monstrous, it is intolerable, that any act of any public servant should be kept from general knowledge and shielded from investigation. Especially is this the case when the state exercises its authority to take the life of any man, though the very humblest member of the community. The law of the State of New York, so far as it enjoins or allows the putting to death of criminals in secret, or in the presence only of a few witnesses pledged to secrecy, is capable of abuse, discordant with our institutions, violative of private rights, restrictive of a free press, and unworthy of this country and this age. It must be amended. The people must have light. They must know what the public servants are doing. They must know whether cruelty and torture are perpetrated. The four men who died at Sing Sing were executed by command of the sovereign people of the State of New York. And the people want to know in what manner it was done.

Some Uses for Lemons.

After paring the lemon very thin (as the white part is bitter), and extracting the juice, there are many ways for using the "remains." Have you a tin, copper, or brass saucepan? Do not waste your time and muscle scouring it. Fill with cold water, drop in some of that discarded pulp, set it on the back of the stove, and let it boil about ten or fifteen minutes; then wash, and it will be as bright as new. If any spots remain, take some of the lemon, dip it in salt, and rub thoroughly; all stains will disappear as if by magic. Copper boilers can be cleaned by rubbing with the lemon and salt, in less time than by the old process, and one is less liable to be poisoned. For those long, dark scratches which reveal that some one has tried to light a match by drawing it across the paint, take half a lemon and rub briskly, then wash off with a cloth moistened in water, then dipped in whiting; rub well with this cloth, and in nine cases out of ten the mark will vanish. These marks defy soap and water; of course, sometimes they are burned in so deeply that they can not be erased. The pulp of lemon rubbed on the hands will remove all stains. Drop a few drops of lemon juice on a rust spot, sprinkle with salt, and lay in the sun; the rust will disappear.—Housekeeper's Weekly.

PROTECTION WATERS IT

RAILROAD CHARGES INCREASED BY THE TARIFF.

Protection's Check—The Useless Wool Tariff—Profits in Foreign Trade—Hamilton vs. McKinley—A Point About Needles—Reform Notes.

Watered by Protection.

Our farmers very justly complain that railroads are very often capitalized at much more than their actual value, and then proceed to charge freight rates high enough to earn dividends upon their watered stock. This complaint is, in many cases, only too well founded; yet the men who make it often overlook the fact that they themselves have a very deep pecuniary interest in cheapening the legitimate expenses of railroad building and equipment.

Even a railroad honestly capitalized at its actual cost has to earn dividends upon a much larger capital than would be otherwise necessary, owing to the artificial values caused by the protective tariff. There are some farmers who fancy that the price of steel rails, for example, is no concern of theirs. But they must see that it does concern them, since whatever increases the cost of making railroad becomes an element in fixing freight and passenger charges.

The New York Commercial Bulletin, one of the highest authorities in business matters has recently said: "When it is considered that the materials and labor required in the construction and operating of our roads are increased in cost on an average probably fully 30 per cent. through the operation of the protective policy, it will be seen that our transportation is costing us some $325,000,000 per annum more than it need," and it went on: "that ($325,000,000) needless tax has to be paid out of our products and labor, and thereby becomes an embargo upon our whole commerce and industry, and an obstruction to our competition for the commerce of the world."

A correspondent having asked for further explanation of this, the Bulletin answered in part as follows:

"In applying this 30 per cent. ratio to the enhancement of the cost of railroad construction and transportation, we aimed to be largely within the truth, as will appear from the fact that for the years 1865, 1875, 1880, and 1885 the duty on iron rails averaged 40 per cent., and home-made rails must have ranged above foreign prices approximately in about that ratio. For the period between 1863 and 1890—the epoch of high duties—the cost of railroad constructed, as it is expressed in the stocks and debts of the companies, has amounted to 8,500 millions; and, therefore, taking the enhancement of cost of construction at only 30 per cent., we have during that period incorporated into our railroad system no less than 2,550 millions of virtually fictitious capital, or nearly double the present amount of the national debt; upon which the roads, not being responsible for this artificial increase of their outlay, demand with some show of right that they must be allowed to earn interest. Allowing them only 4 per cent. on this compulsory inflation, it follows that the protective policy is now forcing upon the railroads a necessity for exacting from the public, for capital account alone, $102,000,000 per annum more than would have been required in the absence of that policy. This item was embraced in the aggregate of $325,000,000 given in our remarks of the 15th inst., based on the fact that every item among which the 1,080 millions of current gross earnings is disbursed has been directly or indirectly subject to the inflating effect of the tariff.

"We hardly know how to make it plainer to our correspondents than we already have how this artificial increase of the cost of rail transportation 'has to be paid out of our products and labor.' What else is there but products and labor to provide the means of paying for transportation service? The cost of transportation has to be added to the cost of labor and products, thereby enhancing the price of both; and so far as there is any artificial augmentation of this element of cost there is clearly so much abnormal embargo upon both our industries and our trade; which must be an obstruction to our competing with nations which are less subject to tariff impediments.

"And just here lies the fundamental blunder, the fatal weakness, of protection. Whatever producers may be supposed to gain through the tariff raising prices, they cannot but lose through a corresponding increase in the cost of labor, plant, materials, management and all other outlays, and the result of the artificial contrivance is simply nil. For the device diverts a large amount of capital and labor from pursuits for which we have the best facilities to those for which we have the worst; and the net result is a waste of productive power and a failure to turn the national resource into the most natural current and to the best account. Protection is simply an attempt to subvert and counteract natural laws; and as such it can never benefit the industry at large of any country, although it may be so contrived as to help some interests to the corresponding detriment of others."

The Useless Wool Tariff.

If we are to continue to be, on the whole, the best-clothed people in the world, we must continue to consume a large portion of the product of wool-growing countries. The proposition of Judge Lawrence and his associates, to grow all the wool of every kind that we require, is known by every manufacturer, and this should be evident to any intelligent person who will investigate the subject, to be the most arrant nonsense. Thousands of farmers in this country, who have attempted the raising of special breeds of sheep in various localities and abandoned it as unprofitable business, know it to be impracticable. They can do something else more profitable, for which they are better circumstanced. Practically, therefore, it is the same as impossible to force this business to any great extent. Under any circumstances, it is a matter of many years experience in the adjustment of various breeds of sheep to special localities. This cannot be done by increased duties on foreign wools.—Wade's Fibre and Fabric.

Tariff the Main Issue.

In a recent interview upon the issues of 1892, Senator John G. Carlisle says:

"I have no hesitation in saying that the Democracy should keep the tariff to the front. It is the great issue of the day and on it the fight should be made. Upon it the party is united and can make a confident and aggressive battle.

"The party is not united on the free coinage of silver, and it would be suicidal to advance that issue to a position of equal importance with the tariff; but this will not, in my opinion, be done. Nothing can get in front of the other issue; the cause of revenue reform will still be the paramount question, even with free coinage. If the drain on the people produced by high prices is continued, how are they benefited? Their money will still be wrung from them through custom house exactions."

IT is quite possible that we have spoken disrespectfully of reciprocity, and why not? Isn't it a humbug, pure and simple? Isn't it a roundabout and awkward way of arriving at the ends which the tariff reformers have in view? The worst of it is, it does not promise valuable returns, but the admission of rabid protectionists that reciprocity is desirable means much; it gives the lie to many of their arguments in the past, and deals a severe blow to the fabric of protection, already tottering to its fall.—New York Merchants' Review.

Is the Foreign Market a Curse?

Our enormous crops, with good prices, which would not be possible in the narrow confines of the home market, are now teaching our farmers the value of their foreign market as they have never seen it before. While they are thus learning in a most practical way the immense importance of the European market, let them not forget what the protection doctrine about that market is.

The principal American book setting forth the doctrines of protection is that of Carey. This is the greatest work yet produced by an American protectionist, and our high tariff crowd are accustomed to swear by Carey. And what says Carey about the foreign market?

"Our country would be better off if the Atlantic were an impassable ocean of fire, and a prolonged war between this country and our best customer, England, would prove an advantage."

Do the farmers think so? Let them imagine what would now be the price of wheat if the 200,000,000 bushels which Europe will probably call for this year were kept at home to glut our own market.

But this queer doctrine is also the doctrine of McKinley. Here are his words:

"If our trade and commerce are increasing and profitable within our own borders, what advantage can come from passing by confessedly the best market that we may reach the poorest by distant seas? In the foreign market the profit is divided between our own citizen and the foreigner, while with the trade and commerce among ourselves the profit is kept in our own family and increases our national wealth, and promotes the welfare of the individual citizen."

Yet "the poorest by distant seas" is now booming the prices of wheat in a way to make the farmers smile. Would it not be wiser to court that market very vigorously by taking more freely what it has to offer in exchange?

Protection's Cheek.

The great crops of all kinds of agricultural products are now attracting universal attention; and already the protectionist organs are congratulating themselves that these big crops are going to make the farmers so happy that they will forget all about agricultural depression and go on voting for the blessed high tariff.

The organs do not even stop here, but have the sublime cheek to claim that these big crops are due to the McKinley law. Thus the New York Tribune, the chief sinner of them all, has the assurance to say: "The expansion of production at this time is not entirely a matter of luck. One principal object of the new tariff was to afford better protection to agriculture. It contained new duties for the express purpose of enabling American farmers to secure the home market more fully. At the same time it gave them assurance of expansion of manufactures and establishment of new industries, creating a far greater home demand for their products. Early last fall, as soon as the new tariff went into effect, these results were perceived. American farmers, thus encouraged, increased their production in every direction, and so rapidly that they might have found reason to regret it if unusual foreign demands had not arisen. The encouragement of industry here was the legitimate fruit of a tariff intended for that purpose."

But who can discover a single farmer that planted more this year because of the McKinley law? Such a farmer ought to be found at once for exhibition purposes. Any dime museum could offer him a good salary.

The idea of McKinley encouraging farmers who export an enormous surplus of their products!

A Point About Needles.

Mistakes will occur even in the best-regulated protection families. Here, for example, is one of the "tariff pictures" of the New York Press:

"Ladies, the McKinley bill has not advanced the price of needles. They cost $1.10 a thousand last year, and only 73¾ cents this year; because we make them in this country, and the tariff does not touch home-made goods if we make enough of them. That's mighty good reason why we should make enough of them, isn't it?"

And here is an extract from McKinley's speech at the great protection banquet in New York last April:

"Do you know why we put sewing needles on the free list? We did it upon the great underlying principle of protection, because we didn't manufacture them at home."

That is why needles are lower now. The duty taken off by McKinley was 25 per cent., and already needles have fallen in price, according to the figures given by the Press, more than the entire amount of the duty.

But do we make needles? McKinley says no; the Press says we do, and that this is the reason that the price has come down. McKinley says he put needles on free list; the Press says there is still a duty on them.

Yet, it is a well-known fact that this organ was subsidized by a rich Connecticut manufacturer to expound and defend protection.

Profits in Foreign Trade.

Here are the yearly profits which England gets out of its foreign trade, together with its interest on investments in foreign countries:

Profits on freight	£ 45,000,000
Interest on the capital in foreign commerce	5,000,000
Insurance	2,500,000
Profits of the merchants	17,500,000
Interest on investments	55,000,000

or $612,000,000 per annum made out of foreign trade and by putting money into foreign countries. Yet we have many protectionist wiseacres in this country who tell us that "British free trade" is bringing a "bitter harvest" upon England. Do these figures show that foreign trade is an unmitigated evil?

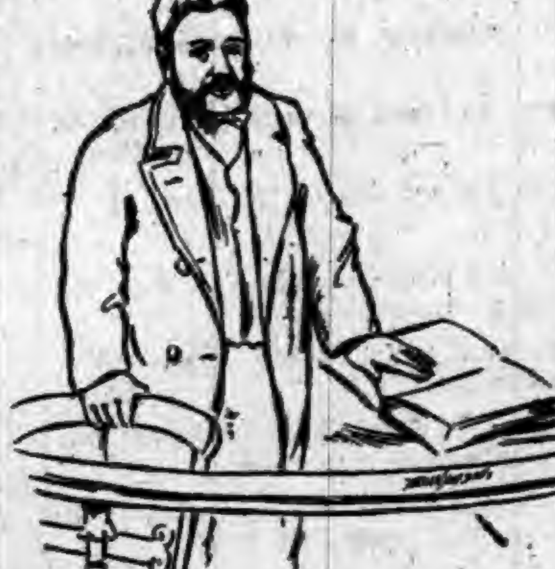
THE organ of the Protective Tariff League has found a new consolation for the woolgrowers to compensate them for the decline in the price of their staple since the McKinley bill went into effect. It says: "The duty on wool may or may not increase the price of this year's clip, but five years from now the number of sheep will be increased, and the fleeces which are cut from those sheep will weigh more than those cut in 1890 or even in 1884." This may be the effect of the tariff on the sheep, though we cannot see how it will come about. But if the effect on the farmer is to make him weigh less (and that is the way it works now), we shall still think that there is a net loss to the country from the wool tariff.—Evening Post.

"THE overthrow of the present horrible system of tariff taxation is absolutely essential to the liberties of the people. Taxation of the laboring masses for the enrichment of the protected and privileged few is a re-enactment of slavery in this country more odious and abominable than African bondage when it existed. This issue is to be fought out to the bitter end, and I have faith that sooner or later the people will triumph over the ruins of the plutocracy. There are other issues also which must take their place in the National Democratic platform."—Senator Voorhees.

GREAT IN BIBLE WORK.

Charles Haddon Spurgeon, London's First Pulpit Orator.

Rev. Charles Haddon Spurgeon, who was recently brought so near death's door, is one of the really great men. He was born at Kelvedon, Essex, June 19, 1834, and was educated at Colchester, Maidstone and elsewhere, finally becoming usher in a school at Newmarket. Having adopted Baptist views, he joined the congregation which had been presided over by the late Robert Hall, at Cambridge. He subsequently became pastor at Waterbeach, and his fame as a preacher reaching London he was offered the pastorate of the church meeting in New Park Street Chapel, in Southwark. He first preached before a London congregation in 1853, with so much success that ere two years had elapsed it was considered necessary to enlarge the building, pending which alteration he officiated for four months at Exeter Hall. The enlargement of the chapel in Park street, however, proved insufficient, and hearers multiplied with such rapidity that it became expedient to engage the Surrey Music Hall, and Mr. Spurgeon's followers determined to build a suitable edifice for their services. The Metropolitan Tabernacle was accordingly built and opened in 1861.



C. H. SPURGEON.

Mr. Spurgeon has published a sermon weekly since the first week of 1855, and at the end of 1889 the series—inclusive of double numbers—had reached No. 2120. The weekly circulation of these sermons is about twenty-five thousand. Mr. Spurgeon has also published a number of other works, the chief of which is "The Treasury of David; or, an Exposition of the Psalms," in seven volumes.

The Stockwell Orphanage, founded by him in 1867, has since been enlarged to accommodate 250 boys and as many girls, and down to 1889 more than 1,400 children had been received. The Pastors' College, founded by him in 1856, has educated over 800 men, of whom, in 1889, 673 were still engaged as pastors, missionaries, evangelists or in some department of Christian work. The Metropolitan Colportage Association has about seventy or eighty agents occupying districts in different parts of the country, who, in addition to their other service, sell pure literature in the course of a year to the amount of £9,000. A "book fund," carried on in Mr. Spurgeon's house and superintended by Mrs. Spurgeon, has in ten years supplied indigent ministers of various denominations, free of cost, with over one hundred and fifteen thousand volumes.

Mr. Spurgeon carries on a society for evangelists at home, and another for mission work in North Africa. His church has about thirty mission halls and schools affiliated with it. In 1879 he received a silver wedding testimonial of over £6,000, and in 1884, on attaining his 50th year, another sum of about £5,000 was presented. These funds were almost entirely distributed in charity, £5,000 having been devoted to the endowment of the tabernacle almshouses. In 1887 Mr. Spurgeon withdrew from the Baptist Union. He had been a patient sufferer for many years from a complication of diseases, chief of which was rheumatic gout. Added to this was influenza in its worst form. He lived near Beulah Hill, Upper Norwood, a pretty suburb of London.

Mr. Spurgeon was a busy man, employing five stenographers and keeping them all going. With the exception of Mr. Gladstone, he received the largest mail of any man in the three kingdoms. A great many of his letters from sailors, from soldiers, from poor fellows whom he had managed to help out of the gutter, were simply addressed Spurgeon, England. To these he replied cheerfully and was always ready to give advice. Nor was this all. He gave freely of his money. In fact, he was a poor man. If it had not been for the kindness of his congregation, he would have been penniless. A few years ago they purchased a house for him, the house at Norwood, the southern ridge of the wooded heights of Sydenham. Upon the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate of the church his congregation presented him with a large purse of money as a token of its esteem. It was intended that he should pay off the mortgage on his house, and take the remainder for a holiday. He did nothing of the kind; he divided the large sum equally between the pastors' college and the orphanage. If it had not been for the prudence of some of his friends who insisted that it was his duty to keep his house free, he would have lived in hired apartments. His charity was not indiscriminate. His money was only given to those who deserved it.

He declined as many as a score of invitations to lecture throughout Europe and America at fabulous prices, because, as he explained, he was not a lecturer, and he didn't want the money, and he preferred to work in his own way among his own people in London. When an American lecture agency offered him recently $1,000 for every lecture and to pay all the expenses of himself and his wife and a secretary from London to America on a great lecture tour, and held out the tempting offer that he could make $50,000, Mr. Spurgeon declined it. He said he could do better. He would stay in London and try to save fifty souls.

Two Prayers.

Mr. Spurgeon had been reviewing a book on "Primitive Methodism on the Yorkshire Wolds," and was especially pleased with a story of a not very fluent young man, who being in the habit of saying in his prayers, "Lord, help me to pray!" was answered one night by an old man's ejaculation, "And the Lord help thee to give ower!"

"I NEVER carried a watch in my life," said a New-Yorker of fifty. "A watch is a habit, not a necessary article. No man who carries a watch can be any more regular in his habits than I am. I can get up at a certain minute and do so every morning. I can tell the time of day by feeling my face. The beard grows exactly so much, and you can come within a reasonable time of the hour by passing the hand over the chin. Not that it is often necessary, because regular habits soon become second nature and you never think of wondering about the hour. Of course the man who lives on trains and boats a good deal has to wear a timepiece and a time table."

INDUSTRIAL GROWTH OF A NEW STATE.

Important Industries That Are Under Way—Marvelous Increase of Population —Mines and Mining—The Country in General.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

When you travel over the Northern Pacific, with your trusted kodak in your hand, ready to make a center shot on the choicest bits of scenery, let us advise you to hold your ammunition until you reach the Clark's Fork River, unless you take a couple of snaps at the Flatheads who hang about the stations in the vicinity of the Rosebud Agency. No wonder the Government experienced trouble with such citizens. The artist who took a typical Flathead countenance as a study of "trouble" would be bound to overdo the subject, if he was faithful to his model. Their tents, however, are quite picturesque, and so, also, are the Indians, provided they are far enough away.

The valley in which the Rosebud Agency is located is very fertile and inviting, and home seekers and capitalists alike view it with envious eyes. Perhaps it is a peculiarity of Indian reservations to appear to the eyes of whites to be a little more desirable land than that which is equally fertile and well located, but which is open to the white settler and speculator. It is the forbidden which always appears more tempting.

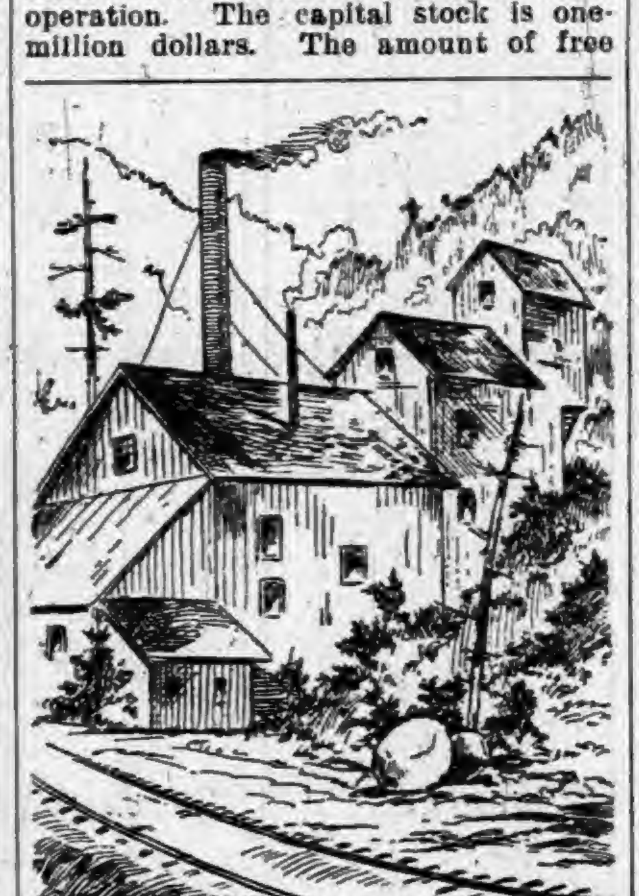
When once you have reached the shores of Clark's Fork you will be tempted to fire a perfect fusillade of snap shots; for every mile of the one hundred along which we follow this stream offers new and enticing scenic beauties in marvelous and striking variety. Here the sportsman finds an abundance of the choicest victims. Almost every mountain brook that flows into the river is alive with "speckled beauties," hungry for the hook, and neither too shy nor too wise to help themselves freely, at the first opportunity, while bear, deer, and other large game are plentiful in the woods.

Lake Pend d'Oreille, in Western Idaho, is one of the most enchanting lakes in the West. Southwest of Lake Pend d'Oreille is Lake Cœur d'Alene, another beautiful mountain lake. This is the headwaters of the Spokane River.

The banks of this lake and river are thickly timbered with fir and cedar, and the cost of booming the logs down the Spokane River is from thirty to fifty cents per thousand. The great water power must make that city the site of some of the greatest lumber mills of the West, for the amount of timber on the Spokane River, Lake Cœur d'Alene and the St. Joseph, St. Mary and Cœur d'Alene Rivers, which flow into the lake, is almost beyond computation. Spokane already has various prosperous mills, one cutting 100,000 feet of lumber per day.

Spokane draws a large amount of wealth from adjacent mining districts, which are all within 200 miles distant.

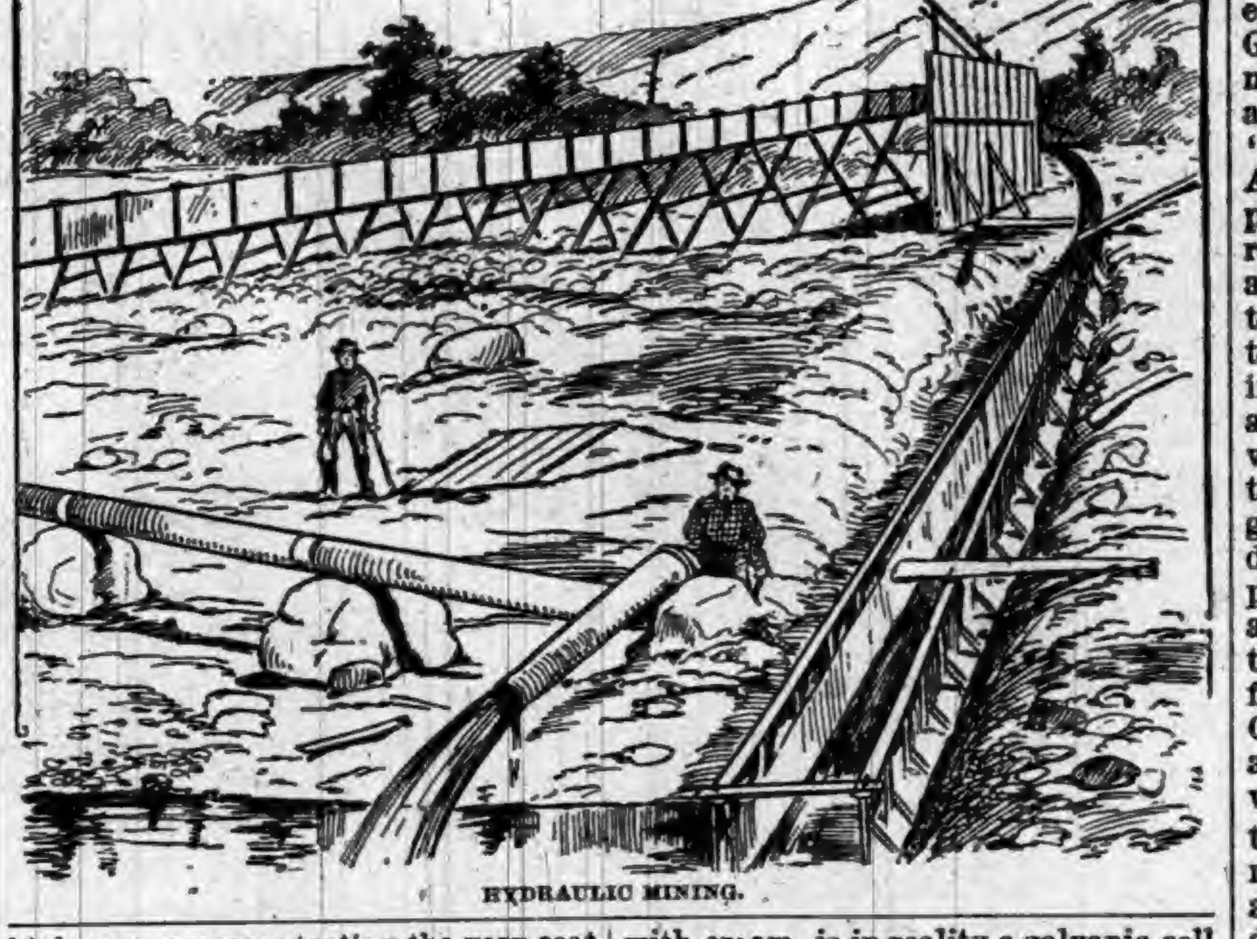
The Idaho districts which are tributary to Spokane are the Cœur d'Alene, southeast; the Pend d'Oreille, east; and the Metaline, northeast. The Kootenai, across the line, in British Columbia, is also tapped by a Spokane railroad, and the districts in the State of Washington which are partially or wholly tributary to Spokane are the Okanogan and Colville, to the north and northwest. The supplies for these districts are mainly furnished by Spokane, which will derive a large additional source of profit from its surrounding minerals as soon as the magnificent smelting plant just built, some five miles out of the city, is in full operation. The capital stock is one million dollars. The amount of free mining ores from mines in these districts, in 1890, was about three million dollars, while the amount of smelting ores produced that year from tributary districts is placed at 175,000 tons. Of this the Cœur d'Alene district produced 90,000 tons of ore, valued at $6,021,000. The smelting charge on this amount of ore, at the average price, would be $1,350,000.



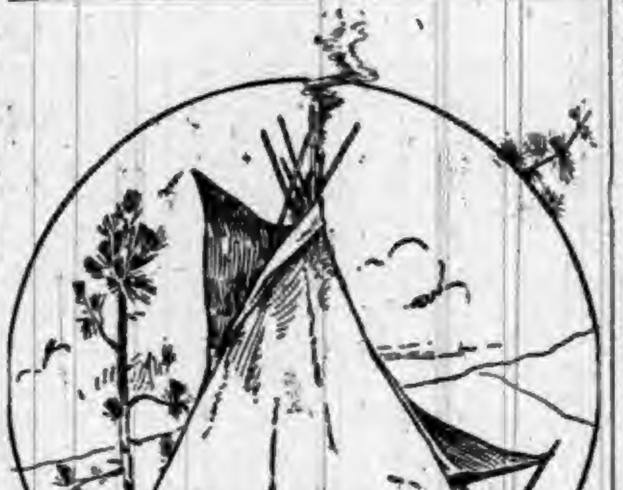
SILVER MINE AND CONCENTRATOR.

Another city which is surrounded with abundant mineral resources is Ellensburgh, the county seat of Kittitass County, and the metropolis of the Yakima Valley, situated in practically the geographical center of the State. In 1880 its population was 100; it now has nearly 6,000 inhabitants. Its latest triumph of enterprise is the erection of the Ellensburgh Blast Furnace No. 1. The buildings are already up, and the furnace is being built of fire-brick manufactured from native fire-clay by a plant erected on the site of the furnace. The clay from which they are made is superior to the famous Scotch fire-clay. The manufacture of these fire-brick, which retail for $40 per thousand, can scarcely fail to develop into an industry of considerable proportions; but it is to their iron, gold, and coal resources that the citizens of Ellensburgh look with greatest expectation. Iron has proven the world over, and particularly in England, Pennsylvania, and Alabama, to be a most substantial basis upon which to build cities. There is no reason why it should fail to meet the expectation of the people of Ellensburgh, for there are in Kittitass County, and in close proximity to Ellensburgh, literally mountains of iron of a very high grade. In the report of George A. Bethune, State Geologist, bearing date of 1891, we find the following official statement: "In Washington, to-day, there are in process of development nearly twenty promising iron properties. These are situated in King, Skagit, Kittatass, Stevens, and Okanogan Counties, and I am pleased to say that the development work on all of these deposits is being vigorously prosecuted. I have inspected many of these discoveries, procured samples from all visited, and have ascertained that each of the classes of iron I name above are to be found in our own State, and that of these classes the Washington ores are of superior excellence. In King, Kittitass and Okanogan Counties magnetites and hematites exist in great quantity, and the value of these varieties cannot be over estimated, as from them is made that quality of steel designated the Bessemer, and acknowledged the king of steels throughout the world. Our magnetites and hematites are peculiarly adapted to the manufacture of steel, because of the small quantity of phosphorus they carry and the high per cent. of metallic iron contained in them. I look forward with supreme confidence to the time when Washington's Bessemer steel will be one of her principal manufactures, and to the time when steel works will be seen in operation throughout the great hematite and magnetite ore belt of the State.

"The fact that the railway development of the State has assumed really phenomenal proportions, and that iron highways are penetrating the very seat of these and deposits of other iron ores of the classes I have mentioned warrants the prophecy that within less than two decades the output of iron in this State will lead that of any other iron-producing division of the Pacific Slope."



HYDRAULIC MINING.



A FLATHEAD INDIAN FAMILY.

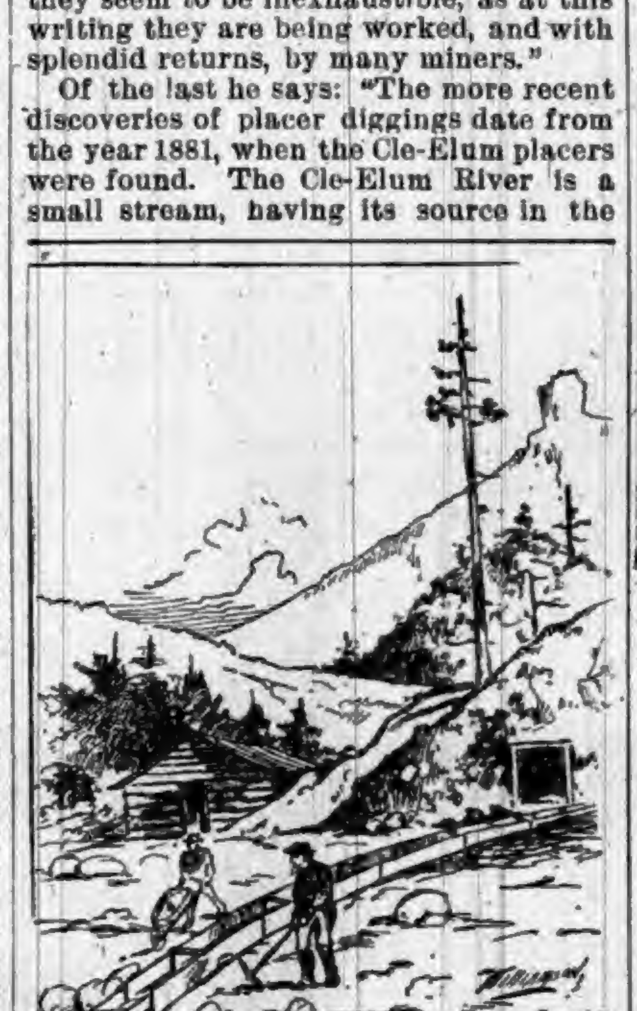
The presence of large quantities of the red hematite ore greatly simplifies the process of reducing the other iron ores, because the introduction of a proper proportion of red hematite into a mass of the other ores causes the whole to reduce one-third quicker than if smelted without mixing. Alongside these iron mountains are immense deposits of high-grade coking coal, and limestone of remarkable strength and purity, which makes the finest of fluxing lime.

The gold fields about Ellensburgh are the famous Sauk, Cle-Elum and Peschastin districts, in Kittitass County.

Concerning the first and second beds the State Geologist reports: "This discovery was made in the spring of 1874 by Ben Goodwin, an old-time California miner, and a prospector who, in search of hidden treasures, had traversed the whole of Oregon and Idaho, and then came into Washington and what is now Kittitas County. Reaching the Swauk, I am told, Goodwin lost his bearings, and camping, proceeded to look about him. As a result of this the prospector found himself the discoverer of what today are the richest placer mines of Washington. Of fabulous richness were those placer mines, and as an evidence of their extent, I may say to this day they are being worked with rich results. Nuggets valued at as high as $400 have as recently as the past season been extracted from these placers. And to old Ben Goodwin must be given the credit for having first found the State's richest seat of surface deposits of gold.

"It was nearly three years after the discovery of the Swauk placers that C. P. Culver, a pioneer prospector, en route to the Columbia River and the South, found paying placer diggings on the banks of the Peschastin creek, a lively stream emptying itself into the Wenatchie River, which in turn terminates with a jointure with the Columbia River. This creek is in what is now Kittitass County. Like the Swauk, the Peschastin placers proved fabulously rich, and were worked by hundreds of miners, thousands of dollars being extracted from them. Like the Swauk deposits, they seem to be inexhaustible, as at this writing they are being worked, and with splendid returns, by many miners."

Of the last he says: "The more recent discoveries of placer diggings date from the year 1881, when the Cle-Elum placers were found. The Cle-Elum River is a small stream, having its source in the Cascade Mountains in Kittitass County, and emptying into the Yakima River near the prosperous little town of Cle-Elum. There was a rush of miners to the new-found field. There is no possible method by which the output of the Cle-Elum placers can be even approximated with anything like accuracy. I know the fact to be that the Cle-Elum placers are still being worked by a number of miners, and with substantial results."



PLACER MINING.

There are extensive quartz mines in the Peschastin district, and the first stamp mill in Washington was erected and is now operated here. The Donahue mine in the Peschastin crushed its quartz in old-fashioned arrastres, at a loss of 60 per cent. of the metal, and then secured $17,000 worth of gold last season.

The annual output of the Swauk, Cle-Elum, and Peschastin districts is over $100,000.

MAYFLOWER.

POISON IN ICE CREAM.

How Fatally Toxic Matter Is Developed in That Frigid Sweet.

There is much food for reflection in the suggestion made by Dr. George S. Hull in the Medical News that the modern ice cream freezer, when filled with cream, is in reality a galvanic cell or battery. The cream, especially if saline, or if mixed with fruits, eggs, etc., becomes the corrosive electrolyte, and the zinc and tin, zinc and copper, or any other two metals of the paddles and freezer, become the positive and negative elements of the battery. Dr. Hull has by experiment proved that an electrical action takes place in freezing under such circumstances, and, if electrical action, then of course chemical action, resulting in the introduction into cream of highly poisonous salts of copper or of zinc. The News contains also the reports of Drs. Mitchell and Hyndman of Cincinnati, and the discussion in the Cincinnati Academy of Medicine concerning the terrible Snook-Herr poisoning cases that occurred near Louisville about two months ago. Our readers may remember that some sixty wedding guests were poisoned, the bridegroom and several others fatally. The cause of the poisoning still remains a profound mystery. The editor of the Medical News throws out the suggestion that Dr. Hull's experiments and theory may possibly lead to an explanation of the strange facts. The ingenious suggestion is also made by the editor that of two persons eating cream from the same freezer one may be killed by the poison in the cream and the other unharmed, by reason of the fact that the stiff and pasty cream would not permit thorough mixture and dissemination of the poison throughout the whole mass except after prolonged stirring and mixing. Dr. Hull's theory presupposes that the toxic matter is thrown off into the cream when it stands over night or for a number of hours in connection with the two metals in the freezer. The conclusions of Dr. Hull's study are thus summarized:

"1. If we desire the smallest quantity of metallic poison in our ice cream and still keep in use our modern freezer we should see that the ingredients are pure, that the mixture is frozen quickly and the paddle at once removed.

"2. The quantity of poisonous salts is increased by acid mixtures, especially by the addition of eggs, cornstarch, etc. The addition of salt for flavoring purposes, as made by some manufacturers, becomes criminal, and it is grossly careless to allow any of the salt water from the outside to get into the can. If, as a result of fermentation, ice cream should contain tyrotoxicon then it must be acid, and, on this account, will dissolve still more zinc or copper.

"The quantity of metal dissolved depends upon the length of time the paddle is left in the can, or, if the can has a zinc-coated bottom and tin sides, the length of time the cream remains in it, or the amount of electrical action will again vary if the can be copper, coated with tin, and the tin be worn off so as to expose the copper, thus producing local currents that dissolve the copper."

Glad to See Them.

"One of the early Governors of a certain Western State," writes a correspondent, "was a man of great popularity, commanding strength of character, and undisputed fitness for the duties of his office, but entirely without any gift for public speaking. Shortly after his election he paid an official visit to the State prison, in the course of which he was ushered into the chapel where the convicts were assembled in a body.

"Before the Governor could realize what was going on, the chaplain had presented him to the company, with the remark that he would doubtless have something to say.

"'But, my dear sir,' whispered the startled Governor, 'I haven't anything to say, and I couldn't say it if I had! I never made a speech in my life.'

"The chaplain, who was entirely innocent in the matter, could only reply:

"'I beg your Excellency's pardon for being so premature, but as I have committed you so decidedly I see no way out of it, and feel confident that you will not mind addressing them in a few words.'

"The Governor certainly was committed, and, though he was literally trembling, he began:

"'Ladies and gentlemen!—No, no, I don't mean that—gentlemen and fellow-citizens!—no, I don't exactly mean that, either—but—but—well, men and fellow-prisoners, I can't make a speech; I—I don't know how to make a speech; I couldn't make a speech to save your souls, or—or—or even my own! and so—so—well, about all I can say is, that—that I'm very glad to see so many of you here!'"

In Germany experiments have recently been made with small locomotives for towing boats on canals. Instead, however, of attaching the rope to the locomotive it is attached to a heavy towing car, which is drawn by the locomotive. The plan is said to be satisfactory.

It is stated that the railroads of the United States lose $2,000,000 yearly from landslides, $5,000,000 by floods, $1,000,000 by fire, and $9,000,000 by collisions.

Hard drinkers have no antipathy to the whisky trust. It is the whisky "no trust" they want abolished.

A Sign of Progress.

It may be asked of those whose habit it is to extol the past at the expense of the present, whether some progress has not been made in teaching men to be merciful not only to their fellows but also to the lower animals. A couple of centuries ago—the very heyday of the good old times—it seems hardly to have dawned on men's minds that the sufferings of brutes were worth of serious consideration. Great scandal was caused when, in 1722, the Rev. James Granger (the eponymous founder of the school of Grangerities) preached a sermon against cruelty to animals, and printed it under the title of "Apology for the Brute Creation, or Abuse of Animals Censured." His parishioners were indignant, and it is recorded that the mention of horses and dogs was resented as a prostitution of the pulpit, and was thought to be a proof of the excellent man's insanity. All honor to Mr. Granger, and grateful honor to the men and women who work so deligently now to carry on the work he so well begun. There is plenty left for us to do. Many cruel practices have been put down by law, and there prevails among most people such a degree of tender mercy towards their speechless fellow-creatures as would make Mr. Granger's parishoners rub their eyes and wonder what kind of finikin folk we had become. But from time to time one gets a painful reminder that men are born cruel, and that mercy is a matter of education. Many a fair day is darkened by one witnessing a cruel act. Such was one of the first bright mornings of the present laggard spring. On a common near London a couple of clowns were intently watching some object on the grass. Four or five decently dressed people had been attracted to look on, and the curiosity of one passing have been excited, he also joined the group, only to witness a piece of brutality the recollection of which haunted him for many days. A lizard, than which there is no more shapely or harmless creature (with a pedigree, moreover, that puts to shame the proudest human families, for it is the heir of the mighty saurians of Pleiocene times), had come out to bask in the welcome sun. These trousered monsters had caught it and cut it in two, in order to watch the movements of the mutilated parts, and laughed (Lord! is there anything so cruel as laughter?) as the head and tail moved in different directions.—Blackwood.

The Lorgnette.

"I understand," said the Growler, "that the lorgnette is going out of fashion, and I am delighted if the rumor is true. There is nothing in this world that can turn a sweet little woman into a supercilious snob so easily as the lorgnette. They make me feel uncomfortable wherever I see them. When I see a woman looking at me through the lorgnette I feel as if my clothes were nine or ten sizes too large for me; I experience the sensation which I imagine the victim of a hypnotist feels when the eye of the master is fixed upon him. The lorgnette is a success only as a discourager of mashers, and is, so far, to be commended; but when it tackles self-respecting manhood and makes him dwindle, it becomes little short of criminal, and should be suppressed by fashion if not by law."—New York Sun.

The Tortures of the Inquisition

Inflicted by the dread Torquemada have abominable prototypes in the shape of chronic rheumatism and neuralgia. Attack these agonizing complaints before they reach the chronic stage with the superb blood depurent, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will assuredly expel their virus from the life stream. To procrastinate is to encourage the growth of incipient rheumatism, which rapidly tightens its grip upon the system. It is the very octopus of diseases, and painful indeed is the clasp of its dreadful tentacles. Be prompt, therefore, take time by the forelock, always remembering that both rheumatism and gout, close relatives, are dangerous as well as painful. Debility, chills and fever, billious remittent, dyspepsia, constipation and kidney disease succumb to the Bitters. Appetite and the ability to sleep well are also improved by it.

Better Than Azure Blood.

Pater—So you don't like Mr. Fahrweste?

Impure blood is the primary cause of the majority of diseases to which the human family is subject. The blood in passing through the system visits every portion of the body—if pure, carrying strength and vitality; if impure, disease and death. Blood poisoning is most dangerous. The Charm of the Cuckoo.

The habits and mannerisms of the cuckoo have been more acutely observed than perhaps those of any other bird. For thousands of years naturalists have been trying to understand and explain its mysterious ways, but have not fully succeeded.

There yet remain many impenetrable and seemingly never to be understood mysteries connected with it. Enough about it has, however, been found out to prove that it is the bird of the strangest habits known.

A native of this continent can hardly realize the charm of the notes of the cuckoo. From a musical point of view there is not much in them, but the name of the bird is evidently onomatopoetic; that is formed from the sounds emitted by it, and this name is the same, or nearly the same, in the languages of all the countries it frequents.

The Skewer.

The skewer was formerly used as a kind of tally-stick, and it continues to find similar employment at Lyons, where the butchers rarely fail to stick in the middle of a piece of meat a small wooden cylinder announcing by so many notches what every housewife knows to be the exact weight of the meat.

Animals of the Ancients.

Among the earliest of domesticated animals are the ox, sheep and swine. Most people suppose these animals to have been servants of man from time immemorial. They have read of the sacred cattle of ancient Egypt, where the bull was one of the chief sacred symbols of deity, far back in the days of the earliest pyramid builders. They have read of the oxen of Greece and Rome, and how the Roman senate voted to brave Horatius from the public corn lands, as a reward for his heroic defense of the bridge over the Tiber, "as much as two strong oxen could plow from morn till night." And they have read in the early books of the Bible how Moses commanded that "thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn," and of how the ox and the ass were unequally yoked together.

Everybody knows, too, that the sheep is FAMILIAR IN THE EARLIEST BIBLE RECORDS. Abel tended his flocks and sacrificed a lamb before he was slain by his brother Cain. When Abraham went to sacrifice his son, he saw a ram caught by the horns in a thicket. "Jake played his father-in-law for a sucker in the increase of the flocks story," as the irreverent commercial traveler stated it when he was unexpectedly called upon to address a Sunday school.

The history of the hog is not so familiar. But the fact that the law of Moses prohibited the eating of pork by the Israelities is proof that the hog was a common article of food amid surrounding nations. Homer describes Ulyses as eating pork, and names one of his most faithful friends as a hog drover or keeper, away back in the earliest dawn of Greek nationality. The hog, as a domestic animal, is mentioned in other bibles of other religions, older than those of the Hebrews.

But these most ancient writings and traditions are only tales of yesterday,

SO IMMENSELY OLD IS THE HUMAN RACE.

In the records of science, as in the eye of deity, ten thousand years are but as a day, and a thousand years as an hour that is past. Geologists and biologists have found indisputable proofs that these animals were hunted and eaten by man for ages before they were domesticated. The charred, broken and gnawed bones of roasts from the horse, the ox, the hog and the sheep are found in caves and holes inhabited by prehistoric man in all countries, alike in those where civilization first dawned as in those where it appeared centuries on centuries later. Remains found where there were evidently prehistoric villages nobody knows how long before man began to become civilized—so long ago that their sites are now dug from beneath the everlasting hills, or are pierced by the well borer in the Egyptian desert 60 to 100 feet below the present level of the sand—show that man hunted and ate these animals in fact before the great ice age sent its gigantic glaciers over Europe and America to plow out the present shape of the continents and create the world as we now know it, while yet the great desert of Sahara was a foaming sea, and possibly while yet the horse, the ox, the hog and the sheep had three toes on each foot!

IN THE DAYS OF THE MASTODON AND MAMMOTH,

It is a fact also that, even down to this day, these animals are hunted and eaten in their wild state, and are not yet domesticated by the most primitive savage races. And until quite a recent date they were so treated nearly all over Europe. During the early Roman empire, and even up to past the time of Julius Cæsar, wild horses were hunted and eaten in parts of northern Europe. Wild hogs are even yet hunted in Europe, the wild boar being the noblest prey of the sportsman. The wild ox, down to a period later than the days of Wallace and Bruce, was the fiercest and most dangerous game of Scotland. The wild sheep, where it still lingers, is exceedingly shy, cunning and swift, and a desperate fighter upon occasion, quite different from the familiar type of innocence of our farms. It haunts the upland plains and inaccessible mountains, and braves the fiercest extremes of climate with wonderful hardihood and self-reliant energy.

HOW DIFFERENT YET HOW LIKE

are these wild animals and their tame descendants. Domestication has made them mild and tractable in disposition, and added to their strength and size. Yet, after thousands of years of cultivation by man, it is a curious fact that the animals have not changed in type, but have actually approached still nearer the true type of each. Place the wild horse, ox, sheep and swine beside their tame brethren, and how unmistakably they are the same animals. The best tame specimen is beyond question nearer the true type intended by nature than the best wild one. This is not so strange, after all. Man has bred the horse all these centuries not to change him to something else, but to make him still more perfectly a horse. Hence he is a more perfect horse, and nearer what may be deemed nature's ideal horse, of which her wild horse is only the prophecy. And so, also, of the domestic ox, sheep and swine, the nearest to the perfect figure is found in the tame and not in the wild.

A Monster Aerolite.

In May, 1888, the National museum of Brazil came into final possession of one of the largest meteorites or aerolites that was ever known to fall upon either section of the American continents. The noble specimen weighs 11,800 pounds and originally laid imbedded in the ground near Bendego creek, in one of the most inaccessible portions of Brazil. The cost of transporting it from the place where it first struck American soil was defrayed by Baron Greahy. The survey of the route and preliminary arrangements occupied three months; its journey to the capital commenced Nov. 25, 1887, and it was nearly five months later before it was finally landed at the little railroad depot in the wilderness from whence it was transported to Rio Janeiro.

During the four months in which it was being pulled, pushed and rolled by man and mule power through the trackless forests, over steep mountains and sandy wastes, it crossed over one hundred streams of all sizes, was taken over one mountain chain 8,700 feet in height, besides many smaller elevations. All of this in a region where the best roads are only mule paths. A better idea of the difficulties these scientists encountered in securing their prize may be had from a knowledge of the fact that a total of 172 days was consumed in moving it from Bendego creek to the railway station, a distance of only 71¼ miles. The pluck and energy exhibited by these gentlemen in moving this gigantic airstone to their national museum is a curious commentary on the scientific ideas of the early part of the century, which denied the existence of such bodies as aerolites.—St. Louis Republic.

THE INSTITUTE.

A fine gathering of DeKalb's Teachers and Their Instructors.

The Institute was called to order Monday forenoon at 10 o'clock, by Supt. C. M. Merica, after which Marshall Hadsell led the institute in a song entitled, "Praise the Lord."

Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. George Wade Healy, of the Presbyterian church.

Mr. Hadsell again led in song, after which the roll was called to which eighty-two responded. Superintendent then addressed the institute very briefly concerning the arrangements for the week and what would be expected of the teachers. In behalf of the manager, an invitation was extended to all teachers to visit the Reading Room.

The first talk was given by Prof. Bassett, of DePauw University. The professor made a few preliminary remarks before he began his subject proper, in which he spoke of his pleasure in meeting the teachers of DeKalb county. His subject was, "School Management." The first thought given to the young teacher was concerning health. Good health considered the first requisite of a teacher.

Mr. Bassett then spoke of preparation. The teacher should have a thorough knowledge of the branches he is to teach. The teacher should know that education is a growth. He should not get in the child's way, so that it cannot grow. Another thought given, was, teaching as a profession. A person should not begin teaching unless he feels that he is called.

The last thought in the talk related to recommends. A teacher should not send recommends to school officials, but should present himself in person. They want to see him and talk to him.

Next was a talk on Educational Psychology by Miss Tarney. She, with her rich, mellow voice, captured her audience and made her very difficult subject as entertaining as a novel. She spoke of her work for the week, and with great earnestness began the first part of it—"The Nature of Mind." There are two views concerning mind. The materialistic and the spiritualistic. The former view is that the brain is the mind, and thought, a product. The latter view has it that the mind is an essence and acts through the brain independently.

Her reasoning in favor of the spiritualistic side of the question was irresistible. She chose that view, because, by following its teachings more good could be developed in the child.

The lawyer and doctor study Psychology relative to their work, but that studied by the teacher is different from any other. The teacher must study the child to present such conditions as will cause the child to become a better thinker; to grow most. Make children good by growth.

In the afternoon, at 1:35 o'clock, Dr. Bassett, in handling the subject of hygiene said: "It is only recently that people have seen the importance of taking care of the body for its own sake. But not only should the body be cared for, merely for its sake, but because it is a dwelling place of the soul—a temple in which God may dwell, and because its condition will certainly influence the spiritual man. A strong, robust body is often essential to a strong mind, it being hardly possible to find a good mind without a comparatively perfect machine through which it can act. In teaching hygiene, the teacher should see as the result of his work, not that the pupil should be able to recite the laws of the science, but that they practice them. One of the best methods of presenting the subject is for the teacher to practice what he teaches."

At 2:35, Miss Tarney took up her work on General Methods. She said this work was to be entirely physiological, and laid the plan of her work for the week. She remarked that method is always the same if we only can find it. You cannot patent a method; work out your own plans. She gave the teachers many valuable ideas on "The Practical Man," saying that "The practical man is never so practical as when he is theoretical." That "Method is what is thought, not what is done." The first thing for the teacher to know is the subject matter, then he can discover how the pupil thinks. She made very clear the difference between "concept of content" and "concept of extent." Memory is what the child first uses in conception. Memory is not bringing things up (as out of a well) or drawing things out (as of a pigeon hole) but a power to think the same thing again.

At 3:15, Dr. Bassett continued his talk on hygiene. He spoke briefly of the importance of taking sufficient sleep, and the manner of the "Modern Dress," and deleterious effects.

In order to have a strong mind there must be a strong body. The school room should be well ventilated and well lighted. The intellectual and moral growth depends largely upon the physical growth. A large play-ground should be provided for this physical growth, and the teachers urged to participate.

At 4:15, Miss Tarney continued her work on General Methods and Psychology. To have a knowledge of words, we must have ideas, and think and know that the words stand for ideas. She explained the great difference between methods and devices, showing that the method always remains the same although the devices differ for different children. In the first stage of knowledge the child thinks and deals with particulars. When the particular ideas are present they are acquired by sense of perception, and when absent, by memory and imagination. In the second stage, he deals with the common, and in the third, with the philosophical. He must have such a knowledge as will make him a rational being, able to work out his own definitions. He must be able to see what is common in all things of a particular class, and be able to give ground for his reasoning.

A Mystery Explained.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, tramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced; usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and fine book, containing many marvelous cures, free at F. E. Height of Cruelty.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the pictures of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty. They have a weak heart, causing shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppresions, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is just the thing for them. For their nervousness, headache, weakness, etc., his Restorative Nervine is unequaled. AUBURN AND VICINITY.

There were in 1853, 31 school houses in DeKalb county, nine of these, mostly of logs were in Concord township. The others were classified as "bad," "poor" and "very poor" and the language scarcely gives an idea. As late as 1876 but few of the old log houses were standing and none were in use. They had had their day. Prof. Barns in a centennial article on education, published in the Waterloo Press, illustrates progress in school architecture as follows: "In one district in Butler township, may be seen within a few rods of one another, the three representative school houses of the county. On the east side of the Ft. Wayne wagon road, is the old log house, on the west side of the road is the old frame house that succeeded it, and a few feet west of the latter stands the new brick school houses erected in 1875. This last is one of the finest district school buildings in the county, and together with its companions makes an interesting reminder of the three civilizations of a new country."

On July 19, notice was given for a school meeting to be held on August 9, at 4 p. m. for the purpose of voting on building a school house. Whether Auburn's tax payers felt too poor or were indifferent, the effort proved a failure and no meeting was held.

The immediate need of the town was supplied by renting the log cabin of O. C. Houghton for three months for the sum of $2.00 and Messrs Berry and Houghton were employed to fit up the building for school use.

The old frame in the north end was still considered serviceable. The furnishing of fuel for the schools was left to Mr. Berry, who contracted with Jonathan Hall for eight cords of wood at one dollar a cord.

At a special meeting held Nov, 29, it was decided to have two free schools in Auburn and the places were decided upon as above recited. Any deficit that might arise in payment of teachers' salaries over and above the public funds apportioned per capita was to be paid from the proceeds of a tuition tax.

Teachers were very scarce. The wages did not pay and did not attract teachers from other states. Wages ran over the county from $6.00 to $60, a month. The average was $18 per month to male and $10, for female teachers.

The organization of every town and township into school districts greatly increased the demand for teachers. Few applicants for license could pass any examination. There were localities where no grade could be established and examination is remembered by the comparitively few well qualified teachers, as a farce.

W. C. Larrabee, State Superintendent of Public Instruction found here a serious difficulty. The law required him to appoint deputies in each county to examine applicants for license and those found qualified were granted license for one or two years, but no standard of qualification was made.

The knowledge requisite to teach was left to the examiner who exercised discretion in selecting the higher grades of applicants to teach in the more advanced schools leaving the more backward to do as best they could.

The legislature of 1853 amended this law and transferred the authority to appoint examiners to the county commissioners and at the same time erected a standard of qualification.

It was thought that should an examiner license only such as should pass in all branches, less than half of the schools would be supplied with teachers; hence examination in some branches was omited.

The board of examiners of DeKalb county for 1853 was composed of E. W. Fosdick, S. W. Dickinson and L. D. Britton. These gentlemen were themselves fully qualified to judge the merits of applicants for license and Messrs Fosdick and Britton were strong and able supporters of public measures for the perfection of the school system in senate and assembly to which they were respectively sent by franchise of the people.

Mr. Britton died a year or so since on his farm in Richland township, a well-to-do, honored and esteemed citizen of this county.

Mr. Fosdick resides in Butler and has the confidence and unbounded respect of his townsmen.

THE INSTITUTE.

A fine gathering of DeKalb's Teachers and Their Instructors.

TUESDAY.

Institute called to order promptly on time. In the absence of Mr. Merica, Dr. Bassett took charge of the institute which opened with a song, after which Dr. Bassett conducted the devotional exercises with scriptural reading and prayer. After the closing of the opening exercises, Supt. Merica introduced Mrs Leiter to the institute, who gave a short talk.

She had been acquainted with all school work from country to principalship of high school. "She said it required four years of hard labor to secure compulsory education. Woman is of such a nature that she does not know when she is whipped. Indiana must and will have this law in spite of every thing. You go to any of our High Schools of to-day, and you will find that the classes are composed largely of girls.

Temperance teaching in the High School will affect the girls more than the boys, because more girls attend the High School."

She then gave some rules for standing. God never intended that man should stand or walk as he does. She then gave rules to stimulate circulation, and dwelt on the necessity of physical culture among girls, and the observance of simple physical exercises. Introductions of her books.

Miss Tarney took the work on psychology and spoke of the value of a knowledge of educational psychology, and that mind is something different from brain, and that each individual has the power of knowing himself.

Individuals are able to know what they are and what they are not. The general characteristic of mind, is that it originates its own activity.

At 11:15, Bassett resumed his work on school management, and teacher's contract with trustee, the contract being a mutual agreement between them.

He sproke also of the necessity of the teacher knowing the exact standing of each pupil, previous to the opening of the school, at the beginning of the term or year. A person cannot succeed unless he expects to succeed.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

Afternoon exercise opened at 1:30 by singing. Miss Tarney; Primary Reading. Defined as where the child is just beginning to read or words and not sentences.

Look after the thought not the name. Has changed her mind upon reading. Has no "cut and dried" methods. See what the instructor means and then think it through for yourselves. Alphabet method discussed with all its seeming foolishness.. Illustrates that the mother teaches her child by word. Webb's method referred to. How do we know buildings? by parts? or wholes? Various illustrations adduced. So teach reading by whol es and then analyze.

The rose is red. Think the whole "rose" first then predicate one thing at a time.

What is the tendency of children to analyze or synthesize.

Two methods of word teaching, sentence and word.

Either founded upon the same principle, both founded upon nature.

Objection to sentence method is that it is a more complex whole than the word.

The injury done by alphabetic method incalculable. Time lost, wrong tendency, etc.

Method of word teaching illustrated by a list of word. Emphasizes the necessity of getting ready before hand. Words may be selected from readers in use. Names, adjectives, verbs and later prepositions, etc.

Pupil must think: 1st, idea; 2nd, word; 3rd, association.

Have a variety of illustrations to teach that the word has a general meaning.

Next substitute pictures for objects when the latter cannot be used. Use the printed rather than oral word.

"The tory rode though the holy city on a bony pony singing a solo." C. M. Merica.

Child's reading without having any meaning.

You help the children too much. Be careful about that, let him use his own powers. Use the letters cut from paste board rather than teach printing. Teach script first.

After the idea, the whole, then teach the parts. Teach the letters represent sounds but not names of letters. Find no use for diacritical marks but rather the rules of English in regard to sounds as shown by the relation of letters,

Commencing at 2:50 p. m. Dr. Bassett again entertained the institute with one of his interesting talks, and this time on "The purpose of teaching arithmetic in the school." By illustration he showed that the only object of pupil in solving arithmetical problems should not be getting an answer, as solving problems from that motive alone does not aid him in gaining a knowledge of arithmetic, He first took the studies as taken by most of the schools and used the following diagram in which we have Prof. Payne's idea where arithmetic should fall;

Utility: Principle of arithmetic, reading, writing, spelling, language, civics, hygiene;

Culture: Geography, history, literature;

Discipline: Grammar, arithmetic.

Then he gave the purpose of teaching arithmetic, that of cultivating the habit of thinking, the value of having pupils, in all their work, to be accurate, neat and systemetic, and pupils should be careful and say just what they mean.

He spoke concerning fractions. First he gave the way he would teach multiplication of fractions, (a fraction multiplied by an integer,) and his illustrations were very easy to understand and would aid the pupils in the knowledge of the subject. He then urged the necessity of not taking the pupils over the ground too hastily. Never pass over any subject until your pupils know it thoroughly.

Miss Tarney's second talk Tuesday afternoon on methods of teaching at 3:30 p. m. Many are not using diacritical markings correctly, teaching one thing and doing another.

Diacritical marks never determine the sound of letters but the sound determinnes the diacritical marks.

C in cat has its sound because placed before the a, a its sound because placed before the t, in general, position gives sound of letter.

Teach the pupil in first primary work the sound of a letter in given position and from this he can pronounce more difficult words without help.

We all have a purpose in coming to the institute. Longfellow had a purpose when he wrote Evangeline. Selection and decision of a purpose has in it the means of effecting a purpose. Merchants when they advertise have a purpose in view and that purpose is to induce people to go there and buy.

Patrick Henry's purpose in delivering his famous oration was not to teach the people new facts, but for them to do some thing.

The purposes of all selections are three, viz.: That they, the people may learn more, that they have a better idea of the beautiful, to induce them to do something. Closed at 4 p. m.

Resolutions.

The teachers of DeKalb county in institute assembled do hereby adopt the following resolutions:

RESOLVED: That we extend our thanks to the chorus classes and choir of Auburn, and the good people of Garrett, who furnished us with such excellent music.

RESOLVED: That we heartily thank the people of Auburn for the opening of their homes to us and for the support they have given during the session of this institute.

RESOLVED: That we thank Messrs Moore & Merica for the use of the piano.

RESOLVED: That we tender our sincerest thanks to Dr. Bassett and Miss Tarney for the most excellent instruction imparted to us.

RESOLVED: That we most heartily concur with Dr. Bassett in the sincere belief that no teacher should use tobacco in any form and that we most heartily thank the Doctor for the very strong and fearless manner in which he condemned the useless habit by the teacher.

RESOLVED: That we favor the enactment of a law by the General Assembly making the teaching of scientific temperance compulsory.

RESOLVED: That we as teachers, seeing the good results to be reached by the children of the county in taking the Young People's Reading Circle, pledge our earnest and careful effort in enlisting all in this work.

RESOLVED: That feeling the need of a broader culture among the teaching profession, we indorse the spirit and intent of the Indiana Teachers' Reading Circle and feel that every teacher in the county (especially if he is not pursuing some other good course of reading,) should enter heartily into the work.

RESOLVED: That we indorse the plan proposed by S. S. Harell, one of the commissioners of the world's fair, for raising funds for the educational display of our state.

RESOLVED: That we express our highest appreciation of Superintendent Merica's profound interest manifested in the progress and advancement of our schools and that we pledge our earnest co-operation in the educational advancement of our county.

The Cosmopolitan.

The Cosmopolitan for August is the best number of that excellent magazine that has come to our table. It is brim full of good articles—such articles as people desire, and will always read. There are stories of a high order and historical papers of intense interest. "Placer Mining" is a valuable paper on an interesting subject giving many facts about this strange and exciting industry, that few people ever knew. "Gambling in High Life," by the well known Adam Radeau, is of course an appropriate article just now, to follow up the public interest felt in the recent scandals about the Prince of Wales. "John Hopkins University" is of vital interest to every educator who has watched the development so far of that great institution. "Pictorial Journalism," treats of the recent development and growth of the cheap illustrations that now form so striking a feature of our daily papers, and even of the more enterprising weeklies. Then there is a fine article on that most interesting locality in England, known as "The Dukeries," and an illustrated article on "The Court Jesters of England." Indeed, the other articles are finely illustrated, especially the one with the famous portraits of Prince Bismarck. The Cosmopolitan is the coming magazine.

ALL RELATING TO PEOPLE AND THINGS IN THE WORLD.

An Entire Family Poisoned—No Revolution in Mexico—A Murder Case Ends in a Farce—Severe Storms in Nova Scotia—Slaves to Mexico.

POISON IN FOOD.

An Entire Family in Bellville, Kansas, Poisoned at the Dinner Table.

A special from Bellville, Kan., says: Nine people of this place are at the point of death as a result of having partaken of poison in food, served at dinner at the house of George Gregg. Mr. Gregg returned from Iowa last week where he had gone to bring home his wife and children who had been visiting there. A young lady, a relative, whose name has not yet been learned, accompanied Mrs. Gregg. Thursday, Ira Johnson, a neighbor, called and accepted an invitation to dinner. Eight persons sat down to the table, Mr. and Mrs. Gregg, four children, the visiting relative and Ira Johnson. Soon after dinner they all became violently ill, exhibiting all symptoms of poisoning. Shortly afterward a servant, who had in the meantime eaten dinner, also became ill, showing the same symptoms. Since then all have become steadily worse and the recovery of none of the victims is expected. What the nature of the poisoning was, or how it was administered, are questions that remain to be answered. Mr. Gregg and his family are highly respected in the community, and it is probable the poisoning was accidental. There are those, however, who believe it was deliberately planned with criminal intent, but nothing has developed to sustain their suspicions.

A Light Sentence.

The trial of Elijah Holland and wife, both colored; Andrew Pickering, a white man and his wife, colored, and Dr. Cassins Minser was concluded in the Circuit Court at Decatur, Ind. The defendants were severally charged with mal-practice in that an abortion was produced on Miss Daisy Reynolds, of Willshire, Ohio, which caused her death. Dr. Minser was acquitted, Holland was found guilty and sentenced to the penitentiary for three years. The cases against Mrs. Holland and Andrew Pickering were dismissed. It was against these persons that such strong prejudice existed at the time of their arrest last May, and whose threatened lynching was averted by the State militia's guarding the jail. When the verdict was announced Dr. Minser evinced great nervousness and the opinion is that he is threatened with mental dethronement.

Slaves to Mexico.

San Francisco special: The brig Tahiti, which put into Drake's Bay, ten miles from here, to repair, has on board 300 natives of Gilbert Island, who are being taken to Mexico to work on the coffee plantations. The captain of the Tahiti claims that the natives have contracts by which the Mexican Government agrees to return them to their homes at the expiration of their terms of service, but this is denied by Mexican Consul Coney. Collector Phelps believes that the men on board the brig are virtually being carried into slavery, and will send officers to Drake's Bay to investigate the matter.

Secretary Proctor Accepts.

Secretary Proctor has written a letter to Gov. Page, of Vermont, accepting the appointment of United States Senator to succeed Edmunds. It is not known when he will relinquish his duties as Secretary of War, but he will doubtless give the President ample opportunity to find a successor for the portfolio. Secretary Proctor's action, taken in connection with the rumors regarding him, give rise to the belief in some minds that a general reorganization of the Cabinet may follow.

Severe Storm in Nova Scotia.

A furious southeast hurricane, with vivid lightning and torrents of rain, raged at Halifax, N. S., for three-quarters of an hour. The shute and part of the staging connecting the grain elevator with the deep water wharves were blown down. The Fife built yacht Yola, one of the fastest boats belonging to the Royal Nova Scotia Yacht Squadron, and the schooner Yacht Wenao, owned by Commodore Edwards, were totally wrecked.

No Revolution in Mexico.

City of Mexico special: The sensational news recently published concerning a forthcoming revolution in this country is not only utterly false but idiotic and reflects small credit on the editors of papers that originated the foolish reports. Mexico is no more likely, under ordinary existing circumstances, to be plunged into a revolution than the United States.

The Dane Opens His Gate for the American Hog.

Copenhagen special: The United States Minister, Clark E. Carr, has received notice of the removal of the prohibitions placed on the importations of American pork into Denmark, and enforced since March, 1888. The authorities state that only inspected American pork will henceforth be admitted into Denmark.

Hanged Himself.

Joseph Dilhorn, a highly respected citizen, living two miles south of New Castle, Ind., committed suicide by hanging. The family consisted of Dilhorn and three children. His wife died about a year ago. His mind has been unbalanced since her death.

100 Miles an Hour.

Master Mechanic Jackson Richards, of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, has designed a new locomotive which, he claims, will make 100 miles an hour.

The Itata Case Discontinued.

By order of the President, Attorney General Miller has sent instructions to the United States Marshal at San Diego, Calif., to discontinue procedure in the case of the United States vs. the steamer Itata. This is one result of success of the Chilian revolution.

No Trouble in Alaska.

San Francisco special: Robert Reed has returned from Chignick Bay, Alaska. He says the reports of trouble with the natives are without foundation. The work at the canneries went along without interruption during the season.

A Horrible Affair.

Kansas City special: Louis Bulling, of St. Joseph, Mo., the wife murderer, before the time for the execution, shot himself in a vain effort to commit suicide. The Sheriff ordered four deputies to carry him to the scaffold and he cursed and swore at them in a horrible manner. The Sheriff told him to stand on the drop. He refused and four deputies held him up. The black cap was placed over his hea and yelling, screaming and blaspheming he shot through the opening. His neck was broken by the fall, and he died almost instantly. The Rev. Lavake has been arrested for giving Bulling a revolver with which he attempted to commit suicide. The minister denies the charge, but says he was on his knees praying when Bulling fired the first shot.

ROAD AGENTS.

Daring but Unsuccessful Attempt to Rob a Los Angeles Express Train—One Man Killed.

San Francisco special: The Los Angeles express was held up by two masked men a few miles south of Modesto, Cal. The robbers boarded the train at Coes and compelled Engineer Neff and Fireman Wallace to extinguish the headlight and fill the boiler with water. They then made them get down and go to the express car and ordered it opened. Conductor Roche and Brakeman Fox were in the front car and they at once went out on the platform and looked out of the east side of the car. At the sight of a conductor's lantern one of the robbers called out for them to go back, firing a shot at them. The conductor set his lantern back and fired two shots at the robbers. The conductor at once went back into the car and sought Detective Len Harris, of Los Angeles, and Detective Lawson, who chanced to be on the train. Harris got out of the west side of the car and walked toward the robbers, who had gone over to that side of the express car. When about two cars lengths from the express car Harris opened fire with a revolver. The robbers returned the fire, firing three shots, all of which took effect, hitting Harris in the neck and over the left eye. Meanwhile t e robbers were compelling Engineer Neff to hold a torch while Fireman Wallace worked at the door. They called several times to the express messenger and his assistant, Charles, to open the door and come up, claiming that they would not hurt them but they refused to open the door. A bomb was exploded against the door, shattering the beams and making an opening large enough for them to enter through, but the shooting by Harris and also shots fired during the affair by Roches and Brakeman Fox evidently scared them off, and they left without securing any treasure. Harris was taken to Merced, where he is dying. As soon as the news of the attempted robbery reached Merced a special train started for the scene, bearing officers and a posse of sixty men, who are now in pursuit. Officers have also started from Tulare, Modesto, Merced and Lathrop.

YEARS IN SOLITARY.

Terrible Tale of Cruelty from Montreal.

Montreal special: An astounding revelation of cruelty at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary came to light when a discharged convict limped into a hotel in this city and taking off his dusty shoe took from it a letter from James Ferry, now serving a seven-year sentence in that institution. Out of the four years he has served this wretched convict has spent, he declares, no less than twenty-four months in the black hole. This punishment cell is a portion of the cellar of the penitentiary, and is so closely shut with iron doors that daylight never reaches the cells in it as long as the convicts are there. The unfortunate prisoner put there is kept on bread and water, being given one regular prison meal every day. He sleeps on straw, and the guard who furnishes him with his scanty food is prohibited from speaking to him. It is perpetual night and unending silence for him. It is the hardest punishment that can be inflicted, and yet this unfortunate man has spent two whole years in this hole, besides being horribly beaten and kicked. The culminating point was reached on August 23. Ferry had been allowed a breath of pure air in the stone yard, when one of the guards came along and ordered him back to the dungeon. Ferry refused to go, and begged for a few minutes more in the daylight. The guard sprang at him and knocked him down with a blow of his club. The other convicts allege that he and three others jumped upon his chest and body. He lay upon the ground stunned and senseless with blood flowing from his mouth and nose, and yet he was dragged by the throat to the stairs and thrown into the black hole, as they state, without medical attendance, although he is now known to have been severely injured internally.

THE AMERICAN HOG.

The Embargo on It Lifted by Germany.

Secretary Rusk has received official notice that the German Government has raised the embargo on American pork. The agreement relative to the admission of pork into Germany was signed at Cape May Point about ten days ago, but at the request of the German Government the fact was withheld from the public press until official action could be taken by the home Government. The agreement not only provide for the admittance of our pork into Germany, but also affords to the United States the same schedule with reference to all farm products as that promulgated by Russia. Secretary Rusk is confident that he will soon be able to extend our market for corn by introducing it into Germany for an article of food in the place of rye, the crop of which in Germany is this year exceedingly short. To this end he has instructed his corn agent, Col. C. J. Murphy, now in Europe, to proceed at once to Berlin and lay the matter before the German Government.

Berlin special: The Reichsgeseleblatt published an order to the effect that the prohibition of the importation of swine, pork and sausages of American origin, shall no longer be enforced when such live pigs or hog products are furnished with official certificates stating that they have been examined in accordance with American regulations and are found free from qualities dangerous to the health. The Chancellor has sent instructions to the proper officials that the order be given immediate effect.

GOLD HILL.

Recent Discoveries Create Great Excitement.

Ouray (Col.) special: Gold Hill is in a state of excitement over some of the indications of that camp. The American Nettie is still sending down her usual quota of gold ore and opening up fresh lodes. Bright Diamond, a Milwaukee company, has encountered a flat or bedded deposit or iron ore eight feet thick, which yields $40 per ton in gold. They have opened it up for eighty feet in width and eighty feet in the mountain and there is now estimated to be over $200,000 in sight. They are sending down ten tons a day to their mill by bucket tramways. This enormous ore body is 150 feet from and probably extends into the Iron Clad Company, which is preparing to reopen its mines. This property has been closed some time, but is now negotiating for the sale of 100,000 shares of treasure stock at 10 cents per share to raise a working capital. These wonderful ore bodies cause the miners to believe Gold Hill to be on the eve of discoveries that will astonish the world.

BANDITS SLAUGHTERED.

Texas Rangers Overtake and Have a Bloody Fight with Them.

Uvalde (Texas) special: The train robbers who were thought to have escaped across the Rio Grande with a sum, said to be $20,000, which they secured from the express car on the Southern Pacific, were met by a body of rangers who had been in pursuit and a battle took place. From reports received thirteen of the robbers and two rangers were killed and several of both sides were wounded. The rangers followed what was thought to be the course pursued by the robbers through the mountain passes, and although they had at several times lost the trail they pulled up on the robbers, and were rewarded by falling in with them. The engagement was short, as the bandits were outnumbered. They held the best position, however, and stood their ground until their dead and wounded was so great that resistance was impossible, and then the remainder fled. It is said that two men only escaped.

Power of the Louisiana Lottery Broken.

J. C. Maynard, the Postoffice Inspector in charge of the New Orleans district, has returned to Washington from New Orleans, where he has completed the work in some twenty-five cases against the President of the Louisiana Lottery Company for violation of the law which prohibits the sending of lottery matter through the mails. Mr. Maynard says the chain of evidence in these cases is complete, and that the lottery company will hardly dispute facts. He thinks the power of the company is broken, and says the business is reduced to such a point that although it advertises a capital prize of $300,000, yet it does not sell more than half of any ticket, so that it is impossible for the capital prize to be drawn.

Refused a Fortune for a Horse.

"Would $200,000 buy Allerton?" was the question put to C. W. William by A. G. Best, of Salt Lake City, at Independence, Mo. "No, sir," was the prompt and decisive reply. It is said Mr. Best was acting for Marcus Daly, of Montana. Mr. Williams has issued an offer to any horse with a record of 2:12 or better to meet Allerton at the October races, offering a purse of $5,000 if Allerton is defeated and allowing the horse $2,500 for expenses with no entrance fees. An answer has been received from Bud Doble stating that Nancy Hanks will not meet Allerton, it being too late in the season.

Fell from the Clouds.

Peoria (Ill.) special: Another aeronaut has fallen into Peoria Lake. This time it was Mme. Kiefer, wife of the man who fell in the lake a week ago. Mme. Kiefer made the ascension under protest, as a strong wind was blowing over the lake. The plucky little woman sailed away and when at the height of 5,000 feet cut her parachute loose and dropped. She had counted on reaching the Tazewell shore but the parachute did not open soon enough and she fell into the lake. The immense crowd on the shore was horrified to see her sink with the big parachute netting over her.

Trouble at Samoa.

Correspondence from Samoa, per steamer Mariposa, says that the country is in a state of great unrest. Mataafa is still at Malico with three or four hundred men and has sent out messengers again to raise a party in his behalf. It is generally understood the Government is only waiting the arrival of an English war ship to make a joint demonstration of the three nations and to punish the natives who refuse to obey Malietoa. Unless some action is taken without delay there probably will be trouble.

Murder and Suicide.

On the Lamb plantation near Vaughans, Miss., Mrs. Mary Coleman, colored, blew out her husband's brains while he was asleep in bed, with a double barreled shot gun. She then left the house taking her little boy, 2 years old, and went to a creek a short distance from the house where she committed the bloody deed, and jumped in the creek with her child and they were both drowned. The woman is supposed to have been insane.

The Bridge Went Down.

At Red River, Ky., the iron bridge of the Kentucky Union Railroad went down with a freight train. J. C. Stall, fireman, was killed and J. V. Stanna, conductor, was fatally injured. The rest of the crew escaped by jumping and swimming.

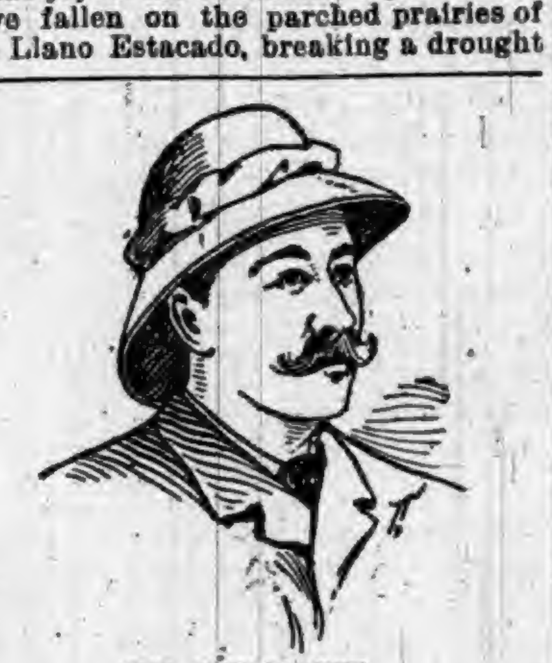
ABOUT RAIN-MAKING.

GEN. DYRENFORTH'S OPERATIONS EXPLAINED.

The Fact That Rain Followed Heavy Cannonading Made a Philosopher and a Patentee of an Army Officer—An Extensive Rainfall Followed the First Experiment.

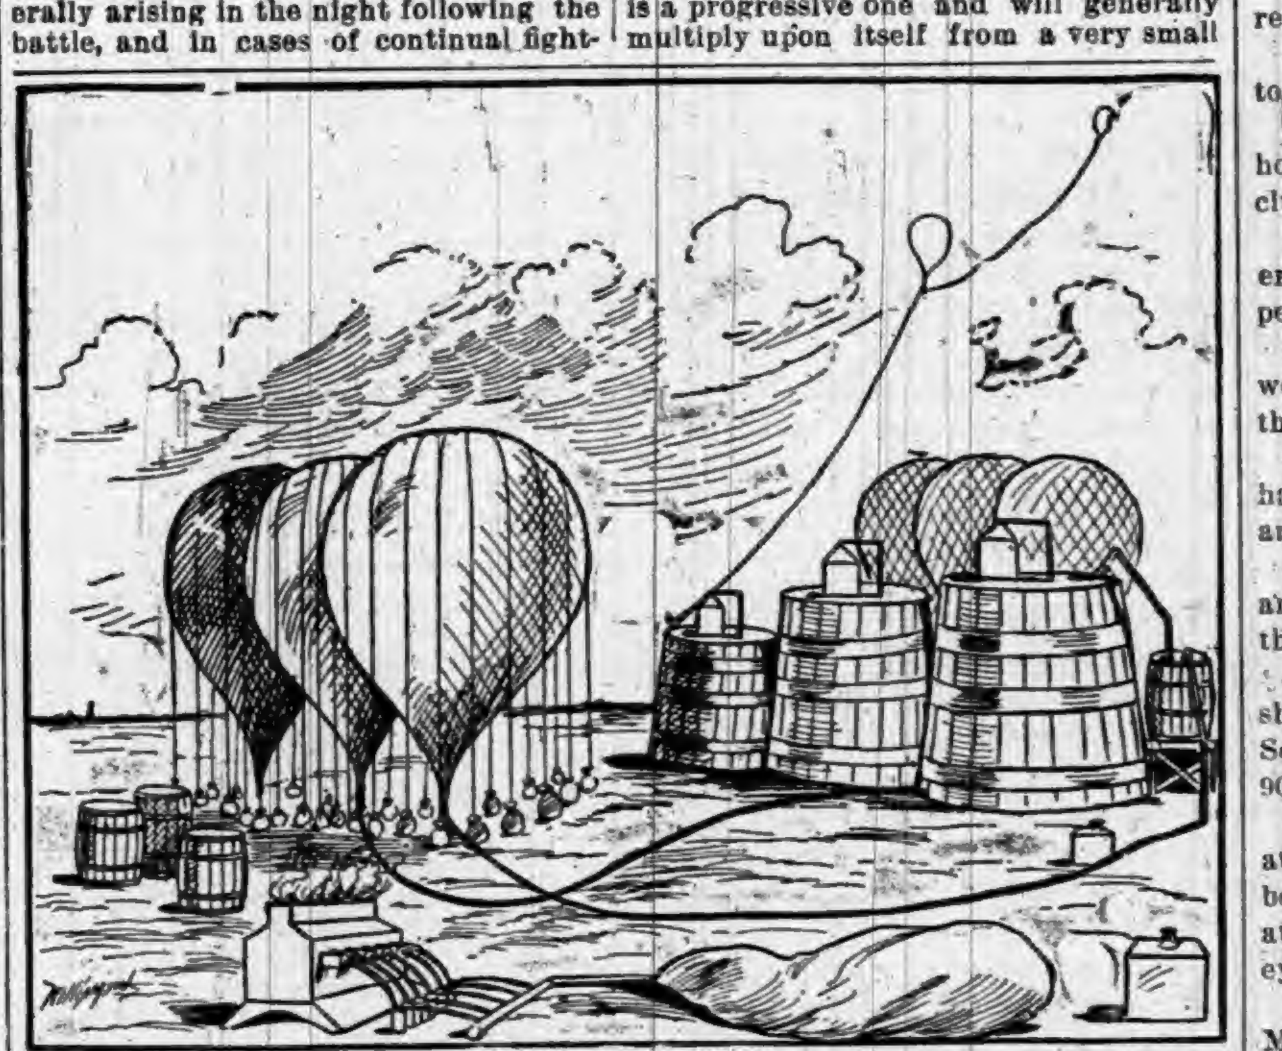
Compelling the Clouds.

Scientists, farmers, and ranchmen, and in fact the entire reading public, have recently had their attention centered on Texas and the successful operations of the Government rainmakers. The cowboys of the "Staked Plains" of that State have been treated to a free exhibition of fireworks such as has seldom if ever been equaled in the Lone Star State. The coyotes and antelopes have been scattered in terror by this terrific cannonading of the experimenters, and to the joy of the ranchman copious rains have fallen on the parched prairies of the Llano Estacado, breaking a drought of long duration and averting the distress and suffering which would have followed a few more weeks of dry weather.



GEN. DYRENFORTH.

Before the close of the late war, it became so conspicuous a fact that heavy rain would almost inevitably follow a hot engagement that the storm was fully anticipated, and was regarded as one of the factors in the case to be considered by a leader when forming his plans upon the eve of a battle. In most of these cases the storms began about twelve hours after the heavy firing, generally arising in the night following the battle, and in cases of continual fighting for several days, as in the battles of the Wilderness, they occurred nightly during the continuance of the engagements. History also shows that during the Mexican war many battles on the arid plains of Mexico were followed by copious rainfalls, a condition previously almost unknown in some of those localities.



FILLING THE BALOONS.

Gen. Daniel Ruggles, of Fredericksburg, Va., was among the number of those who observed the regularity of this phenomenon or rainfall after battles, and soon after the close of the war he applied for a patent on the idea of "producing rainfall artificially by means of explosions in the upper air." Gen. Ruggles' ideas were crude, but he obtained his patent and thereby the exclusive right to the wholesale and retail trade in the artificial rain-storms in this country. However, when Congress took up the matter and began to talk of investigating the subject Gen. Ruggles freely surrendered all his rights in favor of the government.

After Gen. Ruggles had taken out his papers the subject of artificial rain-fall received little attention for twenty years or more, but as the grain and cattle interests extended into the semi-arid regions of the West and Southwest, the possibilities of the subject began to be discussed, and many of the prominent farm and ranch owners of the West were soon convinced that the scheme was well worth a trial. C. B. Farwell and Nelson Morris, of Chicago, both of whom are largely interested in stock lands, took the matter before Congress and by dint of earnest agitation obtained last year an appropriation of $2,000 for use by the Department of Agriculture in prosecuting investigations in this line, and the last Congress added $7,000 to this sum for a series of practical experiments. At the urgent request of the friends of the scheme Gen. Robert G. Dyenforth consented to superintend the investigations and experiments.

A series of tentative experiments were first prosecuted near Washington at which a number of prominent officials and scientists were present. At the time of the operations in the District of Columbia the explosions produced great alarm throughout the suburbs, and a petition was immediately presented to Uncle Jerry Rusk praying that he remove "his dynamiters" to a region more remote and secluded, and an arid spot in Texas was selected.

The mode of operation which General Dyrenforth adopts is to form a "line of battle" covering a position about three miles long and two deep. Along the front of the line giant powder is fired from mortars, and bombs of "rackarock" mixture are exploded. Behind this a second line is formed, consisting of fifty cloth kites held by electric wire and bearing loads of dynamite. The dynamite is exploded when the kites are high in the air by means of a cap and an electric current which is passed through the wires. The dynamite is suspended from the kites by wires of a length sufficient to prevent the kites from being injured by the explosions.

A third line is formed behind the kites consisting of explosive balloons of 10, 12, and 20 foot diameter charged with oxhydrogen gas, which is one of the most violent explosives known to science. Ten to twenty of these balloons are in the air at once, each containing from 500 to 5,000 cubic feet of the explosive gases. The concussions from the explosion of one of these balloons is so great that it must be allowed to rise to a great height in order to prevent injury to the operatives and surrounding objects. The explosion is produced by means of electric wires or by a time fuse so regulated that the explosion will take place when the balloon has had time to reach the proper altitude, which varies according to conditions, from 1,000 to 7,000 feet.

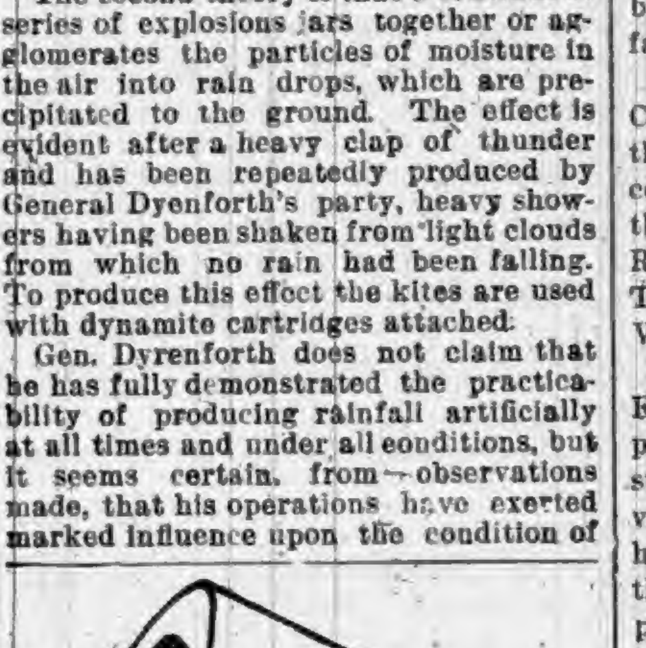
In charging the balloons with the gases the empty envelope is first spread on the ground and filled one-third full with oxygen. This is done by attaching the balloon by a hose to retorts filled with chlorate of potassium and manganese. The retorts are then subjected to intense heat in oxygen furnaces constructed for the purpose, when oxygen gas is generated and passes through a lime-water wash into the balloon. When the balloon is one-third full it is detached from the oxygen apparatus and connected by a pipe with one of the large hydrogen generators, which completes the inflation. The hydrogen generator consists of a large tank half-full of water and iron borings turned from cast-iron projectiles in the navy yard at Washington. Into this sulphuric acid, or vitriol, is slowly decanted. The acid separates the water into its gases, hydrogen and oxygen, and the iron takes up the oxygen, allowing the free hydrogen to escape through a pipe and wash-barrel into the balloon, which is held captive by a netting attached to sand bags.

The observation ascents are made in balloons of twenty feet diameter. The balloon is held captive at a height of 1,000 feet by a strong cable while the meteorologist in the basket communicates the readings of his instrument through a telephone to those on the ground below. The cable is then let go, and the balloon rises to the height of over two miles, and then descending lands the occupant at a distance of several miles from the starting point. A carriage has already started from the headquarters, however, and the aeronautical observer is seen riding quietly back on terra firma, with his balloon, folding basket, and instruments safely packed away.

Three closely related principles of theories are recognized and acted upon by General Dyrenforth and his party in their experiments, which, stated briefly and bereft of technical terms, are as follows: First, most rainstorms have their origin in the mingling of different currents of the upper air strata, some of which are warm and moisture-laden (in any locality) while others are much cooler. As soon as these currents begin to mingle, the warm, moist current is cooled and its moisture is thus squeezed out of it as from a sponge. This moisture first becomes visible as vapor or "cloud," and finally condenses into rain. The process is a progressive one and will generally multiply upon itself from a very small beginning. The immense air waves produced by the explosion of the balloons at high altitudes start this mingling of currents which, progressing by the force of the latent heat released in the condensation of moisture, grows into a storm center.

The second theory is that a continuous series of explosions jars together or agglomerates the particles of moisture in the air into rain drops, which are precipitated to the ground. The effect is evident after a heavy clap of thunder and has been repeatedly produced by General Dyrenforth's party, heavy showers having been shaken from light clouds from which no rain had been falling. To produce this effect the kites are used with dynamite cartridges attached.

Gen. Dyrenforth does not claim that he has fully demonstrated the practicability of producing rainfall artificially at all times and under all conditions, but it seems certain, from observations made, that his operations have exerted marked influence upon the condition of the weather and produced definite practical results in the midst of the arid "Staked Plains" of Texas.



MORTAR FOR FIRING POWDER.

In the third place it is believed that the frictional electricity which is generated in the jarring of the earth and air at the point of the operations and so creates a magnetic field into which the particles of moisture are drawn and gathered. The explosions on and near the ground are especially calculated to secure this result.

TO BE FOUND IN THE STATE OF INDIANA.

Giving a Detailed Account of the Numerous Crimes, Casualties, Fires, Suicides, Deaths, Etc., Etc.

The Census of Indiana.

The latest census bulletin gives the population of the State of Indiana in detail by counties, townships, wards of cities and towns, according to the official count of the returns made under the eleventh census, taken June 1, 1890.

The figures for the same divisions, according to the census of 1890, are also given for the purpose of comparison. The population of the State has increased 214.103, or 10.82 per cent. during the decade. In 1880 the population of the state was 1,978,301; as returned in 1890 it was 2,192.404. Of the ninety-two counties in the State twenty-five show decreases. In only four counties are decreases shown of more than 10 per cent. In most of the counties showing a decrease the decrease is slight.

In 1880 there were twenty-seven cities in the State having a population of 4,000 or more, the aggregate population of which was 327,248. In 1890 the number of cities having that population was thirty-seven, with an aggregate population of 507,133. This shows an increase in population in cities of this size of 179,885, or 54.97 per cent. The most considerable increases in urban population in number as found in Indianapolis and Evansville. Indianapolis shows an increase of 30,380, or 40.48 per cent., while Evansville shows an increase of 21,476, or 73.35 per cent. Fort Wayne and South Bend also show large proportionate increases. The largest per centages of increase are found in Hammond, Marion, Anderson, Muncie, Frankfort and Kokomo. In only two cities are decreases shown.

—Joseph Knight, son of Edward Knight, of Chicago, was terribly and, possibly, fatally injured by a man-eating stallion at Union Mills. Knight was visiting John Berridge, owner of the horse, and, although warned, entered the stable to feed the animal some apples. The brute seized Knight in his teeth, threw him down, knelt on him, and, before assistance arrived, the victim had been awfully torn, mangled and emasculated.

In the civil war, as in the conflicts with her neighbors, the Chilian soldier has shown himself the best fighter in South America.—Pittsburg Commercial-Gazette.

The defeat of Balmaceda is a victory for popular rights and a defeat for one-man power. The victors will no doubt organize the government again on the principles for which they took up arms, and it will not be long before tranquility and prosperity will settle upon the people.—Milwaukee News.

The "insurrectionists," as they have been called, were not only the representatives of the people but the party of constitutional government. Balmaceda was merely a usurper who violated all forms of law and trampled down all constitutional restraints upon his arbitrary power.—Nashville American.

Naturally the new government will feel a little awry toward the United States because of the Itata incident, but in the cool reflection following the bloody scene of war, even those who have all along been called insurgents must approve the course the United States has pursued in maintaining a strict neutrality.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

The Congressional party has been looked upon as a rebellion, but now that it has defeated the other side it will be recognized as the real government. It was to the Congressional party that the gunboat Itata belonged which our Government seized, and this may after all prove to be a bone of contention which will require careful adjustment.—[Boston Record.

The triumph of the Congressional party is the success of representative government against absolutism, and every American ought to rejoice in it. The result is most fortunate for Chili, for however corrupt a Congress may be it still retains the theory of representation based on the will of the people, while the dictatorship can only exist by the suppression of the will of the people.—St. Louis Republic.

From the beginning the sympathy of the world has been with the Congressional party or revolutionists. They have represented constitutional government, while President Balmaceda has stood for depotism and one-man power in its most extreme and offensive form. The overthrow of that autocrat will make the role of tyrant and dictator a little less attractive to ambitious men in the South American republics.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,

That Cures Catarrh, Hay-Fever, Cold in the Head, Sore Throat, Canker, and Bronchitis.

The testimonials to these FACTS are NUMEROUS and STRONG, similar to the following:

From the Hon. Harvey D. Colvin, Ex-Mayor of Chicago:

CHICAGO, July 24, 1890.

S. H. KLINCK—DEAR SIR: I am pleased to say that I consider your remedy the best medicine in existence, for the human afflictions you claim to cure. I suffered from catarrh with bronchitis for many years. During that time I employed physicians and faithfully tried many so-called remedies advertised to cure this disease, without any material benefit, when a friend induced me to try your remedy, claiming others had been cured by it. The first bottle gave me the most pleasing results. I have continued its use and I can not say too much for it. It found me too near the grave for comfort and restored me to health again. It adorns my toilet stand and by using it occasionally I am kept well.

I would not be without it if it cost $25 per bottle. I earnestly recommend it to all my afflicted friends.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XVI—Continued.

Mrs. Brown coolly counted the roll.

"Very well—you can tell Mr. Buckett I want just $10 more, at least. Fifty dollars won't do it—and make the appearance he will expect. I'll put as much of your money to it as will make it out—and Mr. Buckett will give it back to you."

"Of course, he will—and be very much obliged to you, also," said Ben. "I'm glad its all settled. I would have been content, Double Dick, if I'd got $15 a week—but I'll leave it to all hands here—a Queen of Arabia is dirt cheap at $40 a month."

Whereupon they all laughed heartily.

"I'll get these things made to-morrow; meantime the Queen of Arabia must condescend to wear my clothes," said Mrs. Brown, gayly.

The next day, as Dick was walking through the city, he was confronted with a bill on which he beheld his new name in letters half a foot long. Beneath, in many colors, the marvelous dexterity, fearlessness and crowning achievements of "Idalia" were narrated.

Ben smiled at Dick's confusion.

"Buckett puts it pretty steep, don't he? He knows the art of putting things, Buckett does. That's the way he made his fortune. And when you are as old as I am, you'll appreciate the art of putting things. It's worth a mint of money; you can gamble on that, Double Dick."

That afternoon, when Dick was mounted on the black mare, the circus attendants still manifested considerable curiosity to see how she would come it, for the sex of the rider was referred to from that hour in a way that began to be very amusing to Dick.

"Black Bess 'll dump him yet," said one in his hearing. "She'll take a kink, and he'll get it."

"Bet you five dollars down."

"I'll take the bet."

And Dick saw the money placed in the hands of a stakeholder. He felt that he was an object of interest to the humblest hangers-on and employes now, and his blood tingled in his veins with pleasure.

This was another world altogether from Barnesville Poorhouse.

"Now, then," said Ben, backing into the green-room.

The man holding the black mare's head released his grasp. The mare trotted into the ring, turned around once, threw her head up, then raised her heels. The movement was so quick Dick was almost unseated, but he recovered himself in time.

If it wasn't for the dress, he said to himself, he would be all right. If he only could ride like a man—wouldn't he "welt" the mare into subjection.

Everybody saw now there was to be another contest between the mare and her rider.

Bets were made by spectators that the mare would throw the rider. They were heard by Dick. The clown of clowns was making a great deal of noise, but his eyes were fastened upon Dick anxiously. He made an excuse to pass near the mare, and said to Dick:

"You must conquer her now or never—the devil's in her yet."

Then he rolled like a hoop across the ring.

Black Bess was backing, backing, trying to get the bit between her teeth—backing—backing, when a blow on her nose made her mad with pain.

Dick had cut square down her face as hard, as wickedly as he could drive the blow with his cowhide whip, that was painted red and ornamented with a tassel looking harmless.

The mare shot forward like an arrow from a bow, and sped around the ring, and as she galloped Dick held the reins tight, cutting her now on the haunch, now on the shoulder.

The ringmaster stood all eyes in the center of the ring. The attendants held loops ready to spring as one man on the mare. The clown squatted near the circle the mare swept, looking apparently open-eyed at the daring rider.

The mare suddenly whirled around, and as she swerved from her course rose on her hind feet straight in the air. Dick clung to her mane; with one hand he held on for life, as with the other he plied the rawhide until the mare fell on all fours and whirled around in pain.

The rawhide came down again and again, then the mare flew around the ring. Never did Bess gallop like that before. The multitude stood on their feet, women shrieked, the band ceased to play, and the attendants strove to check the mare in vain.

It was now a question of endurance. Ben was striving to catch Dick's eye, but in vain. The mare was flying so fast it was impossible. Dick felt that unless he did something soon, the mare might bolt into the green-room with him—and what might happen then he dare not think.

He had put the mare to her utmost speed—now he would try to bring her in.

Could he do it?

If he succeeded he would be the wonder of the circus people—of the spectators.

He resolved to do, or die in the attempt.

The mare was going at the utmost limit of her speed. The sawdust rose in a gale behind him. The silence was significant—ominous.

Dick took the reins in both hands, rose, flung his right leg over the mare's back, and settled himself for the work he had resolved upon.

The multitude murmured. There was the faintest attempt at a cheer, which the cheerers quickly checked in their deep anxiety.

Dick gave the reins a jerk—the mare paid no attention to it. He let her have her head, slipped the cowhide into his right hand, brought the mare a tremendous cut over the face, then braced himself and jerked her bit with all the power he could exert.

The mare was stunned. She shook her head, checked her headlong speed—to receive another cruel cut across the face. And again the bit was brought down on her quivering flesh. Another free rein, another savage welt, another bruised tongue and mouth, and the mare stopped—stopped so suddenly Dick nearly shot over her head.

Then the mare stood quite still, and everybody could see her veins swell as she trembled.

Meanwhile Dich sat motionless—like a statue—forgetting that the Queen of Arabia was astride her steed.

The clown hastened to Dick's side. The ringmaster hastened to the other side. When the attendants gathered round, and Dick, holding the mare firmly, hit her repeatedly—but she never moved or stirred.

"You've done it now—any one can handle her after that," said Mitchell.

It was the first word of encouragement he had given Dick.

"I was bound to make her mind me this time, or die," said Dick proudly.

"It's worth a hundred dollars cash in hand," said Ben as the mare shivered.

Dick dismounted.

"Bow—bow to them all around, quick," said the clown. "Make your point every time."

Dick bowed the vast audience, and then Ben, with all the deference he could put in his manner, led Dick out of the ring.

The cheers that followed them thundered in Dick's ears until he was deafened.

A man—a bright-looking man, caught the clown just as he was entering the green-room.

"Introduce me, Ben."

Dick looked at him; he forgot he was a woman for the time until Ben coolly turned and said:

"Miss Dick, permit me to introduce an old friend, Mr. Miller, of the—by the way, you're on the Press, ain't you?"

"No; the Item. The Item's the paper here, Ben."

"I suppose you'll put a string of stuff in about Miss Dick here—Idalia on the bills, you know—confidential this, Miller. Nobody knows her name but you."

"She's pretty as a picture," said Miller in a low tone.

"And as good as she is pretty, as my wife will tell you. Now, don't overdo the thing—just enough to clip, you know—that's what tells, and helps us most. And I'm sure Miss Dick will be ever so much indebted to you."

"You have made too much of it—I shall be very glad, indeed, to be able to render Miss Dick a service. Any time, she can command me freely."

Dick could only bow. He did not—could not trust himself to speak. He could scarcely preserve his countenance until he was a good distance in the greenroom—the sat down on a camp stool and laughed until his eyes were wet with tears.

The attendants looked at him curiously. Some wondered if he was going to take "histrikes."

"See here—if you don't know how to use a word, don't use it," said Ben tartly. "Hystericks."

"Well, it's the same in the end," said one man.

"Bunker—you're a fool—Miss Dick is laughing at a young man who is in love with her."

Then the attendants roared and bent themselves double.

When Dick drew the clothes over him that night (he slept in the dressing-room that night), he would not have exchanged places with a king.

CHAPTER XVII.

IN WHICH DOUBLE DICK ACHIEVES A GREAT TRIUMPH AND SEES A VISION.

Dick was awakened the next morning by somebody shouting loudly:

"Now, then! All alive there!"

It was the voice of the master of transportation for the "Monster Aggregation of Talent and Combined Curiosities of the Entire Globe," to quote from the bills. Mr. Parisian Perks, as Ben Brown called the master of transportation, had condescended to play the part "awkener."

Dick recognized Parisian Perks' voice—it was one that nobody who had ever heard it was likely to forget. It was like a fog-horn and nutmeg-grater combined—a good deal of grating to the squeak, as the clown persisted in saying. Other people likened Mr. Perks' voice to a rag-machine—nobody liked it.

Mr. Buckett, it will be observed, was liberal in titles. What with master of transportation, master of sustenance, master of equestriennes, master of the ring, master of the arena, this, that, and the other, they made a lot of titles as awe-inspiring as ever dumbfounded a lot of people ruled by a crazy king.

Ben Brown, be it observed, refused to accept the enchanting title of "Momus, Master of Mirth." He would not have it billed that way. What he wanted, and stipulated in his agreement, was three hundred dollars a month for self and wife, and first-class fare on all steamers and passenger cars, and first-class hotels.

And the clown got it without a murmer, or attempt at rebate.

He did not remonstrate—how could he?—when Buckett billed him as "the most excruciating jester the world ever saw—the Prince of Funmakers," which his wife said was a modest announcement, considering he leaped higher and farther, rode better and faster, vaulted with more grace and ease than any man in the company.

"Look alive there! Such snorers—you'd shake the rafters of heaven!"

Dick glanced out slyly. Yes, it was Parisian Perks, with his gold-headed cane in his hand. Dick wondered if he slept with it.

"Tumble out! roll out! crawl out! anyway to get out, and give us the canvas. Do you think you are turtles, and count on carrying your cover with you? Here it is almost ten o'clock!" (It was barely five.) "Ten—ten o'clock, and we're twenty-five miles from New York. Twenty-five miles and six finger-lengths. I can make the twenty-five miles easy—what bothers me is the finger-lengths."

Dick smiled; nobody paid the least attention to Mr. Perks' abjurgations.

"What! Nobody stirring. Here, you loafers! Up, up, scoot, vanish, perambulate, make yourselves scarce!"

"Oh, go away, will you, Perks!" exclaimed a voice that Dick quickly recognized.

"That you, Brown? 'Pon my soul it's gone five, for a fact."

"Well, I'm just ready for another nap, and I'm going to have it."

"Nap! Hear him, ye gods! Been sleeping there seven hours to my knowledge; now he wants a nap!"

"Fire away, Perks."

"I will fire away. I'll bring the elephant around."

"If you do I'll hiss my dog on you; so move off now, Perks. We've plenty of time. Confound you, because your conscience won't let you sleep, you don't want any one to enjoy a little rest."

Perks beat a retreat, and Dick, who was now wide awake, listened to the hum of voices in the kitchen, to the drivers and tent men whom Perks had "routed up."

When the tent men awoke, they awoke altogether, seemingly. They were very much alive under Mr. Perks' abjurgations and moving appeals.

Dick soon rose, and, washing himself, was surprised to meet Ben looking for him. He was surprised still more to see how quickly the "ten acres of canvas" disappeared like magic.

"About this time I take a drink," said the clown, addressing his protege, tendering a cup to Dick.

"Thank you. I never touch it."

"O, you don't! Never drink fresh milk?"

"I—I thought it was whisky."

"Yes; I knew what you thought. There's lots of people who ought to know better who think we drink heavy. Why, if I drank once a day, what do you suppose would become of my nerve? I'd lose my grip and eye in a year. I'd go downhill—I'd just naturally drop right out of the business."

Dick took the milk and emptied the cup.

"When I can get it, I take cream."

"I want to ask you one thing," said Dick, shyly. "Do you rub yourself with oil?"

"Rub! Rub! Every night I just swim. Fact. Buckett keeps a whaler out just to catch whales for the oil we use. It's a great saving."

"You are laughing at me," said Dick. "He don't."

"Talk sense, Ben," said the clown's wife at that moment.

Here the master of equestrians put his head into the green-room.

"Breakfast, ladies and gentleman, in exactly five minutes."

"No seconds to spare," added Ben.

"What makes you so lively this morning, Ben?" his wife asked, as she adjusted his cravat.

"Nothing particular that I know of, unless it's Double Dick's luck. Just imagine something like this on the bills next."

Ben threw his head back, assumed a pompous manner and said, in a high monotone that moved everybody near to uncontrollable laughter: "The great, world-renowned ærial sprite, or the etherial artiste—how would 'etherialized' sound?—the air-endowed arch enchantress—that's alliterative—sounds beautiful—Idalia, the Arabian Queen, essaying extraordinary and unparalleled achievements. Why, Kate—we'll paralyze the natives. Vivid posturing! Physical pictures presented on horseback—all worth a dollar a word, and dirt cheap at that. Vivacity united to grace—and—what goes with a 'v,' Kate?"

Suddenly a cry arose on the morning air. The clown looked around; the group at the entrance of the green-room scattered; all looked at something in the inclosure back of the wagons, which were ready to move.

Then the voice of Mitchell was heard:

"Hi—hi, there—catch her with a loop! Look alive, there."

"It's that devil, I bet," said Ben, with knit brows as he ran out and raised himself where he could see what caused the excitement.

"It isn't Firefly, is it Ben?"

"Well it is—and she's raising——" it is unnecessary to add the word. "If I had my way, I'd shoot that devil before she does any more harm!"

"Look out, there! Look out!"

The cries rose on all sides. The knot of riders near the green-room mounted to places of safety.

They were not a moment too soon. A fiery-eyed, milk-white steed galloped madly, straight at the green-room. The cries of those near it diverted her from her aim; she turned in her tracks as gracefully as a fawn, and shot in the opposite direction, speeding on, on, at a pace that threatened all near her.

Dick had bolted to a clear place in the inclosure, whence he could see all that passed. The white steed rushed directly at him, with distended nostrils and flaming eyes. A number of drivers were following her, pursuing with loud cries of warning. The clown's face expressed anger.

"I told Buckett that Mitchell would wish he hadn't bought her."

"She will kill somebody before Buckett sells her," said his wife.

Meantime the white mare was taking tremendous strides. She was the embodiment of fury and swiftness. She made a series of rushes that startled all who saw her.

Suddenly she wheeled about and made straight for Dick.

To all appearances Dick was stunned—stupefied. In reality he was thinking what he would do if the white mare threatened him. Those looking on gave the boy over to death. They expected to see the mare trampling him under foot, tearing him with her teeth.

What was their amazement when Dick suddenly vaulted squarely upon the mare's back and grasped her mane with both hands.

"He will be killed, Ben—save him!" exclaimed the clown's wife.

But now Dick's practice with the colts at the poorhouse proved useful to him in a manner he did not demonstrate with Black Bess.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Heresy Two Centuries Ago.

Theological controversies still appear to be bitter, but how mild they would seem to the early settlers of this country! The pending disputes render very timely the publication, by the New York Learner and Teacher, of the following letter, which is claimed to be genuine, and the original of which is said to be in a book of records, dating from early in 1600 to 1749, and kept in an old Quaker meeting house in Greenpoint, R. I.:

"SEPTEMBER 15, 1682.

"To ye aged and beloved—Mr. John Higginson:

"There be now at sea a ship, called the Welcome, which has on board an hundred or more of the heretics and malignants called Quakers, with W. Penn, who is the chief scamp, at the head of them.

"The General Court has accordingly given secret orders to Master Malachi Huscott, of the brig Porpoise, to waylay the said Welcome slyly, as near the Cape of Cod as may be, and make captive the said Penn and his ungodly crew, so that the Lord may be glorified, and not mocked on the soil of this new country with the heathen worship of these people.

"Much spoil can be made by selling the whole lot in Barbadoes, where slaves fetch good prices in rum and sugar, and we shall not only do the Lord great service by punishing the wicked, but we shall make great good for his minister and people.

"Master Huscott feels hopeful, and I will set down the news when ship comes back.

"Yours in ye bowels of Christ.

"COTTON MATHER."

We feel bound to say that this letter has rather too strong a flavor of a later century, and a more unregenerate humor, to justify its hasty acceptance as authentic. But whether this be a true bill or not, it is a matter of history that only a little more than a century before this date—to wit, on the 27th of October, 1553—Servetus was burned at the stake in Geneva, Switzerland, at the instigation of Calvin, because he taught doctrines in which Calvin did not believe.—New York Evening Post.

Disease Bearers.

"It is no new doctrine," says the Lancet, "that in the presence of infectious or contagious diseases every object may become endowed with a mischievous faculty of transmission. Nothing is exempt, though some substances are naturally better fitted to act as media than others. Such substances as clothing and carpets may be placed in the first rank, and paper, especially in book form, hardly second. The scrupulous rigor with which measures of purification are adopted in regard to all these, is proof of the wholesome suspicion with which they are commonly invested. It was not to be expected that paper money could escape the stigma, nor should it. Even solid coin has latterly been credited with the same maleficent property. It cannot be denied, indeed, that any penny or shilling may thus be made to bear a novel and mischievous increment of its own."

THE cranium of a cave bear, showing marks of having been wounded by the flint ax of a prehistoric man, was recently found in an excavation by two Russian miners. The skull has been examined by M. Wanzel, who has come to the conclusion that the wound was was really made by the hand of a hunter, wielding a flint hatchet. He had struck the animal across the head from right to left, and two splinters from the edge of the weapon remained imbedded in the bone. The wound healed, but one of the splinters was retained by a calousity and certain fibrous growths, and although it had been loosened by the death and decomposition of the animal, it was found by the miners and sent to M. Wanzel.

"We've done pretty well this season," said the captain of the stone-hooker, Saucy Susan, to his crew, as the gallant vessel breasted the stormy ripples of the bay.

"Not so bad," said the crew, as he proceeded to belay the larboard binnacle.

"Now reef the foretop halliards—and let go the main taffrail."

"Ay, ay, sir," responded the crew, with alacrity.

"We've made pretty well outen the old Saucy Susan, hev me and you, an' she's a tidy craft yit, an good for a few years longer," remarked the captain.

"That reminds me," said the crew, pausing in his work to borrow a fresh chew of tobacco from the captain.

"Why is you an' me like silversmiths of the goddess Diana, which you might have read on?"

"Damfino."

"Cause, yer see, by this craft we has our livin'."

"Huh!" said the captain, "guess you better quit sailin' an' go inter the nigger minstrel business. You're gettin' altogether too smart."

And then they proceeded to splice the main brace.—Grip.

She Introduced Herself.

A round-faced, thrifty-looking German woman presented one of Uncle Sam's checks at the cashier's window in the sub-treasury in Wall Street, last Friday, and placing an old-fashioned leathern pocketbook on the little shelf, waited complacently for her money.

The cashier's assistant looked at the check and at the woman, and in a business-like way said: "You will have to bring somebody to identify you."

"Yah, dat ist mine," said the woman, with a genial smile.

"But I don't know you," said the young man, persuasively. "Can you not bring somebody to identify you?"

"Yah, dat ist mine," repeated the woman, serenely.

"You don't understand," said the cashier's representative. "This check is made payable to Wilhelmina Heckshausen. I am not acquainted with you, and I cannot pay you until you bring somebody to identify you—I mean to introduce you."

"Ach interduction? Oxcuse me. I forgot dat. Mister Cashier, I was Wilhelmina Heckshausen. Now, you please, gif me dat money."

The woman was so obviously honest, and the amount of the check was so small, that the cashier paid it without further question.—New York Times.

THURSDAY....SEPTEMBER 10, 1891.

INDIANA assessment this year is $941,721,211; and last year it was $782,872,125.

TREASURY balance $5,306,865 as reported last week. Who says the surplus is "all" gone?

GOLD discoveries are causing a sensation in Nevada. The new Pine Nut mine near Carson is the richest yet found.

SURVIVORS of the Blackhawk war had a meeting at Freeport, Ill., last week, at which 18 were present, the average age being 76. The war was in 1832. They ask for pensions.

OHIO reported in 1867, 7,622,495 sheep. Now she reports 3,600,000. The high duty on wool, we were told, would induce farmers to raise more sheep. But the price of wool has steadily gone down.

THE republican papers have stopped advising farmers not to raise so much wheat because it will clog the market. The present foriegn demand, is what we want, and then we will never have too much wheat.

ALUMINUM dropped fifty cents a pound in price recently caused by new methods of producing it. As McKinley put only 15 cents a pound duty on this melal. we can't see how republicans will lay this cheapening to him.

COPPER mining companies of Boston have declared a dividend of three million on the last eight months' operations. Yet that is one of the starving infant industries that the McKinley bill "protects" by a tariff rate of $25 a ton. The tariff is not only a tax but a steal.

THE Vesuvius Iron Works near Pittsburg have put in a full force of colored workmen. Where are the white workmen who in 1888 contributed money to the Harrison campaign fund, so they might secure protection? Protection helps only the mill owner, not his workmen.

THE election law amendments are in force, together with the other laws enacted last winter. The great difference in voting is in having the device, (rooster, etc.) at the head of the ticket, printed in a square large enough to enclose it. A voter who wishes to cast a straight ticket stamps in that square, no matter whether he hits the rooster or not. The little squares by the names of candidates will remain as before.

BLAIR, Ex-Senator from New Hampshire, and not Blaine, originated the "reciprocity" scheme, or at least the part of it that permits goverment to pay back the duty a man has paid on material he used, if he ships his article abroad. And Mr. Blair now asserts that his plan was better than Blaine's, for the latter only aims to help manufacturers and not farmers. We find Blair's plan in an old congressional Record, that has been in this office seven years, on page 2986.

SEVERAL hundred square miles in Florida have rich deposits of phosphates suitable for fertalizers. It is covered by a thin layer of sand and is from thirty to fifty feet in thickness. It was formed in the early ages of the world, when Florida was a sea, and the fish decayed in great quantities as the sea receded, then millions of sea fowl were added, and the combination being pressed solidly together, forms a hard rock-like substance, very rich in phosphates. It will make the state rich.

THE Butler Record complains that one of its most interesting articles has been copied by exchanges and credited to another paper. We suppose the exchange got hold of the item some way, and seeing that it was utterly unreasonable, if not impossible very naturally credited it to the Clipper. But the Record need not feel proud of its article. It is the one which says a man in Steuben county raised wheat at a cost of 33 cents a bushel, and hired everything done. No man in Indiana can do this. We have investigated this particular case, and find that the man had a little patch of potato ground, and got a neighbor to put it into wheat, and paid for it in musty clover hay and rotten corn fodder. We suppose that he had it threshed when some other job was being done, and the cost was small. But no man can put out a field of wheat, paying for seed, for putting in, and for harvesting, stacking, threshing, hauling to market, and allow for interest on the value of the land, and have his wheat cost but 33 cents. The Record will do itself a good turn to let the credit remain right where it was placed by that exchange.

Harvest Excursion via B & O

On September 15, and 29, the B & O will sell low-rate excursion tickets to points in the west, southwest and Valley of Virgina. Tickets will be good returning 30 days from date of sale. Excursion tickets to points in the Valley of Virginia will be sold at rate of one fare for the round trip, and will be good for stop-over at points east of the Ohio river. John Johnson, informs us, that we did not give him the proper credit for "wiring" for the fine lights in the Kiblinger residence in the note we made last week. Of course there was no intention on our part to overlook the fact, that he is at the head of the expert mechanical work of the electric light company.

Hicksville News is giving instructions to voters, to enable them to cast their ballots under the Australian law. That is right. We had a pull at the same work over here last year, and after the people had studied up these instructions, they found the plan just as simple and easy as the old one had been, Now we would not change back to the old plan under any circumstances.

Took Up Their Comps.

The officers of the Auburn Fair, tired of the slurs of the Garrett Clipper, ordered our secretary, Cal. Husselman to take up their complimentary tickets, and if not returned, then not to honor them at the gate. Hank Little, the wind manipulator of the concern happening to be sober, returned the comps with the following letter:

GARRETT, IND., Sept. 4, 1891.

J. L. DAVIS:

Dear Sir:—By request of the Fair Secretary I return my pass. You are entirely welcome to it. If I can't raise a quarter to see Purdy's Bowery dance, and Allen's farm horses trot, in the language of Moody, I can remain at home, but it strikes me very forcibly that the business management of the fair is somewhat one-sided. If the concern has entirely dispensed with our services, and shut the gates on us, it should be independent enough to return what paid up stock we have in the "hayseed enterprise." Ignoring us from our business point and pocketing our dollars from another appears a little greedy and unbusinesslike to say the least. If the one share stock holder of the Executive Committee, who I suppose ordered the tickets taken up, would like to have a donation of what we have paid, I will make them out a receipt in full. Hoping that you will get big money out of the thing this week. I remain,

Yours, etc,

H. E LITTLE.

The Commissioners All Right.

They are all right as usual. We refer to an item in last weeks St. Joe News, critising the commissioners for letting the contract for the stone abutments of the Webster bridge, to Alpheus Wheelock. Charles Ryan, the News says, wants to know why they let it to Mr. Wheelock when he was not the lowest bidder, but does not say who the lowest bidder was. We have asked the board and find it was a man from Defiance, who made a bid to put in limestone abutments at a lower figure than Wheelock's. The reason is, that the commissioners have before this, decided that the stone abutments at that bridge must be of Berea sandstone, a material whose lasting qualities have been fully tested, while many kinds of limestone, will last in abutments, culverts, etc., but a few years. We believe the commissioners are right and wise in adhering to their decision to have Berea stone. The limestone the Defiance man offered may have been suitable or it may not. But the Board cannot afford to take any chances. These bridges are expensive and the board are determined that they shall be so constructed as to last. We have no doubt the taxpayers will take the same view.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon: if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Delicate ladies, do not fail to use this great cure, because it will put the bloom of freshness and beauty upon your lips and in your cheeks, and quickly drive away your disabilities and weaknesses.

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician, will be in Auburn at the Hollister House the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his services in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. 34tf

Trustee Woodcox of Concord, was in town Monday and called attention to the injustice done him in last week's Dispatch. That paper criticises him for "employing himself" in repairing school houses. There is no law to prevent his doing such work, though in matters for which contracts are taken, he could not enter into a contract with himself. But here is a case where repairs are needed, and the trustees have the undoubted authority to get some one else to do the work, while he stands around and oversees it, and for overseeing, charge the township $2 a day. Instead of standing around and doing nothing, Mr. Woodcox did a part of the work, charging the same rates he does to private individuals, and thus saved the township $2 a day. Certainly this seems right. Mr. W., and his son did the work, and as they are the only persons in the township who are workmen in paper hanging, painting, etc., they would no doubt have been employed, had someone else been the trustee. The whole trouble seems to come from political sources, with the plain intention, not of saving money, but making political capital against the trustee. We presume that Mr. Woodcox would never have accepted the office, if he had supposed it would be a hindrance in working at the trade he has followed for so many years.

Mrs. M. A. Bell returned to Detroit Friday after a two months stay with her daughter Mrs. G. H. Yesbera.

St. Joe News: Billy Vollmar of Auburn, spent Sunday with friends in this place, and attended the annual meeting.

How does this strike you? A quarter-pound of the "Immense" brand or baking powder for a nickel at Brandon's. 36tf

The New Process Vapor stove at Beuret's has no generator. Nothing to get out of order, and begins to work at once.

Judge and Mrs. McClellan reached home this week after a trip up the lakes. The weather was very favorable for such a voyage.

Mrs. A. F. Martin of Columbia City, spent Sunday with her relatives, the COURIER people, returning home Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Dickinson report that little girl as doing very nicely and are especially pleased that it has all its faculties perfect.

Wednesday, Sept. 30, is Soldiers' day at the Kendallville fair. All soldiers and children are admitted free. Eminent speakers will be present.

As you pass through town on your way to the Auburn fair, be sure and stop at Brandon's for a package of Immense baking powder. You get a pound for twenty cents.

The Kendallville fair has not only become famous itself as a first-class exhibition, but by its success it has stimulated other fairs to greater efforts, revived old fairs, and encouraged new fairs to spring up. Surely there is nothing like success.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott Blain went to Albion on their way home, Saturday. They had taken advantage of their visit here to take in the sights at Detroit, including the exposition. They think that city very beautiful, though of course not so large as Chicago.

J. D. McAnally the inventor of the sprayer was over from Waterloo Saturday. He reports Peter Stroh, 8 bushels of plums; Chas. Bassett, 6; W. B. Maxwell, 7. All had his sprayer and killed insects by its use. He will have a number of these improved sprayers in Auburn fair week.

Have you ever been hungry when you came to Auburn? For want of the knowledge of a good lunch room, did you wait till you got home to get something to eat? If you have, don't repeat it again, but go to Cory Shugers', on West Seventh street. He has facilities for gratifying thirst and hunger that are gratifying. 32 f

Mrs. Barclay and Minnie McDowell, were up at Detroit last week. In the exposition, they saw the plank and the stringer of scantling beneath it that Hogan, the balloonist broke in falling, when he was dashed to pieces. The memory of the disaster was so terrible that people felt a thrill of horror every time the balloon went up as it did daily even after the terrible accident. They met there, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Holman, who send regards to all the old DeKalb friends.

We lately received the sad intelligence that our old friend P. Z. Wyrick, now of Hartville, Mo., has met with quite a misfortune. It seems he was putting up a house and in some way fell from the second story, breaking his leg. It will be remembered that he was a cripple in one limb while here; now he is a cripple in both. His friends here will no doubt remember him in the deepest sympathy, and wish for his earliest recovery. He was good a citizen of this county many years, and in the afternoon of his life went to try his fortune in golden sunlight of the west.

H. M. Showalter of Butler, came up to the fair Monday. He had just got back from his trip across the ocean to buy horses in Scotland. He had a pleasant trip except a short voyage he took to the Okney Islands. This was a rough experience, and he is not in love with that barren country. It is very uninviting to see such small islands made up mostly of rocks, with not a tree or a shrub larger than the stunted heather. The joke about the absence of trees, we will have to tell in chapters. Too much of a good thing at one time would not do. Those who want to hear it all at once, however, can apply to him at his farm home north of Butler.

Persons who attend the Reading Room and take advantage of the conveniences afforded by it, should remember that it is the height of ill manners and shows a depraved condition of the heart, and exposes to public notice a disregard for the comforts of others, when young people indulge, in loud, continued and useless conversation. Any necessary questions will be answered by the superintendent, who is there for that purpose. But all needless discussions of topics, personal and of no interest to those present, are nothing short of an annoyance and will not be tolerated. It should not be considered a hardship for a silence to be maintained where people assemble to glean information from books, but we should all come down to the common level, where the golden rule can be used, and "Do unto others as you would have others to do unto us"—keep still.

Kiblinger never had on such a big stock of stoves in any one season before although he has heretofore led them all in that line. This year, he has had to utilize a part of one of the rooms on the Seventh street side of the factory for storage, and about a car load of them can be seen there.

J. C. Jackson of Howard, Kan., was in town last week. He gets back here about once a year, his business being in the hands of another man in the meantime, the latter making trips between those of his principal. Mr. Jackson does a widely extended business in the wholesale jewelry line.

William Fox, who has been in La Grange, Ill., during the summer, returned about two weeks ago to attend the fair. He is a very promising young man and seems to be making a success of his profession, that of a painter and paper-hanger, and reports plenty of that kind of work to be done in the west.

Harry Trentman is now the agent for the Ft. Wayne Daily Journal, as Phillie Gibson has resigned. Harry is a bright little lad, and we have no doubt will prove a good newsboy. The subscribers already on the list may rely on his faithfulness and new ones can give him their names with the full assurance that they will be well served.

Frank Grambling, on going over to the fair ground Monday, found a little chicken hobbling along in such a strange way that he went to him and picked him up. It proved to be quite a freak, having four legs and five feet. He kept it as a curiosity. It was but a few days old and probably belonged to some of the people living in Gas Addition.

Dr. S. B. Johnston started Tuesday to attend the reunion of his old regiment the 102nd Ohio, at Orrville, O. He will also visit relatives in Stark and Wayne counties, returning the first of next week. It might also be added, that he will take the opportunity to perfect an improved plan for extracting teeth without pain, and moreover without any delay in healing the gums. This will be the best thing yet invented in the dental line.

The electric light building has been greatly enlarged making it about double its former size—in fact it is a large building. This increase was required by the large size of the new boilers and engine, which are very large and of the most modern make. Thanks to the energy and business ability of the managers, Auburn's electric light plant has been made one of the best in this end of the state. And our people seem to appreciate it for the demand for service keeps on increasing every week.

S. W. Walters, who lives east of town, had an arm broken in his thresher last Thursday. They were cleaning up the shatterings when he went to free a belt on the separator, that had got clogged. The belt drew him in, and he would perhaps have lost his life had not the belt come off and so stopped the machine. As it was, his left arm was broken above the wrist, one bone entirely and the other partially. Dr. Buchtel set the fracture, and it is doing well, though it will be some time before that arm is sound.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Dickinson were visiting Mr. Rose at the Reading Room last week and Mr. R. got so absorbed in explaining some passage of the bible, to Mr. Dickinson, that on getting up to go to his work, he forgot which hat was the proper one, and wore off Mr. Dickinson's. So the latter had to go home wearing Mr. Rose's hat, and returned in the evening to swap back. We didn't learn which of the Ten Commandments Mr. Rose was trying to explain, but both gentlemen took the joke with Christian patience.

Among the educators at the institute last week, were R. V. Carlin of Angola, and G. M. Naber of Columbia City, both being interested spectators at our grand institute. They are the superintendents of their counties and both able educators.

The attendance at the institute last week was perhaps the best ever known. There were 153 teachers enrolled at the county institute and an average daily attendance of 122. Nine persons who are to teach in the county were not present. 153 paid their assessments and attended the lectures. We would like to hear from the county that can do better.

S. W. Walters has done an immense amount of threshing this year. He has a new outfit, the "Star" an Aultman machine, and he considers it the best he ever saw. The wheat comes out so clean that parties have used it for the top of their car loads to give the grain a better appearance. Mr. W., is a veteran thresher, and the big crop will give him a chance to get in a big fall's work.

L. J. Miller our veteran wheat buyer, not only gobbles most of the wheat that comes to Auburn but has an agent buying at New Era, Mr. Hough who is station agent at that point. New Era is not a town, there is not a building there except the one that contains the Lake Shore passenger and freight house, but in the month of August alone, the wheat they took in there amounted to 15,664 bushels. It will likely be increased this month.

THE story that a young English lady on a ranch in Montana subdued the rage of a herd of wild bulls, who were about to gore her, by walking boldly up to them singing the soldiers' chorus from "Faust" is incomplete. THE recent terrible railroad accident in France is said to have been intentionally caused by some fiend in human form. It is easy to believe this after reading the account of the mob which gathered to see the recent executions in Paris. To such people causing a railroad accident involving the death of fifty or a hundred people would be little more than a pastime.

ED HOWE, of the Atchison Globe, takes time enough from his literary labors to observe: "It is proper to take fried chicken in your fingers when you eat it, and to bite the corn off the cob." It is unnecessary to add that an anxious public will hail with deepest satisfaction the settlement of these much mooted questions. Heretofore there has been considerable doubt about what was just the proper thing to do.

THE Salton flood has afforded Eastern space-writers an opportunity for working off upon an unsuspecting public a lot of weird tales concerning the Colorado desert which in most cases are the rankest nonsense. Some of the most prominent journals, and those, too, which ought to know better, have allowed their columns to be filled with matter which bears on its face the imprint of untruth, outrivaling as it does the fairy tales of the early Spanish explorers in regard to the deserts of the Southwest.

A MAN in Boston who was brought up at the police court for drunkenness did not escape a fine, though it was his first offense within a year he could not have been punished under the new Massachusetts law. The justice fined him for snoring. The snores which he poured forth from the doorway into which he sank down for a drunken slumber startled the neighborhood and even attracted the attention of the policeman who arrested him. The judge was right. Snoring as many people snore should be a punishable offense in every State.

THERE is a kind of a summer girl out here in the West whom you never read of in the papers. Her neighbors do not associate her with cool white dresses, idleness, novels, and hammocks, but they think vastly more of her. She is the kind of a summer girl who puts up fruit in the hot kitchen, who is her mother's help, and who knows more about the ingredients for making a peach cobbler than she does about the latest style of a lawn-tennis dress. She is the Western man's ideal of all a summer girl should be, and all wise men of the East agree with him after they have tasted some of her cooking.

IF a man will let his children be idle, he should not wonder that they get into mischief, and do something to disgrace him before they get through. All the men who ever amounted to anything had to work almost as soon as they could walk. If nine out of ten of the boys and girls of 12 or 15 years had to sum up the work they do through the day, it would not amount to more than two hours at the most. The rest of the day is spent in idleness, and idleness is the foundation of trouble. No one ever amounted to anything by having a good time, but that seems to be the greatest hope most parents have for their children.

POOR Hippolyte is in a fair way to lose the Presidency of Hayti for sheer lack of the sinews of war. He has been trying to borrow from the merchants of Port-au-Prince, but they have refused to lend him any money unless the Haytian Government will assure the redemption of $500,000 in paper issued under Legitime's administration, which has never been paid, even in part. The adherents of Legitime would probably promise this or anything else just at the present juncture, so they may be able to outbid Hippolyte and get him out of the way. Hayti must be a charming place of residence for people of quiet and domestic tastes.

ACCORDING to a late census bulletin, the number of paupers in the almshouses of this country in 1890 was 73,045, against 66,203 in 1880. There were also about 24,220 out-door poor who were permanently supported at public expense. A hundred thousand paupers is a startling number, and though the census figures apparently show that they are fewer in comparison with the total population than they were ten years ago, no one will be prepared to believe that in reality the per cent. of pauperism has diminished during that time. The rush of people to the cities and the enormous immigration tend in the other direction.

THE value of titles in Great Britain is illustrated by the latest that have been conferred. Mr. Harris, a London theatrical manager, is knighted because of the manner in which he entertained the Emperor of Germany during his recent visit; and the Lord Mayor of the little "core" of London called the "City" is made baron for his speech and other flunkyism on the same occasion. But, after all, these origins of title are more creditable than some ancient ones now considered blue-blooded. The accomplishments of a theater manager and the bows, scrapes, toggery, and toadyism of a petty magistrate are worthier fountains for honor, such as it is, than the vices of monarchs and the crimes of courtiers which gave life to so many aristocratic roots that flourish like green bays now.

AS ONE instance of the way in which men are sometimes entangled in a train of circumstances from which only a Vidocq or a Gaboriau could extricate them, the accident which recently happened to a traveling man in Milwaukee is in point. Presumably all Gaboriau's stories are fictions, but this tale comes from a newspaper correspondent and therefore must be true. The traveling man in question represented a champagne house. He did it very diligently, and then went to his hotel, climbed into the bath tub, fell asleep with the water running and was nearly drowned. Had his nose sunk two inches lower the newspapers would have reported a suicide. No power on earth could have proved that he did not drown himself intentionally. No detective could have shown conclusively that death was accidental. There is enough in the incident to make one reflect that it is wise not to judge appearances. In a fight between a man and a set of conspiring circumstances the man has no show whatever. To condemn a dead man for supposed suicide on suspicion is in many cases to commit a slander.

Gracefulness of Girls.

"A girl who sits ungracefully is a rarity," said an artist to a New York Sun reporter. "The sex's poses on a chair are instinctively and unconsciously sightly. Then why will not girls practice a good carriage? They spend hours of prayer and effort over their hands and make-up, yet everybody knows a fine figure is the most important requisite of all. Any face can be rendered attractive by expression. Any face for which we care becomes beautiful to us. But even love can only soften dislike to regret over a round-shouldered, hollow-chested form. Good carriage induces a good figure. It at least throws such lines as you have into an adjustment of harmony. It will make your dresses fit better, last longer, and look finer while they last. A head well carried comes soon to be 'well poised.' Shoulders well squared back fill up your bodice and improve your silhouette as well as your profile. Hips well balanced make your gowns drape gracefully in spite of your dressmaker. Feet that come down to the ground prettily come near to being pretty feet. Even an ugly hand escapes criticism if well used. A short neck is forgotten if one's head moves well. If women would spend their time bathing, rubbing, and exercising, they would have something to show for it. Instead, they sit around in 'masks' or make themselves hideous over night. They use washes, prescriptions, and oils, and they don't half wash. Oh, yes, that is true. Many women, especially those addicted to greases, do not half wash. Absolute cleanliness—sweet, wholesome, dainty cleanliness—is the best and only safe cosmetic in the world."

GROUND-HOG day is not recognized as an institution in Germany, but they have an annual occasion which they call wurst tag (sausage day is a free translation), and that amounts to about the same thing.

DEATH IN THE POT.

DAVID A. WELLS ON THE WOOL TARIFF.

He Shows Its Effects in Increasing the Use of Shoddy—Consumption and Pneumonia from the Tariff Standpoint—How Our Death Rate Is Affected by Shoddy.

The Wool Tariff.

Hon. David A. Wells has recently written a striking article on the wool tariff for the New York World. He takes as his text the Bible words, "There is death in the pot," applying them to the enormous development of the shoddy business by reason of the tax on wool, and the injurious effects of shoddy clothing upon the health of the people.

After calling attention to the analysis made by the New York Dry Goods Economist to show that our manufacturers who favor a high tax on wool use comparatively little wool in making their so-called "woolen goods," while those manufacturers who are asking for free wool are makers of good, honest fabrics, Mr. Wells concludes:

"In view of these revelations, is it a mere coincidence, as the Economist pertinently asks, that the men engaged in the business of making bogus woolens and employing skilled designers, as they undoubtedly do, not so much for producing attractive fabrics as for ingeniously hiding from the public their inferior nature, should be stanch advocates of a high tariff on wool; while the manufacturers of all-wool goods are in favor of free wool? Is not the explanation to be found in the fact that high-taxed wool means to its advocates a larger market for productions composed mainly of shoddy, cotton, cow-hair, and little wool? while the advocate of free wool feels that if he had all the wool markets of the world to draw from on the same basis as his foreign competitors he could meet the large domestic demand for heavy woolens with goods made of all or nearly all wool. It is interesting also to note that while a large class of American wool manufacturers—such men as E. B. Bigelow, J. Wiley Edmonds, Theodore Pomeroy, and their special representative, John L. Hayes—were unanimous in 1866 in characterizing shoddy as 'a worthless material,' and earnest in their petition to Congress to save the American people from the calamity of its use, the representatives and successors of these same men are now equally agreed that shoddy properly prepared 'is an innoxious and most serviceable material,' and that it is only through its extensive use that the American people can have cheap clothing and appear well dressed. Of course this latter proposition has foundation so long as a fiscal policy (which these same friends of shoddy advocate) is maintained that prevents the American people from having a proper and natural supply of wool, and which if abrogated would not only render the use of shoddy as a condition for producing cheap clothing to a great extent unnecessary, but would make feasible the production of clothing that was equally cheap, and at the same time warm, healthy and durable. In short, was there ever a better illustration of the wise maxim, that the great art in all cases of fraud upon the public is to get up a quantum sufficit of the wrong, and then set the abomination to defend itself.

"Now, wherein is the pertinency of these facts to the Scriptural text adopted as the title of this article, 'There Is Death in the Pot?' Just here: The tariff taxes imposed on that proportion of the wool consumption of the country—about 300,000,000 pounds—which the country does not produce, and which it is needful to import, augment the price of all wool clothing to the American masses to a degree that they cannot or are unwilling to pay. Let any one who desires to test this matter for himself inquire at any respectable furnishing store the relative prices of undoubted all-wool fabrics, and of the fabrications that ordinarily pass under the name of woolens, and he will be abundantly satisfied. The result is that the masses buy at some popular price something for their clothing which is called 'woolen,' but which is not rightfully entitled to any such designation—something like the fabrics before referred to produced in Philadelphia, and analyzed by the Dry-Goods Merchant, which were composed of 72 per cent. of cotton and shoddy. The climate of the United States, especially of its northern portions, is, as everybody knows, liable to sudden and extreme changes in temperature, and for the practically six winter months of the year, it is most essential that all exposed to such changes should be warmly and substantially clad. No one in their senses, would knowingly venture into atmosphere, charged with conditions favoring 'grip,' pneumonia, and the varied throat and lung ailments or diseases, clad in cotton garments. And yet this is exactly what the workingmen and poorer classes of the country do habitually under a tariff system that prevents the proper and healthful use of wool for the most ordinary clothing purposes. Does not this condition of things also suggest a possible explanation of the fact that while the mortality from consumption and pneumonia in the United States is greater than from any other causes, the rate per 100,000 deaths annually in this country from these diseases is far greater than in the cold and more damp climates of England and Wales.

"In 1880 the mortality from consumption in the United States was at the rate of 12,059 in every 100,000 deaths and 8,330 from pneumonia. The corresponding figures for the same year in England and Wales were 9,141 for consumption and 4,772 for pneumonia.

"Certainly the man who wears the cheap coat, which the high tariff on wool compels him to wear, is like to become very cheap before he gets through wearing it.

"Concerning the sanitary influence of the excessive use of shoddy in the United States as a material for the manufacture of clothing, a spirit of fairness requires the statement that when properly prepared, as it undoubtedly is in most cases, its original earthy or organic impurities are wholly or in a great degree eliminated from it or destroyed by the processes of carding, spinning, boiling, dyeing and steaming to which it is subjected in its conversion into fabrics. But as all these processes are costly and are not primarily undertaken from sanitary considerations, the tendency is to regard the purification of shoddy, in its largest sense, in the course of its manufacture, as an incidental matter, in respect to which any special effort is not necessary. But be this as it may, shoddy is not wool, and if the wearers of clothing largely made from it and purchased because it is cheap could know of its genesis they would one and all be earnest and uncompromising opponents of any law or policy, like our existing tariff, which restricts them from using wool, cheap, healthy and of far greater enduring properties, in its place.

"The experience thus selected and above set forth as an illustration of the influences prejudicial to public health arising from unnatural legislative restrictions on the free use of commodities that enter largely into the living and well-being of the masses is not exceptional. Many others similar and even more striking might be cited.

"Indeed it may be regarded as a general rule that when the natural and free supply of any article in common use by the masses is artificially restricted, the tendency is to fall back upon and use an inferior substitute, and for the general plane of living to be thereby lowered. Such a policy undoubtedly is productive of gain to a comparatively few, but is certainly a nemesis of evil to the many."

Divided Counsels at the Helm.

It is really painful to hear two such eminent statesmen as our President and Maj. McKinley expressing views so out of harmony with each other. The President waxes eloquent about opening "the markets of our sister republics in Central and South America to the products of American shops and farms;" yet the great tariff-maker said in Congress last year: "If we would invade the world's markets harsher conditions and greater sacrifices would be demanded of the masses."

Alas, the good old ship Protection is veering about at sea in a most aimless condition. There is first one helmsman and then another at the wheel, and no one seems to know what port they are trying to make. They are not even agreed on so simple a question as whether foreign trade is a good thing or not.

Is the President willing to abandon his reciprocity dreams in order not to demand those "harsher conditions and greater sacrifices" from the masses? Or is McKinley willing this year to have our farmers enter markets in which last year he professed to see only the most ruinous competition for them? Yet even McKinley is now making public rejoicings on the stump in Ohio that our foreign trade is greater than ever.

Where will these helmsmen steer their ship?

Cheap Tin-Plate Boasts.

And now the tin-plate epidemic has struck Baltimore again, it having been quiescent there since last fall, when a bogus report was in circulation that an enormous plant was to be established in that city to manufacture tin plate. Report now says that the firm of Coates & Co. will build a large establishment at Locust Point, near Baltimore.

A curious feature in connection with this report is an interview in the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record with Dr. L. R. Coates, the head of the firm, in which that gentleman boasts thus:

"From all that we have been able to learn, we have reached the conclusion that tin-plate can be made as cheaply in the United States as in Wales, in France, in Germany, or in any other part of the world."

This is the same boast which was made two years ago by W. C. Cronemyer, Secretary of the American Tinned-Plate Association at Pittsburg, Pa. In a published circular this gentleman said:

"And it is a fact, and we can prove it by figures, that they can be made here and sold with profit at present selling prices."

Notwithstanding this assertion of our ability to make tin-plate without any increase of duty, the patriotic Mr. Cronemyer was one of the most active and persistent workers securing the present duty of 2 1-5 cents per pound.

If these tin-plate people speak the truth, why do we need that high McKinley duty?

Protective Wages in Italy.

A correspondent of that hide-bound protection organ, the Chicago Inter Ocean, writes to that paper from Venice, Italy, an account of a visit to a lace-making establishment in that city. The correspondent has the following to say about wages:

"I was shown some wonderful articles—scarfs, shawls, mantles, spreads, handkerchiefs, etc.—some of which required six months in the making, offered to me at what I thought were ridiculously low prices. When I expressed my astonishment and asked how it was possible to dispose of so exquisite a fabric for such an insignificant sum the manager of the department—who has been in America and knows something of its conditions—looked sidelong at me and said, with an eloquent smile: 'Well, we pay our girls seven cents a day.'"

Imported Industries.

Protectionists are excessively jubilant whenever they can print a report that some European manufacturer has been compelled by the McKinley law to set up a branch establishment in this country. But these European manufacturers will take away every penny that they make. What becomes then of that venerable superstition about protection keeping our money in the country?

The muddle-headed protectionists tell us very glibly that under protection two profits are kept in the country, the profit made by the manufacturer and that made by the buyer of his goods. This is not true; but if it were, what about the profit made in the American branch factory of some great European manufacturer? Does it not take to itself wings and fly away to Europe?

Prunes and Prune-Eaters.

It is estimated that the United States consumes annually about 85,000,000 pounds of prunes. The greater part of these is imported. The domestic supply is produced wholly on the Pacific coast, the output in 1890 being about 16,000,000 pounds. These California prunes are so much better than foreign prunes that they sell readily in New York at considerably higher prices.

Nearly all imported prunes, except those coming from France, are of a common quality and are bought by all housewives of modest means.

Yet McKinley doubled the duty on the imported prunes of the poor in order to guarantee higher profits still to California prune growers, who sell their product to the rich.

An Awkward Coincidence.

It is too bad that almost on the very day Major McKinley delivered his beautiful peroration about the protective tariff "securely shielding American labor from the degrading competition of the old world" the Trades and Labor Assembly of Chicago should find that many women in that city are working twelve or thirteen hours daily for $1.50 per week. Perhaps it would be a wise plan, since protective tariffs are such good things, to let Chicago have one all by herself. Her women might then be able to earn $2 per week.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

FREE sugar is opening the eyes of the people as to the effects of a tariff tax. A "Republican Workingman" writes to the New York Press thus: "On account of sugar being free, the poor man can to-day purchase three and a half pounds of granulated sugar for 16 cents. If other imports were free, why could not he buy as cheap and have more luxuries than heretofore."

HENRY CABOT LODGE predicts that the tariff will not be the leading issue in the campaign of 1892, but he anticipates that "able Democratic editors" will see in this prediction an illustration of the old saying that "the wish is father to the thought." Republican losses on the tariff issue in Massachusetts would lend color to this Democratic view.

MCKINLEY doubled the duty on oatmeal, although we export enormous quantities every year, and put this into his "farmers' tariff." This was pretended to be a lift for labor, but now the newly organized oatmeal trust has reduced wages at Akron, Ohio, between 40 and 50 per cent.

ALL taxes that the people pay, the government should receive.—Edward Atkinson.

FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

What Children Have Done, What They Are Doing, and What They Should Do to Pass Their Childhood Days.

Do It.

If you have a task to do, lad, do it.
Do not dally half a day; get through it.
Do not mix your work with play,
Do not loiter by the way,
Go and do it right away—do it.

If a lesson you should learn, then learn it.
If the grindstone you must turn, then turn it.
Strike out boldly like a man;
'Tis by far the better plan,
Do the very best you can, lad—do it.

If the garden you must till, then till it.
If the woodbox you should fill, then fill it.
Though the task be not so fine,
Do not fret or mope or whine,
Do your duty, line on line, lad—do it.

Should the wood pile need your strength and muscle,
Get your coat off with a lively hustle.
Every stick that you shall split
Is a tribute to your grit,
And will harm you not a whit; then do it.

Never mind it if your task seems lowly,
Never mind if your reward comes slowly.
Keep your conscience clean and white,
Keep your courage strong and bright,
And you'll surely win the fight; then do it.

If you're good for anything you'll show it.
Never fear but that the world will know it.
Just pursue your quiet way,
Make the best of every day,
Do your duty while you may, lad—do it.
—M. E. Sanford, in Golden Days.

The Baby King.

The anecdotes current about little Don Alfonso are simply innumerable, and, appealing as they do to every mother's heart, go far toward increasing the popularity of the throne throughout Spain.

He is exceedingly frank and unrestrained in the expression of his opinions, especially when they concern the personal appearance of his lieges, and although extremely disconcerting to the parties immediately concerned, they constitute a source of delight to everybody else. It was only with the greatest difficulty that his mother was able to impress upon him the necessity of abstaining from making remarks of this character in an audible tone of voice at church. Her admonishments, however, bore unexpected fruit. The King manifestly took it for granted that the instructions to remain quiet and silent during divine service applied to others as well as to himself, for shortly afterward, when the royal family and the court attended mass in state at the Attocha Church, little Don Alfono suddenly interrupted the preacher in the midst of his most impassioned and eloquent peroration by commanding him, in a shrill and piping tone of voice, to be still, and not to make "such a noise in the church."

A KIND-HEARTED lady found a youngster crying against a wall on Race street. "What's the matter, bubby?" she asked. And bubby answered: "How would you like to wear your long-legged brother's pants cut down so the bag of the knees came out at your ankle?"—Philadelphia Record.

"SAY, Fred." said a lad, who in spite of his youth takes a good deal of interest in diplomatic matters, "let's play diplomacy." "I don't know how." "I'll show you. The first thing for you to do is to go into the parlor and I'll go into the dining-room; and then we'll write letters to each other."—Washington Post.

PUPILS who learn "by ear," without thought as to the meaning of things, contrive to afford a good deal of amusement to their teachers. Recently a teacher in a grammar-school asked one of her boys: "What is the meaning of 'topaz'?" "A topaz," said the boy, "is where the mules walk when they're drawing a canal-boat."

THE Bangor Commercial prints a story of an Auburn girl who is likely to make an excellent newspaper reporter in the natural course of events. She came home from the grammar school and asked her mother to help her with a composition upon a certain assigned topic. She sat down to write and her mother began to dictate the composition word for word. "Oh, that's not what I want at all!" exclaimed the girl. "You just give me the facts and I will embellish them."

RITA is a little woman who lives in Brooklyn. She cares faithfully for a nurseryful of dolls, though of them she loves best the rag baby. Rita is only 3, but she looks forward to the days when she may be charged with the responsibility of living dolls. She has made up her mind already what names to give her little people of that faint and far off generation. "I shall have a lot of girls," she says, "and call 'em A, B, C, D, and so on, right froo the letters." "And your boys?" "Oh, if I have boys," says wise Miss Rita, "I'll just number 'em one, two, free; free's enough for boys."—New York Recorder.

A WONDERFULLY precocious 5-year-old girl listened, apparently taking no notice, the other afternoon, to a conversation between her mother and a visiting friend. The ladies were discussing the financial straits of a young married couple of their acquaintance, and both freely wondered and expressed their displeasure at the conduct of the wife's parents in the case. The condition would be so much ameliorated, they decided, if Mr. and Mrs. S——, living alone in a wealthy, luxurious home, would bring the young people under their roof, and thus they chatted over the matter. That night little Lida aroused her mother near midnight. She hurried to the crib in the next room to her own to find the child wide awake and evidently full of absorbing thought. "I can't sleep, mamma," said the youngster, "because I'm afraid when I grow up and am married you'll be like that other lady and not let my husband come to live in your house." The astonished mother quieted her little daughter's anxiety by promptly promising in any circumstances to receive her future son-in-law, after which young Lida sunk into peaceful slumber.—New York Times.

"German Syrup"

J. C. Davis, Rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, Eufaula, Ala.: "My son has been badly afflicted with a fearful and threatening cough for several months, and after trying several prescriptions from physicians which failed to relieve him, he has been perfectly restored by the use of two bottles of Boschee's German Syrup. I can recommend it without hesitation." Chronic severe, deep-seated coughs like this are as severe tests as a remedy can be subjected to. It is for these long-standing cases that Boschee's German Syrup is made a specialty. Many others afflicted as this lad was, will do well to make a note of this.

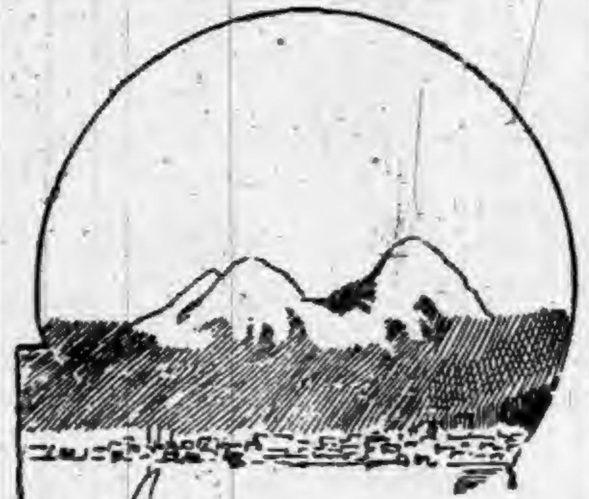
SWISS INDEPENDENCE.

A REPUBLIC SIX HUNDRED YEARS OLD.

Story of the Foundation of the League of the Swiss Cantons—The Original Compact Signed in August, 1291—Progress Toward Republicanism—Six Hundredth Anniversary.

Switzerland recently celebrated with simple yet picturesque ceremonies the six hundredth anniversary of the immortal compact of the brave men of the Three Valley cantons against the Austrian despotism. The shepherd warriors of Schwyz, Uri, and the Unterwalden are accounted the real founders of that republican form of government which seems as fresh and vital at the end of the sixth century of its operation as it was when first tried. Every Swiss believes as firmly in the story of William Tell as if no intrusive skeptics had ever questioned the fact of his existence. The story of Arnold Winkelreid and his heroic self-sacrifice when he made a path for Liberty by gathering the Austrian spears to his manly breast is still taught and told in every hamlet among the Alps.

Italian, German and French Swiss rally with equal readiness around the national legends, and we have to-day before us the phenomenon of a little country with barely three millions of population which can muster an army almost two hundred thousand strong, and which would give the best-trained troops in Europe a terrible struggle before they could violate the neutrality of the oldest of republics.

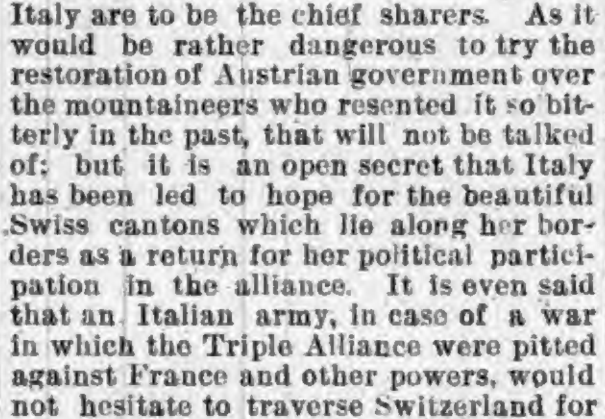


BRUNNEN.

In these days, when the tendency in Europe is toward consolidation, Switzerland is regarded as little less than a miracle. Her independence, and her evident resolve to perpetuate it, are the admiration even of those who would like to have her territory. Germany is popularly supposed to contemplate the annexation of all German Switzerland. Some day when the fortunes of war permit it, there will be those who say that Switzerland is included in the German domains on that official map of "Greater Germany," which hangs in some closely-guarded room in the Berlin War Office. It is certain that the Swiss watch the mountain climbings of the spectaled German professors and their freckled-faced wives with much suspicion, convinced that they are making topographical maps for use in some future campaign.

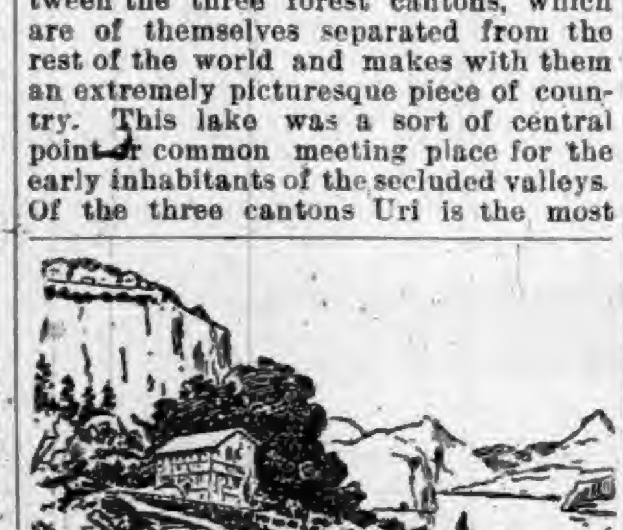
In the dreams of the Triple Alliance it is said there are visions of a divided Switzerland, in which Germany and Italy are to be the chief sharers. As it would be rather dangerous to try the restoration of Austrian government over the mountaineers who resented it so bitterly in the past, that will not be talked of; but it is an open secret that Italy has been led to hope for the beautiful Swiss cantons which lie along her borders as a return for her political participation in the alliance. It is even said that an Italian army, in case of a war in which the Triple Alliance were pitted against France and other powers, would not hesitate to traverse Switzerland for the purpose of falling upon France. In this case Switzerland would become an involuntary ally of the French, for she will certainly defend her neutrality to the utmost.

The league of Swiss cantons is not, like our own union of States, the result of a single act or series of acts. It is a growth of time, but it may be said to have taken its start on Aug. 1. 1291, when the districts of Uri, Schwyz, and Unterwalden entered into a perpetual league or defensive alliance. Sixty days after the swearing of this oath of friendship Canton Zurich entered into a defensive league with Schwyz and Uri, and these acts of the union cleared the way for what was soon an actual league. These early events, and those that followed, are closely identified with those most interesting creators of history, or creatures of romance or tradition, as the case may be, William Tell, Vernor, and Gessler. They are all figures in the epoch which opened with the acquisition of a charter of liberties for Uri in 1231, and closed with the great victory of Morgarten in 1315.



SCHWYZ.

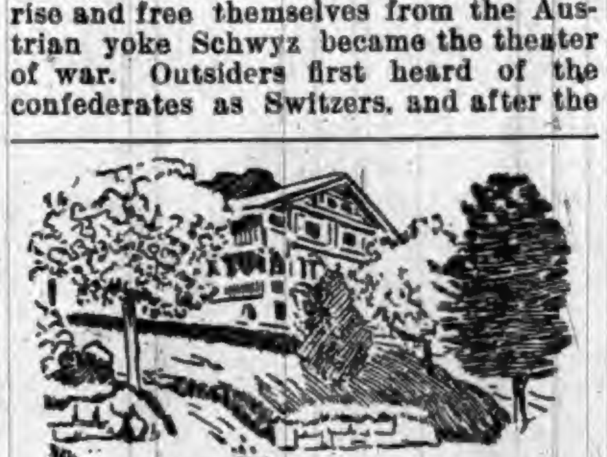
It was no desire for startling reform that led those people of three small forest cantons to band themselves into a "League of Perpetual Alliance" in 1291. The confederation was simply for the purpose of checking the inroads of Hapsburgers. A beautiful lake extends between the three forest cantons, which are of themselves separated from the rest of the world and makes with them an extremely picturesque piece of country. This lake was a sort of central point or common meeting place for the early inhabitants of the secluded valleys. Of the three cantons Uri is the most mountainous and ruggedly picturesque, while the other two have more of a pastoral character with rolling meadows and green fields. The people are now and have always been a sturdy, bold, persevering, as well as self-reliant and conservative, set, and it was from such a country and from such men there came forth the three famous Eidgenossen—Walter Furst von Attinghausen, Arnold von Melchtal, and Werner Staufacher—who met on the Gruetli, each with ten chosen companions, on Nov. 17, 1307, and bound themselves together to save their country from their cruel rulers.



GRUETLI.

It was previous to this however, that Uri, Schwyz, and Unterwalden formally reconfirmed in writing a bond to protect and defend their liberties in common. Before 1291 any such agreement if it existed at all, existed only verbally. This interesting document in writing virtually constitutes the first authenticated evidence of the founding of the Swiss Republic. To this instrument were affixed the seals of the three countries as a guarantee of its genuineness.

Schwyz was probably the most enterprising of the three, and the best organized politically, and when they swore to rise and free themselves from the Austrian yoke Schwyz became the theater of war. Outsiders first heard of the confederates as Switzers, and after the glorious success of Morgarten the other cantons were willing enough to take her name for their young league.

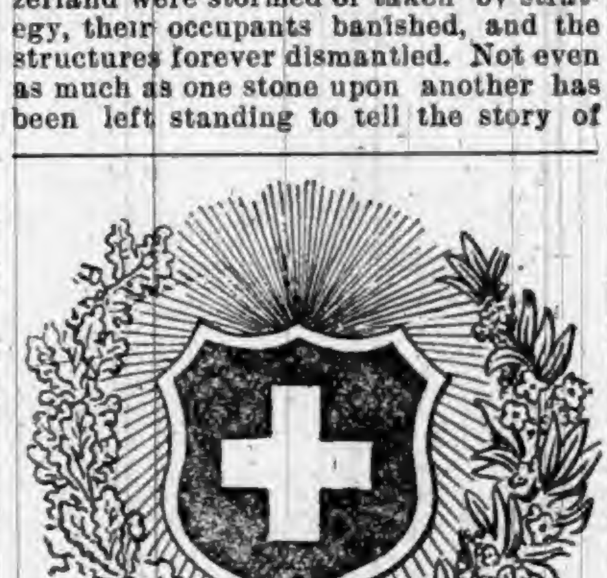


GRUETLI AS IT IS NOW.

The latter part of the reign of Rudolf III. of Hapsburg, Austria, over the rough Alpine cantons was anything but a peaceful one. There were numerous petty insurrections, and when Rudolf died in 1291, and the good news reached the forest cantons, the hopes there entertained of liberty and a recovery of ancient rights broke forth. The people were wary, however. They may not have been familiar with the old fable of the bundle of sticks, but they realized that in union there was strength. At any rate within a few weeks after Rudolf's death, the districts of Uri, Schwyz, and Unterwalden entered into their pepetual covenant for mutual protection.

The acts of agreement were all drawn up in Latin, and the document itself is safely preserved to this day in the archives of the canton of Schwyz. Naturally it is looked upon with feelings of the deepest regard and veneration by the entire Swiss people. With it are preserved a number of other papers, supplementary and of a similar character. Its authenticity is well attested and is practically unquestioned.

On the 17th of November, 1307, the popular well-known "oath of the Gruetli" or declaration of Swiss independence was solemnly enacted in the little glen of that name on the borders of the Vierwaldstatter Lake, and but little over a month later, on the morning of the 1st of January, 1308, by common accord the castles of all of the foreign bailiffs claiming to rule in that section of Switzerland were stormed or taken by strategy, their occupants banished, and the structures forever dismantled. Not even as much as one stone upon another has been left standing to tell the story of the attempted foreign rule over the sturdy farmers in these Alpine valleys.



THE SWISS COAT OF ARMS.

Attempts to recover possession of the country were made by the adherents of Austria, resulting in the first battle of Swiss independence, that of Morgarten, fought Nov. 15. 1315, when 1,300 Swiss, posted in a favorable position, routed 20,000 men under Leopold of Austria. Later on, July 9, 1386, in the same region, at Sempach, 1,400 Swiss, through the ever memorable self-sacrifice of Arnold von Winkelried, completely routed the flower of Austrian nobility and chivalry.

Geographical Names.

There has lately been established, by order of President Harrison, a "Board on Geographic Names" of the United States, made up of several officers of departments and bureaus of the Government. It is charged with the duty of deciding all unsettled questions concerning geographic names which arise in the departments.

The decisions of this board on all disputed points connected with the spelling of the names of places, rivers, mountains, and so forth, and of the names themselves, will henceforth be accepted as authority by the departments of the Government, and eventually, no doubt, by the publishers of maps and text-books.

The way in which this new board works may be illustrated by a single case.

Most of the text-books spell the name of the great arm of the Pacific Ocean between Alaska and Siberia Behring or Behring's Sea. It has always been known, however, since the sea bore this name, that it was derived from the Danish navigator, Vitus Jonassen Bering, who, while in the Russian naval service, first explored this sea early in the eighteenth century.

Bering Russianized his Danish name into Ivan Ivanovitch Bering. Although the Russians have always spelled the name of the sea Bering, the Germans introduced an h into the name, and their spelling has been followed by English and American map-makers. The board, to which the matter was referred, has corrected the spelling, and in all Government documents henceforth it will be Bering Sea, not Behring Sea.

Among the other disputed points of spelling the following may be noted:

It is Chile, not Chili; Fiji Islands, not Feejee: Governors Island, New York, not Governor's; Hudson River, New York, and Hudson Bay, Canada, not Hudson's; Kongo River, Africa, not Congo; Hongkong, China, not Hong Kong; Puerto Rico, West Indies, not Porto Rico; Mount Rainier, Washington, not Mount Tacoma.

The principles adopted by the board require the adoption in general of the spelling and pronunciation that are sanctioned by local usage. The possessive case is avoided wherever possible.

The decisions respecting foreign names are in accordance with the English official system of geographical naming and spelling. In these foreign names the vowels are pronounced as in the Italian language, and the consonants as in the English. For instance, in Java, Banana, Somali, and Bari the a is pronounced as in father; in Fiji and Hindi the i is like English ee in beet; au is like ow in cow, so that we have Fuchau, not Foochow. The hard c is rejected for k, and we have Korea, not Corea.

THERE never were two sick people who could agree on which one was suffering the most.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

Lewis Clarke, the Prototype of Its Famous Character, "George Harris."

No book of modern times has enjoyed a wider popularity or more largely affected the moral or political thought of the world than Uncle Tom's Cabin, says a writer in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper. And no character in that book awakened profounder interest than its hero, George Harris, the handsome, stalwart and intelligent young mulatto, the down-trodden victim of the slavery system in the South, who subsequently escaped. George Harris' prototype is Lewis Clarke, now quietly living with his family in Kentucky. Clarke was born a slave in Madison County, Ky., in 1815. He was sold at auction sale when 16 years old. Ill treatment and a desire for learning impelled him to essay his escape to Canada, the bondsman's Mecca. After several years of slow progress northward he found his way to Cambridgeport, Mass., where he was kindly received by Dr. Lyman Beecher, remaining in the family for six years. From him Dr. Beecher's daughter, Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, received much of the material for her famous novel, and Lewis Clarke, the real, became George Harris, the ideal. Mr. Clarke is now 76 years old, with a refined face, silken snow-white locks that curl about his head, and a skin of Caucasian fairness.

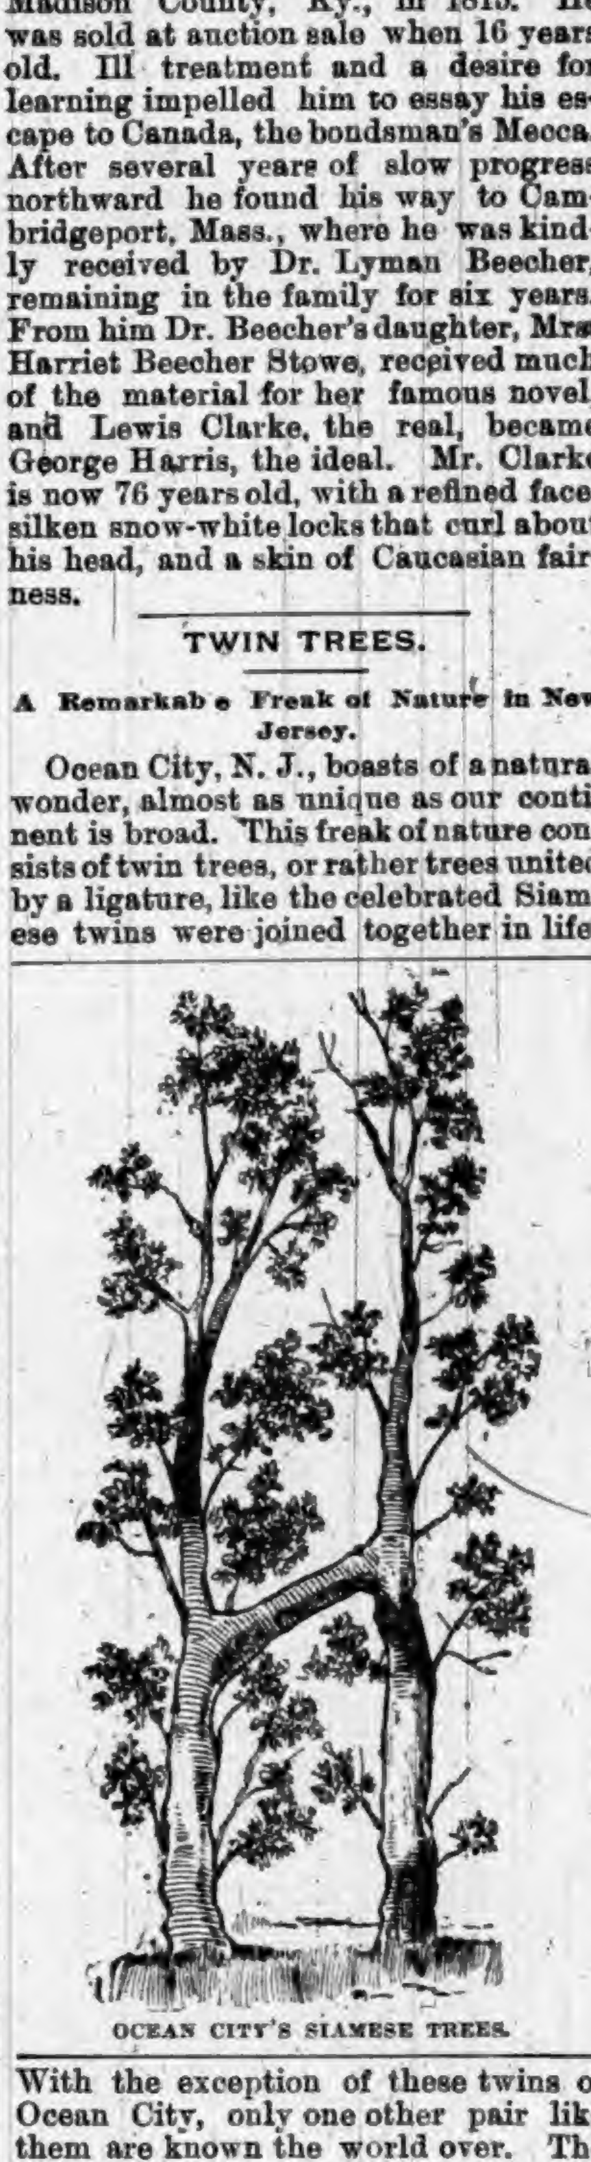
TWIN TREES.

A Remarkable Freak of Nature in New Jersey.

Ocean City, N. J., boasts of a natural wonder, almost as unique as our continent is broad. This freak of nature consists of twin trees, or rather trees united by a ligature, like the celebrated Siamese twins were joined together in life.



OCEAN CITY'S SIAMESE TREES.

With the exception of these twins of Ocean City, only one other pair like them are known the world over. The other pair were recently discovered in California and are of much larger size than those which grow here.

The seashore twins are the "Holly Tree." They are about thirty feet in height and six inches in diameter. At four and a half feet from the ground they are joined by a branch growing from one tree into the other. This branch is two inches through the middle, and grows larger as it approaches the trunks of both trees, which are fifteen inches apart from each other.

This freak in living wood is a puzzle to the botanist and scientist almost as great as the Siamese twins in their day were to the anatomist and physiologist.

Summary Execution.

A despotic government has its advantages, and among them is the easy collection of a debt, provided the ruler is friendly to the creditor. Ahmed Vefyk Pasha, a Turkish statesman, was once Governor of Broussa, and this story is told of his paternal rule:

A rich man had judgment pronounced against him in favor of a poor man. The latter, owing to the bribes of the rich man, could not obtain execution, and complained to Ahmed Vefyk. After hearing the case, Ahmed saw the debtor riding up to the Konak upon a beautiful Arab horse. He ordered the creditor to sit down, called a messenger, and whispered to him.

The debtor entered the room, and was surprised at the exceptional cordiality of the pasha, who invited him to sit down, to take coffee, and to converse. Presently, when he rose to leave, the pasha pressed him to remain, and kept him more than an hour, until, indeed, a messenger entered the room and placed a small bag on the table before Ahmed.

When the debtor next rose, Ahmed took the bag from the table and gave it to him, stating, "This is yours. You owed so much to this poor man, I have sold your horse, paid him, and this is the balance belonging to you."

The Game of Gossip.

One of the company leaves the room. This person should be one who is well known and who can take the jokes in good part. Slips of paper are distributed and each of the company writes a bit of gossip about the exile. The slips are then gathered and given to the reader, and the exile is permitted to guess the author of each bit of gossip. But one guess is permitted for each slip, and the first one whose work is correctly guessed becomes the next exile.

THE wicked flee when no man pursueth, but they scratch gravel a bit faster when they are pursued just the same.

A Lady of Tact.

After the close of the war of the Revolution, several ladies from Philadelphia visited England. Their elegance and beauty compelled the admiration of even the prejudiced court of George the Third. "Well," said a London hair-dresser, as he was dressing the hair of the ladies of our minister's (John Adams) family on a court-day, "it does not signify, but the American ladies do beat the English all to nothing." One of the ladies thus complimented was Mrs. Bingham, the wife of a United States Senator from Pennsylvania. She was remarkable both for her beauty and for the ease and politeness of her manners. Such was the charm of her behavior that she fascinated all who sought her society. Even the servants seemed to serve her from affection rather than for wages. An anecdote illustrates exquisite tact and politeness, which could turn even the rudeness of a guest into an occasion for paying him greater honor.

Samuel Chase, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, was a man of talents and of bad manners. On the bench he was despotic, and in society he asserted himself, no matter what man or woman he might thereby jostle.

While holding court in Philadelphia, he was honored by Mr. Bingham with a grand dinner-party, and placed on Mrs. Bingham's right hand. Coolly adjusting his spectucles and looking over the elegant dinner, which had been prepared by a French cook, he said to her,—

"A very pretty dinner, madam; but there is not a thing on your table that I can eat."

"And with what might I serve you that would be agreeable?" answered the urbane lady, not in the least ruffled by her guest's rudeness.

"A beefsteak, or a piece of roast beef, madam, will please me better than anything else."

A word was whispered in a servant's ear, and the lady's witty talk hardly allowed the judge to notice that he was waiting, while the other guests were eating.

When the servant re-appeared with a dish of roast beef, Judge Chase attacked it with the vigor of a keen appetite. Having satisfied it, he turned to his hostess, and with the air of one who had conferred a favor by eating at her table, said,—

"There, madam, I have made a sensible and excellent dinner, but no thanks to your French cook."

Mrs. Bingham smiled as graciously as if she had received a compliment instead of a rude criticism. But tradition does not record that his "Honor" ever had another opportunity to pass judgment on Mrs. Bingham.

A paint for floors, which economizes the use of oil colors and varnish, is described in the German technical press as having been composed by Herr Mareck. It is remarked that this paint can also be used on wood, stone, etc. For flooring, the following mixture has been found applicable: 2½ ounces of good, clear joiner's glue is soaked over night in cold water. It is dissolved, and then it is added (being constantly stirred) to thickish milk of lime heated to boiling point and prepared from one pound of quicklime. Into boiling lime is poured (the stirring being continued) as much linseed oil as becomes united by means of saponification with the lime, and when the oil no longer mixes there is no more poured in. If there happens to be too much oil poured in, it must be combined by the addition of some fresh lime paste. For the quantity of lime previously indicated, about half a pound of oil is required. After this white, thickish foundation paint has cooled, a color is added which is not affected by lime, and, in case of need, the paint is diluted with water or by the addition of a mixture of lime water with some linseed oil. For yellowish-brown or brownish-red shades, about a fourth part of the entire bulk is added of a brown solution obtained by boiling shellac and borax with water. This mixture is specially adapted for painting floors. The paint should be applied uniformly, and is described as covering the floor most effectually, and uniting with it in a durable manner. But it is remarked that it is not suitable for being used in cases where a room is in constant use, as under such circumstances it would probably have to be renewed in some places every three months. The most durable floor paint is said to be that composed of linseed-oil varnish, which only requires to be renewed every six or twelve months. It penetrates the wood and makes it water-resisting—its properties being thus of a nature to compensate for its higher cost in proportion to other compositions used for a similar purpose. Its use is particularly recommended in schools and workrooms, as it lessens dust and facilitates the cleaning of the boards.—Chicago Times.

Unhealthy Practice.

Doctors are fighting the long, street-sweeping dresses. Said one of them to the mother of three young lady daughters: "Let me advise you to have the dresses cleaned in the open air immediately after coming in from the street. You may not believe, but in the filth, dust, and dirt collected on the hosiery, shoes, and underwear by the trailing, flopping skirt, there is enough germ life to sicken your whole family. I have nothing to say against the fashion, but if you were in my family and addicted to it, I should compel you to play Turk and leave your shoes, stockings, and trailing robes outside the door.".

Mind Your Own Affairs.

Never take part in family quarrels, however sorely you may be tempted. The belligerents are sure to cry truce and make up their differences again, when all who ranged themselves as partisans on either side will be sacrificed without mercy. Strict neutrality is the only safe holding, and with truth and straightforwardness, and neither fetching or carrying, it is quite possible to be friends with both impartially.

Not Disconcerted.

Secretary—The people have tumbled to our $100 for $20 benefit society, and won't take any more shares."

President—We'll soon fix that. Promise them $200 for $40.—Street & Smith's Good News.

A Life Saved

Mr. Geo. Raymond, of Seneca Falls, N. Y., is a pump-setter in the employ of Ramsay & Co., the well-known pump-makers of that place. He is a member of Ramsay Engine Co. He says:

"My wife, without doubt, owes her life to Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few years ago she was at death's door, due to blood poisoning, or, as physicians say, pyæmia. After everything else failed Hood's Sarsaparilla brought her out of the crisis all right. Since then she has suffered at times with numbness and headache, but continues taking and is gradually getting over these troubles. She clings to Hood's, takes nothing else, and we believe it will effect a complete cure."

Shakers of All Creeds and Kinds are to be found in every locality visited by chills and fever. The very animals exhibit in such plague-festered regions symptoms of the dire infection. If experience has proved, in the domain of medicine, anything conclusively, it is that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will not only eradicate from the system every vestige of the miasma-born complaint but effectually defend residents and temporary sojourners in malaria-scourged localities against it. There is a general consensus of opinion among medical men, no less than in the minds of the public, on this point. Not only on this continent but in the tropics, where malarial complaints assume their most virulent type, this incomparable medicinal safeguard is universally used and esteemed. Dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, debility and kidney trouble are all thoroughly remediable by the Bitters.

An Old-Time Custom.

A resident in Clement's Inn, England, writes: "Oranges and lemons say the bells of St. Clements," according to a quaint and ancient doggerel which thousands of children have chanted while they play without knowing that the words had any other import other than the hazy ideas conveyed to young minds by nonsense rhymes. Beadles and porters of St. Clement's Inn, however, attach a practical meaning to the music of the bells. It is their custom always on New Years morning, and has been from time immemorial, to present to each tenant of chambers in the inn an orange and a lemon, accompanying the gift with wishes for a happy New Year. If all ancient customs were so honored in the observance there would be little fault to find with them.

PASTOR KOENIG'S TRADE MARK NERVE TONIC

The Best Remedy III in this world,, says J. Hoffherr, of Syracuse, N. Y., is Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic, because my son, who was partially paralyzed three years ago and attacked by fits, has not had any symptoms of them since he took one bottle of the remedy. I most heartily thank for it.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Oct. 17, 1890.

Some time ago a sunstroke so affected my nerves that at times they were beyond control; eyes were dull and without expression, and a twitching of the muscles of the face and almost continual movement of the hands and arms, especially the left side. There was impediment of speech, and at times would be so overcome with dizziness as to be unable to stand. Heard of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic; tried one bottle, and noticed a great change; tried another, and now can say that I am enjoying perfect health, steady nerves and a good appetite, which I had lost entirely before using your medicine.

THE FAIR.

All Departments Full and Overflowing and the COURIER Reporter gives Readers a Brief Description.

Monday morning was "fair to middling" as to weather but everyone who could help to make a show on the ground started out early, and at once the busy scene opened. A visit to the ground that afternoon showed many good displays under way. At the right as you enter the great expo. hall, is the display of Schaab Brothers, carpets, clothing and dry goods, all lovely. To the left we see the display of the Mammoth shoe store, with a full assortment of fine goods. Between them and the door the Auburn Woolen Mills have a booth with a splendid stock of homemade goods, blankets, flannels, yarns, skirtings, wool bats, e c S. Z. Dickinson has a profusion of rare flowers. Brown, Culbertson & Boland, are showing their new hardware goods, a full line of agricultural machinery, binders, threshers, tedders, plows, etc. In this great hall, also, we see one of Beuret's New Process Vapor stoves, that every housewife will stop to admire. Davis & Husselman show some fine "Crown" pianos and organs. J. S. Boots, very properly superintendent of Agricultural Hall, has his department full. A. W. Husselman shows here, fine vegetables, as do also, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McEnturf from the west side of the county. J. N. Wilson and son, have a nice display of all boots and shoes in their line, and S. Shaffer has a lovely and expensive display of furniture, including upholstered goods, antique oak and more nice things than one can name. Wm. Sheffer shows a big line of harness, blankets and robes of goat, dog, cow, wolf, etc. We find Mrs. Wils. Schaab presides over the needle work etc., and here, the display will rattle any man, for there is a bewildering stretch of beautiful colors, lovely goods and mysterious handiwork—well, we give it up. Go and look at it for hours, and give thanks that your wives, daughters and sisters are so skillful. Mrs. Don. Garwood assists in this department. J. F. Aber, very properly bosses the fine art hall. The display here will be fine, indeed. Rice, has a full line of photos. F. A. Borst shows a lovely picture of his children and the pony. They almost seem to move. Johnston of Adrian, has some fine pictures—one made when she was quite young. Edna Davis has landscapes and work in hammered brass. Etta Heist has landscapes and fruits in pastel work. But the most attractive, because it is strange, is the display of South American curios, by J. J. Zent, who has been traveling down there. See the painted ostrich egg, the cup for steeping and drinking the South American tea called "Matte" He will likely show some of the tea; also, a riding whip, a bridle worth $21, leather belt and knife for same, feathers, pieces of the famous rocking stone that 19 yoke of oxen could not remove, though one man can rock it back and forth. Beet Sugar.

A late paper, received from J. P. Ensley at Ontario, Cal., gives an account of the first work of the great beet sugar factory located at Chino, near that place. It is a marvelous industry, and a strange one for this country. Its introduction into this country means something, and is not like the tin industry, a mere piece of politics which will do people little or no good. And the description of the processes used in making sugar from the beets is very interesting, although difficult to understand, for after the roots are chopped up, there is little else except a series of chemical processes. Most of the machinery came from Germany, but of course, as the attention of our people is called to it, we will make our own machinery, and no doubt improve on it.

Obituary.

The funeral services were held Sept. 8, and he was interred in the Cosper cemetery. There was a large attendance of his neighbors for he had always been a most excellent citizen and was liked by all. Rev. J. D. Brosey of the Lutheran church at Auburn, preached a very able discourse. Mr. Grimm came to this country with his parents in 1827 and located in Pennsylvania. He was married at Wooster, Ohio, Oct., 21, 1841 to Mary Moore. In 1854 he came to DeKalb county, where he has since resided. The community mourns the loss of a most worthy man.

From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hurd, of Groton, S. D., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold, which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in consumption. Four doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Savior, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. Remarkable Facts.

Heart disease is usually supposed to be incurable, but when properly treated a large proportion of cases can be cured. Thus Mrs. Elmira Hatch, of Elkhart, Ind., and Mrs. L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., were cured after suffering 20 years. S. C. Limburger, druggist at San Jose, Ill., says that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which caused the former, "worked wonders for his wife." Levi Logan, of Buchanan, Mich., who had heart disease for thirty years, says two bottles made him "feel like a new man." Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold and guaranteed by F. E. Davenport. Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

The number of persons licensed as teachers during the year by the board above named, each acting independent of the others were 22, 40 and 7, or a total of 69.

Under the head of suggestions and remarks of examiners in the second annual report of the superintendent of public instruction, Mr. Fosdick said: "I think the law for the examination of teachers should be so amended as to provide for a county board or else let the townships each have an examiner. The present system is almost equivalent to no examination at all."

Mr. Dickinson wrote: I have been obliged to grant certificates to many for various periods of time or else a number of our schools would have to be without teachers; but actiong under your instruction to me while at Auburn, I have done as I have. If I have erred it is of the head and not of the heart."

There were no normal schools. What were known as teachers' institute had been organized in some counties. Prof. Rufus Patch, examiner in Lagrange Co., and principal of Lagrange Collegiate Institute dating from 1844 or four years after date of charter, had regularly sustained teachers' institutes since 1847 and wished them made a part of the school system.

These institutes are a feature of education. They were generally held at the county seat. They were attended so far as possible by the state superintendent.

In 1867, an institute was held in what was the Presbyteria church at Auburn, the attendance was less than fifty and Prof. Patch was principal instructor.

It was under the circumstances thus briefly considered that compliance with conditions of the school law was had and John Dancer was employed to teach in district No. 1, which was known as the south school in Auburn and Miss Abigail Wolsey was hired to teach in district No. 2, or the north school.

The former was to receive $60, for teaching 65 days or three months, thus teaching every other Saturday and the latter was to receive $48 for the same period, each boarding him and her self.

The enumeration of children of school age was taken by J. W. Case and the number enumerated was 160.

Patrons were given a choice of schools to which they wished to send and the schools were ordered to commence on Wednesday Dec. 7.

The second notable feature of progress of Auburn and DeKalb county has reference to the beginning of newspaper enterprise therein.

Heretofore as we have related legal printing, notably lists of land delinquent on taxes, had been done in neighboring counties.

During the early part of August 1850, S. E. Alford and H. King established the Albion Observer at Albion, Noble county. To this paper was accorded the greater part of what patronage this county had to give and so favorable an impression was made on the owner of the press that, in the spring of 1852, he contemplated its removal to Auburn and pursuant to that end, he issued a prospectus for a newspaper at that town, to be styled the "Auburn Observer."

The removal was not then made owing to a lack of encouragement sufficient to warrant the change but in the spring of 1853, the establishment was sold to Messrs Berry and Pierce who removed the outfit to Auburn, and as a forerunner of the press yet to be, began the publication of the first newspaper printed in De Kalb county under the name of The Democratic Messenger. The first number was issued on June 16th.

The proprietors had the decided advantage of personal practical knowledge of printing but their material from long use had become so worn that the typographical appearance of their paper was very imperfect, although the publishers were favored with official and popular patronage to an extent equal to their expectation and their sheet was received with general favor. The time had not come when the newspaper was a paying investment and the Messenger had a precarious and short-lived existence.

During its continuance however it proved a great convenience to the people of town and county and the records of both note the presentation and allowance of bills for advertising.

The bill of Berry & Pierce for printing for Auburn was presented Oct. 4, 1853 and was promptly passed and county printing was promised, but Mr. Berry was satisfied with less than a year's experience, sold his interest to Mr. Pierce and soon after left the town. His stay was so brief that old settlers have but a transient remembrance of him. Milton Pierce, now sole proprietor continued the publication during the years 1854 and 1855. The delinquent list of the county gave him about $115 a year and the printing of assessment forms added $50 more.

The office and contents were totally destroyed by fire during a night in January 1856 and the Democratic Messenger was not.

Mr. Pierce took an active part in the politics of the day, received the nomination for county auditor from the democratic party, in 1855 and was elected. In 1859, A. J. Hunt was his competitor, the vote was a tie.

Pierce got the office and served from 1855 to 1860. He is a present resident of West Milton, Ohio, where besides conducting his business of prosecuting claims against the government, he is writing for several different publications.

In his possession are probably, save an occasional paper, the only copies of the Democratic Messenger in existence. His own file was destroyed in the fire, but years later when Isaac Brandt sold his household goods preparatory to going west, a file of the papers was bid off by W. C. McGonigal, then editor of the DeKalb County Democrat, for $3, and presented to Mr. Pierce. The file is in good order and items of historical interest relative to Auburn in the years of its issue are thus perserved.

The office of the Messenger was in the south room third story of the Park & Ralston building which stood on the present site of the Davenport and Ralston buildings.

There W. T. Kimsey, Chas. K. Baxter and J. C. Loveland acquired their first knowledge of the profession and each afterwards became connected with the press of the county.

Mr. Kimsey published the DeKalb County Times at Auburn in 1858 and started the Butler Herald, the pioneer paper in our sister town, in 1866. It very creditably reflected the business interests of the place for a year, when the proprietor removed his press to Ligonier and started another paper.

Mr. Baxter was a veteran soldier of the civil war and served with honor in the ranks of the 19th Indiana of the famous Iron Brigade of the army of the Potomac. Associated with J. F. Radcliff, then with B. F. Kennedy, then alone, he was publisher of the Waterloo Press and under his able supervision the paper took a leading place in the press of of the northern part of our state.

He had the unusual ability of condensing into a brief paragraph strong points, cogent and expressive and when he deemed necessary, cuttingly sarcastic to opponents. He sold the Press some years since and went west to Kansas where we believe he is engaged in farming.

Mr. Loveland was in 1859 engaged as foreman in the office of the Press Republican conducted by his cousin E. P. Loveland when called to Auburn to conduct the New Era. In 1865, he removed the office to Clyde, Ohio, where he started the Clyde Times. His latest venture was the Headlight published first at Garrett and finally at Corunna, where he died.

The Fulton County Tribune thus truthfully speaks of Mr. Loveland, "Jo. stuck type in Wauseon in 1858, again in 1859 for a time. He saw the world as a tramping jour and editor, and experienced the ups and downs, as often as any member of the art preservative."

Mr. Loveland was the first apprentice boy, the first and only carrier boy of the Messenger and for whom the first and only carrier's address was ever written and published here. J. P. Widney, at the time county auditor prepared the manuscript which contained nearly one hundred lines of spicily written doggerel, in which everybody and everything in the village came in for an honorable mention.

Mr. Loveland thus wrote of the past, "The advent of the printing press in Auburn proved a six months' wonder, as many of the natives had never seen a press, and the amount of type daily dismantled by curious people during the first year of the publication kept one man busy.

We recollect that Mr. Berry, the senior proprietor was an intense hater of the Free Soilers, and it was a terrible day for us when that crowd met in convention to deliberate for 'the old man' was pretty sure to make it lively for the 'devil.' This seemed inconsistent for previous to coming to DeKalb, he had been an abolitionist himself."

Malaria.

"The excellence of Simmons Liver Regulator as a medicine for expelling Malaria from the system is beyond dispute, and we can cheerfully, from a trial of its virtue, commend it to our friends. As a remedy for disease in incipient states it cannot be excelled, and no family should be without it in the house." J. W. Brown, Ed. and Proprietor "Mineral Age," Warrior, Ala.

Echoes of The Fair.

Mr. Moody's trotter, "Mattie M." won golden opinions by the steadiness with which she maintained her gait in the race for two-year olds, on Tuesday. She was second by only a small difference.

"Colonel Sterling," F. J. Yesbera's trotting stallion went into the three-minute trot for Wednesday, with strong competition, as there were nine entries in that class. The race was hotly contested all through, but Colonel Sterling won every heat, taking the race in three straight heats, amid great excitement. He was loudly cheered as he won in each, and so was his driver, John, who has been his trainer. The time of the first heat was 2:39¼; of the second, 2:35½, and in the third and last heat it was 2:33½. Everyone got excited and cheered.

There was an accident Wednesday, as the three-minute race closed. One of the horses ran into the overset, the sulky of another, the latter running away. As he passed the judges' stand, he struck a boy named Long, hurting him severely, then ran on around the track, and came on past the stand again, the bell was struck and this assisted to stop him, as he had been trained to this. Another horse following the runaway just as the latter ran over the Long boy, ran against Phillie Gibson, knocking him senseless. He is about again, now however, though somewhat bruised. This should warn boys to keep off the track.

John Henderson had some fine delaine wool sheep, and there was an abundance of good horses and other stock, but we failed to find many of the owners "in," when on our tour of inspection.

Among the most important exhibits of home work, was the Acme Road Machine, patented and manufactured by the Auburn Foundry and Machine Works of this place. Mr. Brandon informs us that many of these excellent machines have been sold during the summer, and their popularity is such that sales will likely be even better next year.

The difficulty of getting at many exhibitors has prevented our notice of more than a small part of them. To those omitted, we would say, it would have been a pleasure to meet them, and to receive and to report any premiums they may have received.

Nicholai Bros., of Syracuse, got first in the yearling race, Tuesday, on Silver Sprague.

The most unique and attractive display of home work, was the great iron pyramid of the Eagle Iron Works.

The speed department was excellent, and gave the best of satisfaction. There was only one complaint that we heard, and that was, that the races held too late, and especially that many had to go home without seeing the great double team running race. Let us remember next year, that half of the crowd must leave between four and five o'clock.

The Auburn Windmill Co., sold seven of their popular mills while on the fair ground during fair week, and they got first premium for best windmill. Their mill is having a big run among farmers and stockraisers.

The first premium on cigars was given to the Black Diamond, the cigar made by Gregg & Richards, lately owned and operated by G. W. Weamer. The factory is the next door east of the south factory building of the Kiblinger Carriage Works, on West Eighth street.

Mrs. Wm. McIntyre got the second premium on corn bread, salt rising biscuit, wheat bread and the first on graham bread.

C. P. Houser and family received a good many premiums, Mr. H., got first on general display of table vegetables and ten first and eight second premiums on single entries in same class. Mrs. Houser got about the same number of firsts and seconds on canned fruit, pickles, etc., and the girls, Reba and Edna got first premiums on all three of the cakes they entered. Mr. Houser had about the largest display of vegetables of any one exhibitor.

H. P. Stroh made a splendid chief of police. The fence jumpers and apple stealers soon learned to respect him. One fellow with some kind of a snide game to work, objected to having Mr. Stroh come around, and finally jumped onto him. Henry promptly knocked him down, and the fellow got up and ran as if he thought the day of doom had come. Another chap was climbing up over the fence, to steal in, and Mr. Stroh kept shady till the lad struck the ground, when he caught him up with a jerk. He marched about $8 worth of chaps back to the gate to get their tickets.

J. J. Walter, got first on mammoth citrons.

SIOUX CITY CORN PALACE

That Baby!

When the baby cries every one wants to know what's the matter; and if the outcry is frequent, the chances are that there is something wrong about the food. It requires unusual facilities to be able to keep posted on all the latest ideas about feeding young children, therefore the article "How and What to Feed the the Baby," published in the October number of that progressive monthly Demorest's Family Magazine, is especially valuable to all who have anything to do with babies. It will tell you everything you need to know about baby's food from the time it is born till it can eat the regular meals of the family,—what food to give, how to prepare each kind, how much and how often the diet should be changed, with bills of fare for different ages, etc.,—and all so clearly that one cannot misunderstand the directions. Ella Wheeler Wilcox's Story, "Was it Suicide?" should be read by every woman, and all will enjoy the "Confession of a Materializing Medium;" "In the Woman's Ward of an Insane Asylum" tells a pathetic story of its own; 'Fireside Nooks and Corners" gives valuable suggestions about inexpensive but artistic house decoration; all the numerous departments are replete with valuable matter; there are nearly 200 fine illustrations; and altogether it is a remarkably fine number of this comprehensive magazine, which is published for $2 a year by W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York City.

RELENTLESS TIME

BRINGS ABOUT THESE EVENTS IN THE WIDE WORLD.

A Desperado Escapes from the Pittsburgh Jail — Prairie Fires in Texas — Two Brothers Lynched—Telegraphers Unite.

A Desperado at Large.

Pittsburgh special: Frederick C. Fitzsimmons, the murderer of Detective Gilkinson and a desperate thief, escaped from the county jail about 2 o'clock the other morning. The escape is the most daring ever effected in this part of the country. He was incarcerated in a cell in the murderer row on the first tier, awaiting his trial for murder, which was to begin next week. The prisoner gained the jail corridor by sawing the bars on his cell door. He then scaled the walls, reaching the top of the building, where he used his saw on the bars of the window overlooking the warden's residence. By a most desperate leap he gained the roof of Warden Berlin's residence; thence to the jail court by means of a lightning rod and then scaled the high stone wall by means of a rope that could have been secured only by means of outside assistance. From the top of the jail wall he jumped to the roof of a shed on the old avenue side of the jail. The escape was not discovered until 6 o'clock in the morning.

Two Brothers Lynched.

The Gilleland brothers, James and Josiah, were lynched at Somerset, Ky., by a mob for the murder of Sheriff McGargue, of Pulaski County. The mob is supposed to have come mostly from Whitley and Laurel counties. The men were hanged on the limbs of two sycamore trees, one on each tree, in a hollow about three squares west of Somerset, in sight of the cemetery. James protested his innocence to the last, his last words being: "I am dying for another's crime." He uttered a short prayer, but was interrupted by one of the mob, who told him to "die telling the truth; don't die with a lie on your lips." He is the one that is supposed to have fired the fatal shot, and many crimes have been laid at his door. Josiah protested his innocence, but acted as if he wanted to tell something. At this juncture the word was passed down the line, "we are pursued," which proved to be a false alarm. When the crowd got settled the younger brother was hanged to another sycamore tree.

Is Balmaceda Coming?

Both the State and Navy Departments are ignorant of the reported escape of Balmaceda to San Francisco, but it is said that if the ex-President has succeeded in getting aboard a United States naval vessel he will not be surrendered. Admiral Brown, in his dispatch announcing his departure, does not mention the fact that any Chilian refugees are aboard and it is scarcely possible that the late dictator is a passenger on this vessel. It is also considered unlikely that a Government official would aid in effecting his escape, although he would certainly be protected after reaching an American man-of-war.

A Lineman Killed.

John McCafferty, a telephone lineman, met with a horrible death at Cleveland. McCafferty had started to climb a pole in front of the court-house when he touched a wire that had become crossed with an electric light wire, and with a groan he fell down towards the street which was crowded with horrified spectators. His spurs caught and his body was left dangling in the air with head downward for fully five minutes before a ladder could be obtained. His arms, feet and body were horribly burned and he died in great agony while being conveyed to the hospital.

Telegraphers Unite.

St. Louis special: The order of Railway Telegraphers and the Brotherhood of Telegraphers have amalgamated. The officers of the Order of Railway Telegraphers will exercise their power and the laws of the association recognized as applicable to the new union will be in force until the annual convention which will be held at Chattanooga, Tenn., in June next. It was also resolved that the operators' organization make application to be admitted to the Federated Council of Railway Employes. It is a foregone conclusion that they will be admitted.

Prairie Fires in Texas.

A dispatch from Houston, Texas, says: Prairie fires are laying waste all the prairie beginning at Bray's Bayou and extending as far as the eye can see. Fences have been destroyed and farmers have lost immense quantities of hay. It will probably extend to adjoining counties. There is no hope of stopping it, as the country is burning up for want of rain, and there is no indication of any falling soon.

Vera Ava Set Free.

Cincinnati special: In the Probate Court here the woman known as Vera Ava was examined for lunacy and discharged by Judge Farris. He held that, although she may be mentally unsound, she is not dangerous to society, and as she is not a resident of this county, she could not be committed to an asylum. She was then permitted to go free.

Death of H. H. Francis.

Harry H. Francis, State Senator from Lake County, Indiana, and editor of the Michigan City Dispatch, died at his home after an illness of only a few days. The deceased was quite active in Democratic circles in Indiana. He was a member of the K. of P. Order, and a past Grand Chancellor of the State.

The Non-Conformist.

The Non-Conformist, the great third party paper, edited by Vincent, which has been issued at Winfield, Kas., will in future be published in Indianapolis, the plant having been moved there. The paper will be the official organ of the third party.

Sixty-five Lives Lost.

A dispatch from Algeciras, on the Bay of Gibraltar, says that a cillision between a Greek and an Italian steamer occurred off that port. Both steamers sank and sixty-five lives were lost.

Embezzler and Fugitive.

Chattanooga special: J. J. Duff, of Memphis, and John Barr, of Lebanon, Ky., respectively Supreme Trustee and Sinking Fund Commissioner and Supreme Secretary of the Catholic Knights of America, and President Colemon, have arrived in this city to investigate the shortage of M. J. O'Brien, Supreme Treasurer of the Order, who, after assigning all his property, a large portion of it to his bondsmen, left the city. No clue exists as to his whereabouts. There can be no doubt but there is a deficit in his accounts. The only question is as to the amount which is now supposed to be about $30,000. Major O'Brien was thought to be the soul of honor. He had served four terms as treasurer, and in eight years he handled over three million dollars.

A BOLD PLAY.

Englishmen Take Possession of a Turkish Port in the Name of Their Queen.

Paris special: A decided feeling of uneasiness has been caused in diplomatic and financial circles here by the receipt of an alarming dispatch announcing that Sigri, on the west coast of the Island of Mitylene, an Island belonging to Turkey, near the coast of Asia Minor, and within easy steaming distance of the Dardanelles, has been occupied by a detachment of British troops or marines, landed there from a British ironclad.

The island of Mitylene, is within twenty-five miles of the Hellespont, has an area of 276 square miles and a population of 40,000. It has good harbors and a fertile soil. The principal towns are Castro (or Mitylene) and Molive.

Under ordinary circumstances little or no credence would have been placed in the alarming rumor, but coupled with the story broadly circulated that Great Britain, in view of Russia's practical coercion of Turkey in regard to the passage through the Dardanelles of vessels belonging to her volunteer fleet intended to occupy the island of Tenedos at the entrance to the Hellespont or Dardanelles, more serious attention is paid to this dispatch from Constantinople. The islands of Mitylene would form a most advantageous position from which Great Britain could control the waters of the Hellespont.

Constantinople special: A detachment of blue-jackets and marines from a British ironclad accompanied by a battery of light field-pieces and several Gatling guns, was landed at Sigri, on the Island of Mitylene, formally occupying that place in the name of the Queen of England. There is a good harbor at Sigri, and it is supposed that the British naval officers at Mitylene intended to fortify the island and make it a coaling station and rendezvous for the British Mediterranean fleets. Sigri is on the coast of Mitylene, and is about sixty miles from the mouth of the Dardanelles.

SENDING VESSELS TO CHINA.

The United States Government Called Upon to Protect American Interests There.

The Department of State has received a telegraphic dispatch from the Minister at Pekin, reporting that a riot has occurred at Yehang on the Yangtse Kiang River in the province of Soo Pe, and that an establishment of American missionaries there has been destroyed. No further particulars were given. The gravity of the situation in China increases daily. The Army and Navy Department is lending its protection to American interests in answer to representations of the Department of State. The Charleston is now on her way to China from San Francisco and the Petrol in the neighborhood of New York is under orders to proceed to the same destination to strengthen Admiral Belknap's fleets, but they can hardly reach their destination inside of three months.

Particular concern is felt at the departments in this last riot because of its location. Gehana is about 200 miles further up the Yong Tee Kiang than Hong Kow, which is as far above the mouth as vessels of war can make their way under ordinary circumstances. In time of high water light draft war vessels may get above there, in fact the Ashuelot and Monarchy have each succeeded in reaching Ichang, but unless there is high water in the river at present, Admiral Belknap will have difficulty in getting a vessel up to the scene of the trouble.

SAM'L OF POSEN.

M. B. Curtis, the Actor, Kills a Policeman Who Attempts to Arrest Him.

San Francisco special: The policemen in the Southern Police Station were startled by a pistol shot just outside the door. Running out they found Officer Grant lying dead on the pavement with a bullet wound in his head. A man was seen running away and, being pursued and caught, was found to have Grant's hand-cuffs on his wrist. On the pavement, near the dead policeman, was found a discharged pistol. The man gave his name as Maurice Curtis and denied shooting Grant. Curtis is the M. B. Curtis well known in theatrical circles as "Sam'l of Posen." He had come to this city from his home in Berkeley and had been drinking all the evening with friends. Why he was arrested is not known, but it is supposed he had been creating a disturbance. Two men saw Curtis and the officer have a struggle in front of the police station and then saw the flash of a pistol. Curtis was seen at the police station, but would not talk. He was under the influence of liquor.

KIDNAPPED TWO MEN.

Millionaire William Baily and His Attorney Forced into a Carriage and Driven Away.

A special from Seattle, Wash., dated the 13th inst., says: The city was thrown into the wildest excitement by the kidnapping of Wm. E. Baily, the young millionaire, and R. B. Albertson, his attorney, yesterday afternoon, by Detective M. O. Sullivan. Although the abduction was made at 5:30 o'clock on Second street, where it was crowded, few facts were obtainable and the whereabouts of the men are unknown, although it is supposed the party is heading for Tacoma.

Sullivan enticed the two into a closed carriage and it is supposed held a revolver at their heads until they were out of the city. The rumor has been circulated that Baily is suspected of having securities stolen from the bank in his possession. A posse of police and deputy sheriffs are out on horse back chasing the hack and a special train with 100 leading citizens started in pursuit.

TORN LIMB FROM LIMB.

Thrilling Encounter Between Seamen and Sharks.

Captain Spring, of the schooner General Banning, which arrived at San Francisco from the Flents Island with a cargo of cocoanuts, reports that while loading his cargo the vessel was twice blown out to sea by severe storms. On each occasion about 100 natives were on board, and they hastened ashore in canoes. The second time several canoes were upset and the occupants thrown into the water. The water swarmed with sharks and many of the natives were torn limb from limb before they could be picked up by other canoes. One young fellow plunged into the water with a long knife to save his father, but both were dragged down and torn to pieces. A young girl had almost reached a canoe when a shark seized her and dragged her down. Out of thirty-eight persons thrown into the water eight were killed by sharks and one man had a leg bitten off.

Tests of Death.

Philadelphia special: Early the other morning Policeman Baker shot at a man whom he had arrested for burglary. The fellow dropped, and the officer thought him either dead or badly wounded. The policeman carried the prisoner to the Hahnemann Hospital, where the doctors could find no wound. The man was to all appearances dead. Heroic measures were restored to, the most severe being the sticking of pins in the parts of the body that are known to be sensitive. The man never moved a muscle. They placed him on a stone and pricked him with a scalpel. Still he gave no evidence of life. A galvanic battery was secured and tried on the bare soles of the man's feet. This settled it, and the fellow screamed lustily. He came near getting away, and fooled even the doctors for a time.

Two Men Killed.

A collision occurred at the junction of the Baltimore and Ohio and Pennsylvania railroads in the lower part of Philadelphia by which two men were fatally injured. Ulysses G. Hartman, the telegraph operator at the signal tower, gave the Baltimore and Ohio train the all-clear signal before the Pennsylvania train was out of the way and the former crashed into the latter. George Wright, the Baltimore and Ohio engineer and Henry Carroll, a brakeman employed by the same company, were caught in the wreck and there is little hope for their recovery. The telegraph operator was arrested and held to await the result of the men's injuries.

Beer in the Indian Nations.

A special from Admire, I. T., says: Attorney Warrand, for the United States Court in the Indian Territory has dismissed the prosecutions instituted against the beer men of Admire, holding the court had no jurisdiction, Judge Bryant refusing to allow prosecution. This removes the embargo on the sale of beer with one exception, its liability of being destroyed by Indian police. The Indian agent finding himself alone in his efforts to keep beer out of the territory, will not be able to accomplish much. It may be safely predicted that beer will now be sold by the whole of the fifteen saloons in Admire and over the Nation generally.

Fastest Time Ever Made on a Railroad.

Buffalo special: The fastest time ever made in the history of railroad traveling was made on the New York Central recently. The fast mail train leaving New York at 7:20 in the morning arrived here at 2:50 in the afternoon, making a run 436¼ miles in 440 minutes, which included three stops. A number of railroad officials and newspaper men were on board. The fastest previous run ever made was by the Scotch mail—500 miles at the rate of 55.4 miles per hour, three weeks ago.

O'Brien's Safe Opened.

The safe of defaulting and absconding M. J. O'Brien, Supreme Treasurer of Catholic Knights of America, was opened at Chattanooga. The priest and trustees and representatives of Fidelity and Casualty Company, of New York, and of O'Brien's local bondsmen were present. A thorough inventory was made, but the result will not be made public 'till later. The officers are satisfied that O'Brien's defalcations will amount to a large sum.

Wheat Inspection.

Judge Caldwell, in the District Court at Fargo, N. D., delivered an opinion in wheat inspection cases. It was against the railway commission on the ground that the statute under which they claim to act only authorizes them to inspect grain to be placed in a warehouse within the State of North Dakota, and the court held that the stopping of wheat in transit to another State is an unwarrantable interference with inter-State commerce.

Disastrous Fire.

The works of the Menasha, Wis., Wood Split Pulley Co., the flour mill of James Jones, and the warehouse of the Menasha Woodenware Company burned. Loss, $85,000; insurance, $33,000. Several firemen were injured by falling walls. About 100 men are thrown out of employment by the fire.

Big Fire on a Salvage Island.

London special: News has been received in this city that the Salvage, a group of islands, were recently the scene of a disastrous fire. Several houses were destroyed by the flames, while others were demolished to prevent conflagration spreading. The loss was about $1,000,000.

Nine Ice Houses Burned.

Nine ice houses belonging to the Indiapolis Ice Company were destroyed by fire. A young lad named John Thurber, aged 9, was arrested shortly afterward and confessed that he set the houses on fire. He says another boy told him to. The loss will exceed $30,000; partly insured.

Down an Embankment.

A disastrous freight wreck occurred on the middle division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, east of Altoona. Two engines and several freight cars were thrown over an embankment and totally demolished. One of the engineers is said to have received serious injuries.

The Lost Is Found.

Vera Ava, the missing Chicago Missionary, has turned up at Cincinnati. She claims to have knocked down a nun and escaped from a Jesuit institution in Cincinnati. People familiar with her history unhesitatingly say that she is a fraud and the real Diss DeBar.

George B. Loring Dead.

Hon. Geo. B. Loring, ex-Minister to Portugal, and former Commissioner of Agriculture, died suddenly at his home in Salem, Mass., from heart trouble. He was 74 years old.

Ten Murders in Ten Days.

Information just received from Screedville, Tenn., says that there have been ten murders in that county in the past ten days.

Four Persons Killed.

By the explosion on the Rockberrin vessel on the Danube, four persons are now known to have been killed.

SCOTTISH HOME RULE.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN ROMANS, OF SCOTLAND.

In Which He Illustrates the Necessity of Home Rule in Scotland, Before a Fort Wayne, Ind., Audience.

The Hon. John Romans, J. P. and vice-chairman of the Scottish Home Rule Association, who was at Fort Wayne, Ind., recently, the guest of Hon. J. B. White, ex-Congressman from the Twelfth Indiana district, was prevailed upon to deliver an address before the Caledonian Society of that city.

The introduction of Mr. Romans to the society was given by Capt. White in a soul stirring address, that put everybody in most hearty sympathy with the cause of home rule for the land of their birth.

The Hon. Mr. Romans responded warmly to the kind greeting extended to him. He has given a great deal of thought and of time and labor with a view of securing for Scotland as well as for England, Wales and Ireland, home local legislatures, such as we have in the several States in this country, with a general Parliament akin to our Congress that will have charge of matters of national, as distinguished from those of local interest. He remarked that he had with them an address which he had carefully prepared for delivery to his friends and neighbors in his home beyond the sea and that gave in as compact a form as he was capable of stating it, a discussion of the subject of home rule for Scotland. Those present was nearly enough like the friends and neighbors he had left behind to give to these written statements an interest—somewhat like that which would be left by the Scots at home. The address discusses these questions:

1. Has Scotland the right to home rule?
2. Would they be benefitted by it?
3. Are they qualified to manage their own affairs, and
4. How shall they obtain it?

Taking these questions up in their order, Mr. Romans said there is a persistent effort made by Englishmen across the border to convey the idea that it is a piece of audacity in the people of Scotland to ask for any such distinct existence. That the counties of York, Lancaster, Cornwall, etc., would have the same claim to a distinct national existence as has Scotland. "This," said he, "is marvellous presumption and indicates a total ignorance of both ancient and modern history." We have the right to expect that the editors of English newspapers are acquainted with the phraseology of the parliament in which frequent mention is made of Scotland as included in the sphere of the act, or excluded therefrom. Such terms alone show that it is regarded as having an existence quite in a different sense from that of York, Lancaster and even from England herself. He says that these expressions of English writers and speakers are but the voicings of a desire which has moved the heart of our English brethren for centuries—that Scotland's existence should be completely submerged in that of England. But, in truth, such a submergence is quite as remote as it was on the eve of Bannockburn.

The English ought to know, were they willing to observe facts that are patent to all, that in ecclesiastical, educational and judical institutions Scotland differs widely from England. In many important branches of constitutional government she is ahead of her southern neighbors, and if she could only be unharnessed from her self-satisfied companion she would prove to old Mr. Bull that her national life was as energetic still, as self-reliant and as enterprising as ever.

The volumes of history written by the learned professer of Oxford and Cambridge, that would teach directly or by inference that Scotland never was an independent State, do little honor to the acknowledged valor of those English warriors who were not able in centuries to conquer the Highlanders. The treaty of 1707 proves clearly that the English were glad to form a partnership with these Northern races, whom their historians would haveus believe had always been vassals of England.

On this point the speaker referred to the Scottish declaration of independence sent by the Scottish nation to the pope against the attempts of Edward II., declaring that so long as there were 100 men alive in Scotland they would never submit to England. This instrument dates back to A. D. 1320, in the day of Robert the Bruce.

Next them stands the "Resolution of the Estates of Scone," in 1373, wherein the succession to the crown of Scotland was settled upon the heirs of Marjory, daughter to Robert the Bruce, whose son was the first of the Stuart line—a resolution still in force, though it dates back more than 500 years. Next comes the "Treaty of Union," by which the kingdoms of Scotland and England are united under one crown, to be styled the kingdom of Great Britain.

These documents, together with the treasured symbols of ancient royalty still preserved in Edinburg, the royal crown and sceptre of the King of Scotland, are refutation full and complete of the claim of historians that its national existence and importance are a myth.

Mr. Romans insists that it should be clearly understood that there is no desire on the part of the people of Scotland to cut adrift from England. We quote here his exact words: "There is no Scotsman whose opinion is worth repeating who entertains for a moment an approximation to a desire for the repeal of the union; but having shown that there are many social and other questions in Scotland which differ from the same class of questions in England, and seeing the great increase of population, wealth and business in both nations since the union, it appears logical that the business of both peoples would be more efficiently, more economically and more satisfactorily conducted were each nation to conduct its domestic affairs, and uniting in an impartial parliament for the management of imperial questions, such as those relating to the army, the navy, diplomacy, the postoffice, excise and customs, bankruptcy laws, etc. Hence we submit that Scotland from any point of view, has a right to have a Legislative Assembly with an executive, to manage her own affairs.

The second point relative to the benefits that would accrue to Scotland from home rule, are quite to the point and the thoughts presented are suggestive to us, giving an insight into the important question of political science.

First the speaker pointed out that the removal of the capital of that nation to London, carried with it the emigration of their leading statesman and landowner, to London. Within sixty years after the removal of the National Parliament, their capital, Edenburg, was reduced to poverty, estates were sold for half their previous value, and the incomes of the great unsold estates were expended by their owners in London, so that Scotland was robbed of the incomes of its own lands and of the presence and influence of its National leaders.

The extent of the transfer of funds from Scotland to London, by reason of the residence of Scottish leaders in the capital, was estimated at $10,000,000 a year, so late as 1887. This is by no means the full measure of the drain to which Scotland is subject on this account. The men who go to London either for the purpose of opposing or of promoting legislation, spend on the average $500,000 more. Add to this the fact that through the arrangement the government establishments and institutions are largely maintained in England there being no attempt to give Scotland a fair show in this respect in proportion to the share she contributes to the imperial treasury. It may safely be said that the annual drain from Scotland, growing out of the centering of the government in London amounts to not less than $15,000,000. It is worthy of note that while the average taxation for the three kingdoms is £2 1s. 1d., that for Scotland is £2, 5s., 8d.

Another important disadvantage of the present system is that Scotland is not only robbed in pocket but she is robbed of the most ingenious of her sons. If they cherish noble ambitions in law, science, or art, they find it is to their interest to go to London in search of a promising field. Bring the seat of government for Scotland back to Edinburg and all this would in a large measure be checked. There would be a home center to which wealth and talent would naturally flow—that now goes to London.

Another gain which would result to Scotland would be that those interests in which she is specially concerned would be cherished there, whereas they are neglected now. In this connection he spoke of her fisheries: a mine of wealth beyond human estimation. He thought that ten years of such care, as Scotland would bestow on them, had she a legislature of her own, would increase their income ten-fold. In this field and in the development of her mines thousands of her citizens would be able to find remunerative employment, to the great and permanent advantage of the Scottish people. Besides this, the game laws, the withdrawal of large areas of agricultural lands from culture to furnish parks for deer, questions of religious equality and education, judicial reforms, methods of appointment and tenure of office for the judges. All these calls for local government as the one and surest means for the great reforms needed for the weal of Scotland.

As it now stands Scotland has but seventy-two members in Parliament while England has 465. Under such a constitution of the law-making body, it is not strange that the opinions of Scotland's sons and her interests are alike prone at the feet of her Southern neighbor and partner, and the sons of the heroes of Bannockburn endure in helplessness such humiliations as their fathers would have died rather than endure.

The third head of his discourse was not elaborated at great length, and seeing that the world knows by heart the story of the triumphs of the sons of Scotland in forum and in field, in science and the arts, there is no need to give space here to the few and well chosen words in which this part of his argument was clothed.

The fourth division of his subject which was a consideration of the means of securing home rule, was developed at great length. The speaker evidently felt, as he said, that this was the most difficult problem to handle. To begin with, the ancient nobility of Scotland are in a large measure denationalized. Generations of expatriation and residence among the nobility of England have changed the descendants of the patriotic men who bled and died to secure independence for Scotland so that they can even abjure the proud name that their fathers bore and subscribe themselves as Englishmen, as any one may see who will take the trouble to look at the signatures on the hotel registers of Europe. They send their boys to be educated at Eton and Harrow, instead of having them brought up in the schools of their own country. This is a very strong part of his address, and Mr. Romans well says that "this system of well-to-do Scotsmen will bear bitter fruit in time. A people so democratic, while at the same time so intensely patriotic as the Scots, will not long remain indifferent observers of the absence of national spirit and kinship in the land-owning and wealthy classes." The national faith and the desire for the maintenance of the national life will surely show itself by an unmistakable indifference, if not dislike, to the families of what are called the upper classes.

The first work that the speaker thought should be undertaken was the assiduous cultivation of the national spirit as it is breathed in the grand lines of her bards. The national songs should be taught and sung in their schools. Candidates for all offices should first pledge themselves to home rule for Scotland. Branches of the Home Rule Association should be formed in every town and village between Maiden Kirk and John O'Groat's. One point most strongly insisted on was that they should never permit, without protest, such expressions as "The English Army," "The English Navy," "The English Government," "The English Queen." They are not English any more than they are the property of Scotland. The speaker gave several amusing instances of the inconsistent use of the adjective English in such connections when there has not been since the union in 1707, such a thing in existence as an English Government, Queen, or Army. The proper term is British Army, British Parliament, etc.

He would have a careful inspection of the books used in the schools and exclude those that are not, in their essential fibre, of a patriotic nature. He would give special attention to the instruction of the girls in sentiments of love to their country.

The closing part of his address which, be it remembered, was prepared for his countrymen at home, was an appeal to the Scottish mothers. "In their hands are the future generations of our country, and I would remind them that a political philosopher has left on record that if he had the making the song of a people he cared not who made the laws." He appealed to them to teach every child to sing that immortal ballad of Burns, "A man's a man for a' that," before the child had reached the age of 12 years. He would have them commit to memory these stirring lines:

> "Scots wha hae wi Wallace bled," and this patriotic song of Reddell's entitled "Scotland Yet."

> "The heath waves wild upon her hills
> And foaming frae the fells,
> Her fountains sing of freedom still,
> As they dance down the dells,
> And weel I lo'e the land, my lads,
> That's girded by the sea.
> Then Scotland's dales and Scotland's vales
> And Scotland's hill's for me;
> I'll drink a cup to Scotland yet,
> Wi all the honors three."

"In these three gems of poetry are contained sufficient lyric inspiration for a nation of men resolved to be free, and to maintain their nationality against any and all odds."

Pat's Report.

There is nothing like strong common sense. An Irish soldier went to his station with the order to report anything remarkable that should happen during the night. A drunken fellow fell off the wall and broke his neck, and no report was made. When questioned about it, Pat replied: "Faith, and I obeyed orders. If the man had fallen off the wall and not broken his neck, I should certainly have reported it."

THE poet Gay has a word for sham and pretence which is not entirely out of place in our own society:

> By outward show let's not be cheated,
> An ass should like an ass be treated.

HOLD BACK THE WHEAT

THAT'S WHAT THE FARMERS ARE COMMANDED TO DO.

Another Attempt by the Alliance to Stop the Tremendous Flow of Grain to the Markets—At Least $1.50 and Probably $2 Per Bushel Is Promised Later in the Season.

Say 'Twill Be $1.50.

The Farmers' Alliance leaders in Minnesota and North and South Dakota have resolved upon another attempt to stop the tremendous flow of wheat to the markets. The receipts in Minneapolis and Duluth for the last week have run from 800 to 1,500 cars every day, and the price of December wheat has dropped to 90¼ cents in Minneapolis. At this rate of sale and delivery the Alliance people assert that the 150,000,000 bushels of wheat in the No. 1 hard belt will be out of the farmers' hands before Jan. 1, and their haste will drive the price back to 80 cents. The Alliance therefore began the mailing from its St. Paul headquarters of a million of letters to the farmers calling a halt all along the line. The letter states the new Wheat Growers' Association and the Alliance secretaries all over the country are unanimous that wheat is bound to sell as high as $1.50 and possibly $2 per bushel, and they are unanimous in this warning to the farmers not to sacrifice their wheat and give the speculators all the profit there is in it. The letter says the crop is being greatly overestimated by the newspapers and grain dealers, and continues:

"We do not believe a majority of the farmers are foolish enough to co-operate with the speculators to depress prices further. There is no question but prices will take a turn upward. The shortage in Europe can now be figured with accuracy. About a week ago a congress of grain-dealers from all parts of Europe met at Vienna, Austria, and computed figures about the crops in Europe. These figures are the highest which well-informed reputable men could furnish, for, if in a famine year like this they should give for the crop of any one country lower figures than circumstances justified, the government of that country would certainly remonstrate. It is surely the policy of Europeans not to exaggerate their disaster. The figures of the Vienna Congress show that Europe raised 258,000,000 bushels of wheat and 490,000,000 bushels of rye less than last year. Last year it consumed all of its own wheat crop and at least 50,000,000 of reserves, 100,000,000 bushels imported from America, all that other countries could supply, and all its rye crop. This year it will have from America 12 ,000,000 bushels more than last, if we take the extreme figures which any reputable authority has made for our really splendid crop.

"It will have as usual what other countries supply, which is insignificant, but it will have 748,000,000 bushels less of its own crop and 50,000,000 bushels less to draw from reserves. In short, it will have 120.000,000 bushels extra from America to make up a deficiency of 798,000,000, and must consequently eat 678,000,000 bushels less grain.

"Rye being dearer in Europe than wheat, the latter becomes a substitute, and is equally affected by deficiency in rye or wheat supply. When it is entirely certain that Europeans will have to economize in bread to the extent of 678,000,000 bushels, and when the situation is aggravated by the partial failure of the potato crop, it is to be considered what prices they would pay for American wheat. The shortage in Europe being four times as large as the American surplus, there is no doubt that the price of wheat will reach the highest figure ever known before this year is up and will exceed it by far before the new crops come in.

"Wheat will soon be over $1.50, no matter how much farmers and speculators work together to keep prices down, and we would advise those who can comprehend the situation to hold their wheat for $1.50 and add for every month they keep it say five cents to the price. Hold your wheat. You cannot get left."

INDICATIONS OF A BIG WAR.

Russia May Cause a Struggle in Which All Europe Will Participate.

The Foreign Office here, says a London cablegram, is kept in a state of uneasiness over the projects ascribed to Russia involving the opening of the Dardanelles and the seizure of Constantinople. These intentions may exist only in the imagination of certain correspondents, but there is information in the Foreign Office sufficient to justify the belief that Russia is about to start on a new and important line of policy. The contingencies in question have not been sprung upon unawares. They were foreseen when the German Emperor was here. Beyond doubt they entered into subjects discussed during his visit to the Queen at Windsor and to Lord Salisbury at Hatfield House. They were considered on all sides, and the tone of the German press at this moment shows the impression which was made.

The most important journals point out that an attack by Russia upon Constantinople, or a hostile movement against England in Egypt, would not affect England alone, but would concern all Europe. England could not be left to deal with the difficulty single-handed. That is surely important notification to all whom it may concern. Russia is rapidly increasing its fleet and is trying to get its finances straight, and it means to have gentral mobilization of all its forces.

The Black Sea clause of the treaty of Paris will have to be abrogated. There need be no war about that. Russia by a little tact might easily accomplish this object, even before the meeting of Parliament, but if it means to pounce down upon Constantinople it would be a different affair. Then a great war would be inevitable, and breadstuffs, which you have to sell in the United States, would be worth anything you chose to ask for them. That is one reason why accumulating complications in European politics are of great importance to the American people.

THINKS THE END IS AT HAND.

Dr. Jenckes Warns People to Prepare for the Millenium.

The Rev. Dr. Jenckes, rector of St. Paul's Cathedral, one of the most distinguished, conservative, and levelheaded divines in Indianapolis, Ind., has created a sensation by announcing that the end of the world is close at hand. Dr. Jenckes gave up a lucrative law practice in 1864 at Louisville and entered the Christian ministry, under a very strong conviction that the end of this age and the inauguration of the reign for a thousand years of the Savior would occur within about 135 years. For several years this was the central fact of his preaching. But circumstances tended some years since to check his ardor of conviction, and he found himself drifting toward a looseness of views respecting this important subject.

He has recently had a thorough awakening through the influence of a discovery and a publication. The discovery was that an error in the accepted system of chronology has been lately found which had made the time of the judges, as governors of Israel, 350 instead of 450 years. This correction, together with the twenty-seven years that have elapsed since 1864, brings this most astounding crisis within less than t[illegible] years of the present time.

—The other night Marshall McIntyre and William Gray, two ice men at Crawfordsville, say they saw a strange monster in the shape of an aerial serpent. It was over 100 feet above the ground and was twenty feet long and eight feet wide and sailed around in the air with a pair of wings. It was a horrible sight, and as it twisted and circled around in the air the men's hair stood on end. This serpent is said to have no head and is supposed to have come to the wicked city of Crawfordsville from the moon. Rev. Switzer, of the M. E. Church, and his wife also say they saw it.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

OR

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XVII—Continued.

The lookers-on marveled as Dick set his teeth tight, and, accommodating his movements to those of the mare, they sped around the vast inclosure in circles that increased in dimensions.

"Jump! Jump for your life," shouted Mitchell.

"No, no," shouted Ben instantly. "Hold hard—ho'd hard, Dick."

Dick did hold on. The white mare rose in the air—pawed the air. Still Dick clung to her. She plunged repeatedly, still the boy sat on her back. Her heels flew up like lightning, and still Dick was not tossed over her head.

On the contrary, as she reared again and pawed the air, Dick hit her on the right ear with his fist with all his might. The mare dropped on all fours, then reared again, was hit again and again dropped on all fours.

But, now, Dick did not lose time striking her. His hand struck her a score of times or more as fast as he could move his arm.

The mare stopped and shook her head. She turned and glared at her rider. In that interval Dick had grasped a loose strap from the top of a wagon near him. This strap was now raised in the air. The spectators saw it come down on the head, shoulders and flanks of the mare—it rained blows on her.

The mare galloped across the field in a frenzy, still the blows were showered on her without stint. One struck one eye—that made her frantic with fear and rage; she sped round and round—away to the end of the large field, back, to and fro, and still the strap was plied unmercifully.

"If she stumbles it is death to both," said Mitchell.

"Yes; and there's five hundred dollars gone at a clip," said Mr. Buckett, whom the cries had brought from the road at a distance, where he was superintending the movements of the foremost wagons.

"I'd give a thought to that plucky boy," said Ben drily.

"So I do—so I do," said Buckett.

"Here, too," said Mitchell.

At that instant the mare stood stock still. The lookers-on could not see what happened. What they saw surprised them beyond expression. The mare turned about, and instead of galloping like mad, trotted—yes, trotted slowly and gently back to the group near the green-room, where she stopped.

As Dick looked at the crowd smiling, Buckett exclaimed: "The boy's a witch!"

"I can't understand it," said Mitchell, as Dick slid to the ground with a laugh.

"You are a wonder!" said Ben. But his wife kissed Dick's cheek, whereat he blushed like a girl.

"There's nothing you can't back after that," said Buckett.

"O! I'll put him on a zebra or tiger after that," said Mitchell, taking hold of the mare, which stood docile.

"Now let us have some breakfast," said Buckett.

"Yes," Ben said, with a laugh, "it gave me an appetite just to look at Dick and Firefly."

It is necessary for me to say something of the mare Dick mastered. Black Bess was as mettlesome an animal as we have seen. There were very few who could go near her. However, Black Bess had been driven, ridden—was well-known in the ring. Only she was uncertain, "devilish uncertain," as Mitchell said. Dick did wonders with her.

Firefly—well, to twist an old saying, she was a mare of another color. The white steed was the most untractable horse known in the State where she was foaled. She was a heeler—a spitfire—a murderous beast. Beautiful—but cruel. She had a terrible record. Buckett knew her strain well—knew all about her, but he took a strange fancy to buy her, and paid more money for her than others, who knew the mare, would have been paid to take her home and promise to risk limb and life feeding her. You never heard—I never heard of a man or a woman, or a horse with a bad record, that did not somehow present an offset in the shape of extenuating circumstances.

Firefly had killed two men. One she threw over her head, breaking his neck, the man who fed her two years. She killed him ten minutes after he placed the bit in her mouth—the only bit she ever felt in her mouth.

The excuse then was, her owner did not know how to manage horses.

The bereaved family got rid of her speedily. A man who knew all about horses took hold of Firefly. Why, he had commanded a cavalry regiment. He mounted her one day; she took the bit in her teeth, ran away, threw him, and he died a week later.

The excuse then made was that Colonel Smith was not sufficiently mindful; that he let the beast get her head when he ought to have been watching her.

Firefly was fed carefully through a hole in the stable after that. Nobody cared to be maimed or killed by venturing into her stall.

This was the blooded mare Buckett bought just for an experiment. This was the animal Dick subdued.

It was wonderful. A boy, a mere boy who was raised in a poorhouse, bringing a beast that the oldest hands were afraid of.

There is a great deal of superstition among "show people." More than sailors reveal; much more.

Buckett all at once conceived this boy was thrown into his path to paralyze the public with Firefly.

At the breakfast table he said, in a loud tone: "Your boy, Ben, has accomplished what no one else would have undertaken for me."

"I wouldn't do it, for one," said the clown, coolly, as he helped himself to another egg and a piece of bacon. "Nary time, Mr. Buckett."

"I didn't think you'd confess it," said Mitchell.

Ben looked at him. "If you meant that for a sneer—it don't hurt. I believe there are men—and animals—that are too mean to live. Thieves and murderers—and horses spoiled by keepers, that were no good when they were foaled. There's plenty kindly horses—I've handled all you've brought this way—can handle Firefly—but——"

"Well?" said the ringmaster.

"Why, if I did, by-and-by somebody else would take her in hand and she'd kill him. I don't want to be the one to lull people into false security."

"Bosh!"

"You all hear him. He says 'bosh,' gentlemen. Make a note on it. Tell me at the end of the season if I am right."

Nothing more was said concerning the white mare at breakfast.

Very soon after the breakfast was disposed of, the clown's wife went to the leading establishments, secured the material for Dick's dress, and taking it to a costumer's instructed them fully.

The Monster Aggregation meanwhile moved on to the great city, where they were to give an exhibition that night. Mrs. Brown was to follow in the cars at her leisure.

Dick was delighted. He had read—heard of New York. He had never hoped he would see the great city, and here he was on his way to it.

And how was he entering it. As a hero! As a prodigy! His name (it was his now) was in big colored letters on startling posters that challenged the eye. His name was larger than the clown's—than Mrs. Brown's. Why, he was the leading—the central figure in the Monster Aggregation of talent and beauty.

What did it all mean?

He wondered how it would all turn out. Likely as not Zeke Caper would come down on him as of old, and wattle him as he carried him back to Acorn County and apprenticed him to some cross farmer.

No! Dick resolved he would die before going back to Acorn County again.

The Monster Aggregation was transported to the metropolis in a few hours. The attendants were busy as bees; so much had to be done before the public would be permitted to witness its wonders. New trappings were fitted, new people employed, new programmes arranged. It was eminently proper to adhere to the old saw. Mr. Buckett was determined to put his best foot foremost. A success in New York meant—well, it meant victory or defeat. The opposition had started out from New York — Buckett was bringing something in.

He brought in a number of good riders, leapers, and specialists who had got in first-class working order—"every man and woman feeling as fine as a fiddle," to use his own language. Whereas his competitors had begun with a good deal of friction, and performances were rough, everything showing a rough edge. Buckett would come and go as smooth as butter.

The clown and his wife were housed at a good hotel. Mrs. Brown was in her room, with Dick, who had just come in after a walk up Broadway, where he marveled at all he witnessed, when Ben suddenly entered.

He looked angry. He tossed his hat on the table and began instantly with, "Would you believe it, Kate, Buckett has got Mitchell to do his dirty work again."

"How is that?"

"You know—I know that Firefly will kill somebody. It wasn't luck enough for Dick here that he handled Bess all right; because he brought the mare to time Mitchell wants him to ride Firefly."

"He shall not."

"He never will with my consent."

Dick looked at the clown. "Does Mr. Mitchell say I've got to ride her?"

"He would like to, but I've got a say."

"But how can you, Ben?" said his wife. "If you or I do anything, Mitchell will say it's jealousy.

"Oh, yes; I've thought of that, too, Kate. I'll talk through others this time. The boy shan't be killed."

"I'm not a bit afraid."

"I believe you," said Ben, admiringly; "you've pluck enough for a regiment, you have."

"How did you learn all this, Ben?"

His wife was very much excited.

"Why, I overheard Mitchell talking to Buckett. All he wanted was Buckett's permission, and he says he will mount Dick on the she-devil to-night."

"Oh, Ben!"

Mrs. Brown looked alarmed.

"Something awful will happen—I feel it, I know it."

"I tell you what will happen. I'll wallop Mitchell to begin with, and take Dick away with me, before I'll see it done."

"No, no, Ben; you know you wouldn't fight him. You've promised you would not lower yourself fighting."

"I did, Kate—and I'll keep my word—but somebody will whip that cur. He is a cur. He goes on all fours—curse him."

Dick laughed.

"What are you laughing at?"

"You punned. You said he was a cur—and cursed him."

The clown and his wife smiled, and the smile brought back good humor. Then they talked of the matter soberly.

"Mitchell has given the white mare a new name."

"What is it to be, Ben?"

"Think."

"Oh, Angel—or something peaceful."

"Very peaceful. The new name is—Gentle Annie."

"Mitchell would be nearer if he called her Death on a Pale Horse," said Mrs. Brown.

"What will you do, Ben?"

"Well, to begin with, I'm responsible for Dick, here."

"I don't see it."

"Why, I put him on a horse—if I hadn't he might be hanging around blacking boots, selling cakes and lemonade. I ought to see he is not put on that brute, to be killed, maybe."

"Yes—I see, now. You must not allow it."

"Aye, there's the rub. How am I to help it. I suppose the only way is to quit Buckett and lose a week's salary in spite of all we can do."

"I'd lose a month's salary rather than see Dick hurt."

"I'm glad you're agreed. Well—I'll oppose it, and if the worst comes, I'll give Buckett warning to-night."

That evening, when Dick was dressed as the Arabian Queen, and just before the crowd began to pour into the enormous tent, Mrs. Brown called her husband aside.

"Buckett and Mitchell have made up their mind—they will put Dick on Firefly in the last act."

"They won't! I'll bet they won't, now," said Ben sturdily. "I'll shoot the beast if they do."

Dick listened to this conversation eagerly. He wanted to assure the clown that he thought he could jump off the mare, if the worst came, but he refrained. The boy had been restrained so much that he could not manifest, or make known to others, his confidence in himself. He did not fear any horse—indeed, he had encountered so many mad bulls, and vicious horses that he knew the nature of the four-footed animals as well or better than many stablemen; for Dick was thoughtful, and pondered much over the disposition of certain fractious animals.

That night, when Dick was on his way to the circus, he had overheard two lads about his age, talking of the circus, and its principal features. One of them had said there was going to be a "surprise." The other asked the nature of the surprise, when the first replied that it would be something wonderful on horseback.

He had half a mind to relate the incident to the clown, but he held his peace. So the boy had evidently overheard something, or some one in Mitchell's confidence had whispered what was on the cards for the evening.

Mitchell's dark face appeared in the entrance at that moment. He did not speak to Ben; as for the clown, he turned away from the master and busied himself with his own affairs. He was dressed to go on, but his face was not yet painted. Dick thought his eyes flashed, and that there was less color in his face—and Dick was right.

Ben Brown had fully resolved to protest against any attempt to place Dick on the back of the vicious mare—he had fully made up his mind to part from Mr. Buckett.

The signal for assembly sounded before Ben was ready. He gave his cheeks a few hasty touches, deepened a few wrinkles, hit the cheekbones lightly with carmine and picked up his marvelous hat.

The grand entry was made in magnificent style. Dick was on as a princess, of course, with a false skirt which could be removed in a second, and a sash that could be tossed aside on the instant.

The various acts called in rotation were received with thunders of applause. The clown was in his glory. How he made the people roar with his sallies and songs and antics and artistic triumphs.

The opening in New York was an overwhelming success. There could be no doubt of it. The performers did their best, and were rewarded with thunders of applause.

Suddenly Mitchell appeared in the dressing-room. There was only a few Indians, Japanese jugglers, and a snake-charmer in the green-room—people Dick had been looking at wonderingly for days, but whom he could not speak to.

"Now, Dick, I'm going to ask you to stun them. Will you ride Firefly? If you do, I'll give you $10 right now. Here's the money, Dick."

"I'm not afraid."

"Then I'll have her brought in. Don't be afraid. You bested Black Bess, and you made Firefly come to time, so I've no fear. You'll stun that crowd—you'll put the the cap sheaf on the business if you'll do as I want you to."

"I don't like to refuse, but unless——"

Dick was talking to air. Mitchell had disappeared, and a moment later appeared with two grooms, one on either side of Firefly.

The white mare glared at them alternately. She was trembling with rage.

"Now, then, let me give you a lift."

Before he could remonstrate, poor Dick was on Firefly's back. The beast bounded. The grooms held her fast. The ring-master walked beside them saying, "Hold her in—curse you, hold her in—and lead her twice, or three times round the ring. Don't let her go till I tell you."

The band gave a furious flourish, and Dick—otherwise the Arabian Queen—was carried by the untamed steed fairly into the ring before he had time to think. It was all done so quick that he could not repress a smile at the look of real horror the clown bestowed upon him as the grooms walked the mare around the ring.

The people laughed at the face the clown made. They could not help it—he counterfeited horror so well.

Meantime, Mitchell had mounted a painted keg, and was announcing in his metallic tones:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to announce the first appearance before an American audience of one of the most renowned equestriennes the world has ever seen. The management takes great pleasure in introducing that finest ornament of the arena, from the Cirque Imperial de Paris and various European capitals, Idalia, Queen of Arabia!

The audience clapped their hands. The clown stood between the ringmaster and the grooms.

Double Dick did not hear a word; he sat sat on the trembling mare like one in a dream.

Right before him, looking with staring, admiring eyes at him, was a beautiful young lady so very like Joe—poor Joe that he had defended at Barnesville Poorhouse, that he could not think of—did not see anything else. If Joe had a twin-sister anywhere in the world, this must be her. Only she was so much prettier. Joe's cheeks never had that bright color; her eyes were bright, but they never had the soft light that shone from the eyes that were fixed on Dick's.

Ignorance Was Bliss.

A story was recently told in the Free Press illustrative of the exceeding politeness of the Spaniards, who, when you admire anything belonging to them, immediately offer it to you, expecting, of course, that you will thankfully decline to take it. That story calls to mind a circumstance which happened not long ago in our own national capital—a story of Southern hospitality. A young woman had been summoned from the West to take a position in Washington. On the day of her arrival she chanced to meet the charming daughter of Congressman Breckinridge, of Kentucky, and in the course of conversation happened to say that she had not yet found a suitable boarding place.

"Oh," said Miss Breckinridge, earnestly, "come up to our place. We would be delighted to have you come there and live."

The Western girl, supposing, of course, it was a boarding house, went up with Miss Breckinridge and looked the rooms over critically, commenting here and there on how she would like to have this or that room arranged if she was going to take it. She was finally shown into the guest chamber, and said:

"There, this room suits me pretty well. If I could have a folding bed in it instead of that great cumbrous thing, I would take this, and I wonder if I could have a rocking chair. I hate those stiff-backed affairs."

Miss Breckinridge said that could be arranged.

"How many people are there in the house?" asked the Western girl.

"Only our family."

"So? Nobody else? That's good. Do you get enough to eat?"

Miss Breckinridge began to think the Westerner was a strange creature.

"How long have you lived here?"

Miss Breckinridge told her—several years.

"So? Well, then it must suit you. How many in your family?"

The Southern beauty told her.

"How much do you pay?"

"I don't know. Father pays the bills."

"Much?"

"No; I think not. It is not a very expensive neighborhood."

"Well," said the Western girl, "I think I'll take this room."

And she did. She sent her trunks and satchels and band-boxes up, and it was not until she was all bestowed that she found she was not in a boarding-house, but had unwittingly accepted the hospitality of a Southern family, and a very distinguished Southern family at that.—Free Press.

Antlers Embedded in a Tree Trunk.

A couple of weeks ago, says the Salem (Wis.) Statesman, Mr. Van Man, a farmer in Zena, in Polk County, was engaged in cutting cordwood on his place. He chopped down an oak tree of about three feet in diameter at the butt, and, after sawing it into the proper lengths, proceeded to split it in the usual manner. In the section about five feet from the ground he struck his ax into what he supposed was a bunch of knots, but as the chips immediately crumbled, he made a closer examination, and discovered the right side of a pair of deer-horns embedded into the very heart of the oak tree. There are evidences that it had five prongs, and from the growth "rings" of the tree has been in that position for at least a century and a half. The tree is thought to be at least 200 years old.

ACCORDING to the Bangor Commercial, a Maine schoolgirl compared the adjective "ill" after this original fashion: "Nominative, ill; comparative, worse; superlative, dead."

JUST now sugar is low but refined, a seeming contradiction.

Ethel—Is that so? I am sorry. But, you see, I walked the distance only once, and then in company with young Dr. Tomkins, who talked medicine all the way.—Pharmaceutical Era.

His Weakness.

"Who made you?" asked the Sunday school teacher of a youth from Pell street.

"I don't know," was the reply.

"Well, God made you," said the teacher.

"That so?" replied the boy. "I b'lieve I've heard that before, but I'm like me old man—never was no good at rememberin' names."—Drake's Magazine.

Two Boys.

Little Daughter—Oh, mamma, didn't you say Dick mustn't go with that neighbor's boy?

Mamma—Indeed I did.

"Well, he's with him behind the barn smoking cigarettes."

"Horrors! Is that dirty-faced boy teaching Dick to smoke cigarettes?"

"No'm. Dick's teachin' him."

Vastly Different.

Mrs. Hicks' Mother—John, what kind of treatment do you call it for you to yell "Sicker, Tige," when your poor mother-in-law falls into the water and is in danger of drowning?

Hicks (after reflection)—I didn't yell "Sicker, Tige;" I yelled "Succor, Tige."

Drew the Line.

Miss Smilax—I like to waltz with you, Mr. Wooden; but why don't you ever reverse?

Wooden — Well, I have reverses enough in my business without bringing them into my pleasures.

A Traction Car.

Quidnunc—What's the matter with this car? This is the third time it's got off the track.

Smartly—Why, this is one of those track-shun cars.

Clipping Dogs' Ears.

The work of clipping the ears of bulldogs and other canines was discussed in the police court the other morning when Frank W. Moulton, a fancier, was called upon to answer a charge of cruelty to animals preferred against him by Agent Key, of the Humane Society, says the Washington Star. The alleged cruelty consisted in clipping the ears of the dogs.

Mr. Moulton told how the dogs were etherized before the operation is performed in order to prevent pain or cruelty. "It has been the universal custom," he said, "to clip their ears."

"And it used to be the custom for men to bore holes through their noses," added the Judge, "but civilization is ahead of that."

Judge Miller wanted to know if there were any decisions on the question, and counsel said he thought there were none.

Mr. Moulton said that since the warrant was issued he had written to the Secretary of the New York Kennel Club, and his reply was that no such case had been prosecuted before and he considered it perfectly nonsensical.

The Judge thought that the dog was entitled to his ears and tail and said that the public was interested in the dog untrimmed and unadorned. As the question was one of considerable importance, the Judge said, he would take it under advisement.

The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY....SEPTEMBER 17, 1891.

WHEAT in Canada northwest nearly all harvested.

ONLY six counties in California show an increase in the number of children of school age.

BAD collision off the coast of Greece. An Italian ship went down with a loss of about 100.

ORTH STEIN, the newspaper man who started the "Comet," an eccentric paper, in Lafayette a few years ago, has been arrested for forgery.

JOSEPH ZEITZER of Syracuse, N. Y., landed in New York City about two weeks ago, having been back to Germany on a visit. He smuggled in fifty yards of silk, wrapped about his body fifty more in a trunk, besides two gold watches, six costly shawls, a meerschaum pipe and some fine lace. He was detected and had to lose the goods. If the foreigners pay the tariff duty, why was this man arrested? If the foreigner pays the duty, why did this man try to hide his goods when he landed? Will some republican paper explain?

Big Alliance Picnic.

There will be a monster Alliance picnic and speaking meeting at the Auburn Fair grounds just east of town on Saturday of this week Sept. 19. Good speakers, and plenty of them will be there, including Jesse Harper, and others of equal note. It is is intended to make this, the greatest meeting of the season. It is a public gathering, free to all, and everyone is invited to come and have a good time and hear these able speakers.

Krabill-Shilling.

Married at the residence of the bride's parents near Spencerville, Sept. 9, Dora, youngest daughter of Solomon Shilling, to Henry Krabill, both of this county. The wedding was a quiet one only the family of the bride being present, with the exception of Prof. D. W. Snyder of Hicksville, who rendered a splendid march. Rev. J. J. Fred of Spencerville, officiated. The bride looked radiant in a superb evening costume of ivory white albatross and satin. The groom was also in full evening dress. The fortunate couple will board a short time in Auburn when they will resume their duties as teachers.

To Subscribers.

The last year or so, has been a bad one financially. In fact it has been "hard times," and knowing this, we have said but little to subscribers to the COURIER about paying up, although we could not help seeing that many who had always paid promptly, were getting behind and that others who were already behind, were falling back still more. But we said, "It is hard times. We will try and dig along, and give our friends as good a chance as possible." But now we believe we must ask for a little help. Let everyone who possibly can do so, chip in a year, or two years, or so, on his subscription now due, and make as earnest an effort to give us a little help, as we have made to give them easy terms. If all who can do this without inconvenience, will set about it and make the effort, it will be a great accommodation to us, and but the proper thing for them. Now, boys, what do you say? Shall we all help a little? Let us see all try and then if you can make up a year or two, we shall be satisfied by knowing you have done the best you could.

Best Farm Wagon.

We allude to Shaffer & Berg's wagons made right here in Auburn. They stand by their work and can prove it the best. No shoddy work about a wagon of their make. It pays to buy of home manufacturers, for you know what you are getting. Their work has stood the test for years. All parts are made on honor. Get new wagons there, or bring in your repair work to their shops on South Main St., Auburn.

Commissioners' Court.

Some ditch matters were attended to last week, and on Monday, pleas were heard in the matter of allowing pay to the surveyor's deputies. Judge McClellan made a plea against the allowance, and Judge Lowry for it. Both made strong pleas, and after studying the matter over night the commissioners concluded to allow the bills, as the deputies had done the work in good faith and had not been paid. But they cut the bills down to a figure that they thought was just. Wednesday was set for the trustees of the townships and towns to come in and make their levies for the next year's taxes. On that day they came, and after considering the increased assessment, fixed their rates for the different funds accordingly. Their rates will average 40 to 45 cents on the hundred, but as different funds, show different changes, we can only say, all will be about as much lower this year as the assessment is higher. To give an idea how these changes stand, we submit one township.

The commissioners made the levy for county purposes 40 cents on the $100. Last year it was 90½. They feel safe in this, and believe it will enable them to pay off several thousand on the debt the coming year. They have studied this difficult matter of making the new rate for the new assessment and we believe they have acted wisely and conscientiously. They have had an abundance to do this term. They adjourned Wednesday evening. We shall give a full report of their work next week. The total average for the county, including state and township will be about $1.20 on $100.

Fastest Race Track in Indiana.

The time made by Silver Cloud, in the great free-for-all trot here last Friday, is the best ever made in an actual race on a half-mile track in the state of Indiana, so we are told. His time as taken, shows 2-23½, beating his former record of 2-24. We believe there was a race against time, or with a running mate or under some such conditions, at Ft. Wayne, a few years ago, that showed about 2-16; but the race on the Auburn track was between horses trotting to win. This shows that we have one of the best, if not the very best of all the half-mile tracks in the state. Horsemen will not be slow to make a note of this and will be pretty sure to come again next year.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain.

Doctor M. E. Blair, M. D. D. D. The Doctor is the patentee of this process and will positively appear in person. He uses no chloform, ether, vitalized air or cocaine, but guarantees the careful removal of all teeth without pain or injury to the gums at time of removal or after.

The new furnace at the Presbyterian church is being put in this week.

H. E. Trout and wife drove over to Waterloo Sunday to call on relatives.

Try Salyer's fresh roasted peanuts. They are a treat. The fire is always going.

G. W. Lewis of Hicksville, was here at the fair, a guest in the family of T. C. Ford.

Let us fill the great church when the College Quartet comes next Tuesday evening.

"The two Johns," just north of Robbins & McCord's drugstore, are in grand shape. Call and see.

All remember that their will be Sunday school and church at the Presbyterian church on Sunday Sept. 20. All come.

Anyone desiring to adopt a fine healthy well-bred child, a boy about six months old, can hear of a good chance by calling here.

A team with bells, banners and bunting paraded the streets Tuesday to advertise the big ball game at Butler Saturday.

See our picture of the famous Sioux City Corn Palace. It is all made of ears, stalks and leaves of corn, with small parts of grass.

The Garrett Razzle Dazzle says that the Auburn firms that advertised in that sheet a year ago, are "not doing well." Wonder it hadn't killed 'em.

Mrs. F. D. Ryan and Wilt Ryan and wife, of Fremont, Mrs. N. H. Weaver, and H. K. Leas, John Leas, W. H. Leas and their wives of Waterloo, attended the fair.

The famous pacing mare Strathso 2:14¼, will give an exhibition mile at the Kendallville fair on Friday. She is expected to show a mile in 2:18 or better. Don't miss it.

Rickel & Sprott, the real estate dealers, got a new safe this week. The old one was getting too small for their increasing business. Selling bigger farms and giving bigger bargains.

Thomas Hallam and wife went up to Hudson Saturday, and Mrs. H. spent Sunday with her cousin Mrs. Samuel McClish and family, returning home Monday. They had a pleasant visit.

John L. Rinehold, in Stamets' addition south of the Wabash depot, will sell his personal property on Saturday Sept. 19, at 1 p. m. There is a large amount of various articles to be sold. See his bills.

The total receipts of the fair, as nearly as can be now stated, are $5,300 including the money taken in speed entries and from all sources. A meeting this week will fix it more exactly. It was a great success every way.

Salyer's "ready roaster" for peanuts is always filled with nice hot "Goobers" the very fragrance of which will make one's mouth water. It don't cost any more to get nice warm peanuts than cold raw ones. Try them.

A young man named Isbell working in the electric light works at Kendallville accidentally got against the machine and received a shock Friday evening that rendered him senseless. He never regained consciousness, but died Sunday morning.

The birthday of Dr. Johnston, his wife, and their daughter Mrs. Emma Day, are all on the same date, and occurred last Sunday. Dr. M. E. Johnston, the son, is the only member of the family omitted from this arrangement. Who can beat it?

The races at the Kendallville fair will be very fine this year. Two races on Tuesday, three on Wednesday, four on Thursday and three on Friday, besides Strathso's exhibition on Friday and Crandall's running team one heat each day. If you care for speed you will be pleased.

L. J. Miller informs us that the average yield of wheat in the county is 22 bushels per acre. When we consider the large amount of land of all sorts sowed in wheat last year, this good average will be all the more surprising. But Mr. M. has watched and estimated carefully, and is no doubt correct.

J. L. Davis has begun work on his new block. It will extend west from his present building, forty-two feet, and the same width as the store. Then connected with this will be another building extending south fifty feet with a width of twenty-two feet fronting north on Eight street. The entire building will be two stories high. He expects to use it all for his business, which at present is too much crowded.

MARRIED: Clinton W. Lahnum to Lizzie Clouse, by Rev. W. L. Messe at his residence Sept. 10.

Also, by the same at the same place, Sept. 9, Alexander Platter of Allen county, to Estelle Ann Mason of DeKalb county.

Also, by the same at the residence of the bride's mother east of Auburn, Sept. 13, John Slentz to Emma Hull, both of DeKalb county.

If all our people had the sand shown by the fair managers, the unspeakable nuisance known as the "Garrett Clipper," would soon be abated. The COURIER has held it up by the coat tail in a very vigorous manner all the time, but till now everyone else seemed afraid of being "writ up" and they have gone rough shod over everything in sight from our courts of justice to saloons. Let every decent citizen join in and give the dirty thing a thump whenever it pokes its head into sight.

The Ft. Wayne Races.

The races which occur at Ft. Wayne, September 22nd to 25th, have the biggest list of entries ever published. There are 263 entries to the class races, the eleven races, averaging twenty-four entries to each class. The 2:14 race has nine horses, and all but one has a record of 2:16 or better. The free-for-all trot, on Friday, has twelve entries, all but three of these with records better than 2:20.

Among the special attractions are: Tuesday, Strathso, 2:14¼; Wednesday, Red Bell, 2:11¼; Thursday, Roy Wilkes, 2:08¼, and Friday, Miss Noble Grimes and the pacer, Riley, 2:19¾. Special excursion rates will be made by all railroads.

A thrill of pride went through every Auburnite Friday as they saw our splendid band march for the fair ground, and heard the grand music they made. They are not only musicians but gentlemen as well, the most of them business men. We can't help thinking they should have been employed on Thursday when everybody was here. But we do not wish to disparage the good work done by the other bands, we simply believe ours is ahead.

Rudyard Kipling's new novel, written in collaboration with Wolcott Balestier for the Century, is entitled "The Naulahka, a Tale of West and East." It is a story of America and India. The principal characters live in a "booming" Colorado town, where the story opens, but the scene quickly shifts to the court of an Indian maharajah, whither the hero and the heroine journey to meet with most varied experiences. The story will begin in the November Century.

Ezra Foltz has a curiosity in the shape of a cane, once owned by his father. It is about fifty years old, and had originally a bittersweet vine wound around it, and in growing spirally, the bitter sweet had carried with it, a small sprout of hickory, forcing the hickory into the same spiral form itself had taken. Later on, it appears that the bittersweet had been removed, and now the cane shows only the hickory twined about it in a regular spiral. The head of the spiral is in form of a snake's head, while the cane itself has a neat buckhorn handle. Altogether it is quite a curiosity.

C. J. Porter, the Waterloo optician, will be in Auburn at the Hollister House the first Tuesday in each month, to meet all who desire his services in fitting defective eyes with the proper glasses, and for all the work in his line. Long experience should be valuable in this case above all others. The eyes should not be trifled with. An eye once lost can never be restored and great care should be taken to preserve them. Mr. Porter stands at the head of his profession in this special department. Don't trust your eyes to inexperienced or careless men, but call on him when here and get glasses such as you need. Don't forget the dates, the first Tuesday of each month. 34tf

F. C. Boltz the Ft. Wayne cigar manufacturer has brought out a new cigar, that he calls the "Golden Rule," adopting the same name as that of one of Kessler Brothers' popular makes. We don't know whether there is a copyright on these names or not, but it would look as if one manufacturer ought not to steal the good ideas from another, without at least saying, "By your leave."

The W. C. T. U. ladies did very well with their lunch stand on the fair ground last week. They took in about $60, and as a considerable of their material had been donated, they had left about $24.50 after paying their license and everything. Those who were in attendance most of the time, were Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Baldwin and Laura Keeren, though several others assisted them more or less.

A man who will make such a wager and try to win it is not much of a loss to any community, and perhaps he serves his country best in thus making a terrible example of himself.

AND now they say that the prestige of lawn tennis is beginning to fade; that the game has become so scientific that the less expert are losing interest in it, the fad is declining, and tennis will take its place with croquet, archery, and Newport fox-hunting and the dead political booms of the past. Meanwhile angling is growing in popularity, and the ranks of the fishermen are increasing. There are two recreations—fishing and shooting—which never grow old; they have a sure lease of life; they will last so long as nature shall have a charm for man.

IT seems as though many of the recently published stories of Russian cruelty toward the unhappy Jews of that country must be exaggerated, as it hardly seems possible that even a semi-civilized nation would permit such atrocities. Of course it is well known that the Russian Government has been guilty of great cruelty and inhumanity in dealing with those people, but that it would be a party to such barbarities as recently reported from Boston is almost too much to believe. If there is any such thing as retributive justice, the brutal Romanoffs should be made to feel it, and in the fullest measure.

THE Medical Record utters a timely protest against the enormously prevalent and very injurious habit of smoking cigarettes and inhaling the smoke. "The seriousness lies not alone in the fact that it involves a steady absorption of poison but in the utter hopelessness of the habit and the entire inability of the indulger to give it up. In this respect it resembles with painful similarity the opium habit. Such is the experience of the writer, corroborated by the testimony of other physicians." Any such drug habit which exercises a power of progressive paralysis upon the will, should never be begun. That is the only safety.

SYLVESTER YOUNG, lately of Louisville, Ky., but now of parts unknown, is a remarkably cool young man. Embezzlements, forgeries and peculations of various orders which require cunning and involve a measure of concealment, are usually more in the line of such as he than the downright literal robbery in which masked men, with unpleasant-looking revolvers, delight. His deliberate theft of $50,000 from the pay car of which he had charge, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when he must have known that the crime would be discovered within two hours, and that escape was next to hopeless, stands among the most impudent crimes of the year.

ENGLAND is having great excitement over graveyard insurance, which seems to be a new thing in that country. Ten or twelve years ago Ohio and Pennsylvania were infested with rotten concerns, organized to do just this kind of work, the agents of which would take a risk upon an octogenarian when in articulo mortis. Other States were more or less affected by the evil, but these two easily held the lead. It was a long and tedious operation, rooting out the system, but after a few pirates had been placed within stone walls, the rest of them gave up the business in disgust and turned themselves to some other work, probably quite as congenial and quite as rascally, for men of this class would rather starve at chicanery than thrive in an honest pursuit.

Quelled the Panic.

"I was in Rochester Monday evening," said a traveling man to a Utica Observer reporter, "and attended one of the theaters. Between the acts some fool in the gallery yelled 'fight,' and another fool in the dress-circle at once yelled 'fire.' There was an instant panic, and had it not been for a dozen cool-headed men and the fact that the orchestra kept right along playing there would have been a terrible scene. As it was several ladies fainted and men and women rushed over the back of the seats to the door as though they were daft.

"But there was one incident that I shall never forget as long as I live. A tall gentleman about 50 years of age stepped upon his seat and drew a revolver from his pocket. In a voice that could be heard for some distance around him he said:

"'There is no fire, and I shall be tempted to shoot the first man that tries to rush out of here and possibly trample upon women and children. I mean just what I say, and when the excitement cools down if anybody will point out the miscreant that raised the cry of fire I will give the gentleman $50 for his trouble, and agree to whip the scoundrel who raised the false alarm within five minutes or forfeit another fifty.'

"Then he stood there as quietly as if nothing had disturbed him, and the people who heard him knew by his looks that he meant business, and would do just what he said. 'Good for you!' called a half-dozen voices, and the people in that section sat very quietly during the several minutes of terrible excitement that prevailed all over the crowded house. When order had been restored the gentleman resumed his seat and enjoyed the play."

THE HOME MARKET.

HOW MUCH OF THE WHEAT CROP IT WILL EAT.

Over 200,000,000 Bushels Will Be Exported, While Our Protected Classes Can Eat Only 15,000,000—The Truth About Wages—This Year and Last—Foreign Trade in a Nutshell.

A Dead Failure.

One of the much-vaunted objects of protection is to provide a home market to consume the produce of our farms. Impose a high tariff, say the protectionists, and men will engage in manufactures, will give employment to large numbers of laborers, and thus a great home market will be built up to consume all that our farmers can produce. It is upon this basis that they go to the farmers to seek support for our high tariff system, even trying to persuade them that they get greater advantages from it than anybody else.

This thing has now been going on for thirty years, and it would seem that by this time protection ought to have accomplished something substantial in the way of building up its home market. Let us see what the result so far has been.

By taking wheat as the most important of our farm products, and finding out how much of this year's crop will be consumed by the protected classes, we can form an approximately correct estimate of the importance of protection's home market.

How many people in this country are subject to foreign competition, and therefore benefited by protection? In answer to this question three eminent specialists in the employ of the United States Government have made estimates. These are Worthington C. Ford, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the State Department; Professor Simon Newcomb, Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac, Navy Department; and E. B. Elliott, the United States Government Actuary.

These three authorities reached slightly different results. According to Ford the number of persons subject to foreign competition is 4.70 per cent.; according to Elliott, 4.75 per cent.; and according to Newcomb, 5.20 per cent. For our purposes here let us take 5 per cent., which is a little above the average of the three estimates.

Now the average population of the country for the fiscal year now passing is given at about 65,000,000, and the party dependent on protection by the above estimate is, therefore, 3,250,000. This is, then, the dimensions of protection's home market.

Now let us see how much of our wheat crop this boasted home market will eat this year.

According to the Agricultural Department at Washington the average per capita consumption of wheat in the United States is now about 4⅗ bushels. At this rate, our protected classes will consume just 15,266,000 bushels of our present large wheat crop. At the same rate the farmers themselves and other unprotected classes of our population will require 288,166,000 bushels, an amount which dwarfs into utter insignificance the consumption of the protected classes.

The wheat crop of the present year has been placed by the Agricultural Department at 544,000,000 bushels, though some authorities put it higher. Besides this, a surplus of 20,000,000 bushels was brought over from last year's crop. The total supply this year will, therefore, be not less than 579,000,000 bushels.

The entire home demand for this wheat will be about as follows:

	Bushels.
Nonprotected home market	288,166,000
Protected home market	15,266,000
For seed	55,000,000
Total	358,432,000

This leaves for export to the foreign market over 211,000,000 bushels, or a quantity sufficient to feed, at our own rate of consumption, a population of 45,000,000.

This is a most astonishing result after thirty years of effort at creating a home market. According to these figures our farmers will have to sell thirteen times as much of their wheat abroad as the protected classes of this country will consume.

If protection had carried out its boasted scheme of creating a home market large enough to eat all our farmers' wheat, it would have had to bring here 45,000,000 people and put them into some form of protected manufacturing.

With such figures as these before them our farmers will see what an enormous contract at market building protection has taken upon itself. Do they believe that it will ever finish the job?

One of Horr's Jokes.

R. G. Horr, the New York Tribune's tariff joker, is at it again. In a recent number of the Weekly Tribune he tries to show that our protective tariff causes foreigners to lower their prices, and as an illustration of this he says: "We have been for years making no tin plate in the United States. A protective tariff was placed on foreign tin plate by the McKinley bill, and our business men are preparing to make American tin plate. If my doctrine is true, the following will be the result: Tin plate will be produced in America in a few months after our factories are set in motion, better in quality and cheaper in price than during the past five years, when we obtained all our supplies from abroad. If such shall be the result, will not that prove the wisdom of that increase of duty? Do not misunderstand me! I do not say that tin plate will not then also be cheaper abroad than it is now. That will of course be the case. But we have been waiting for a fall in price for foreign tin plate (which is mostly iron or steel) similar to the reduction that has taken place in iron and steel goods which are made in this country. It has not come."

Now when Mr. Horr says this he is either showing his ignorance of the subject, or else he is making a willful mistatement. If he had consulted the Treasury reports he would have found that the plate has declined in price very greatly during the past eighteen years.

The tin plate imported in 1873 was invoiced at 7.65 cents per pound; in 1876, at 5.16; in 1879, at 3.78; in 1882, at 3.76; in 1885, at 3.28. The average price for the five years 1886-'90 was 3 cents. For the fiscal year 1891, however, the import price was 3.50 cents per pound, an increase due to the enormous demand created by the McKinley law. If Mr. Horr will examine present English market reports he will find that the grade of tin plate known as "I C Bessemer steel, coke finish," the kind most in use, is now selling at exactly 3 cents a pound.

This all means that tin plate has fallen to considerably less than half the price it commanded in 1873. This fact the tariff joker could easily have verified by merely examining the Government reports.

But the joker is true to his character as a wag. After making the willful mistatement just exposed, he winds up his article by saying: "Falsehoods have had their day. The supremacy of truth is at hand."

Where will Horr stand under that "supremacy?"

Foreign Trade in a Nutshell.

T. E. Willson says in the New York World: Jones, an American farmer, has 10,000 bushels of wheat. He takes it to Liverpool, sells it, and receives a check on a foreign bank for $10,000 in payment. It will not pay him to bring back gold. He could have sold his wheat at the same price in New York as in Liverpool, less freight, and at the same price in Chicago as in New York, less freight. He loses his time and his work, selling for gold, and there is no profit in it. Gold is worth less in the United States than in any country on earth. An ounce buys less of anything. But the value of a dollar is so much greater in Liverpool than in New York that the $10,000 will buy there woolen goods worth $20,000 here.

"He invests his bank check for $10,000 in cloth, and brings the cloth back to sell here. It goes to the Custom House, and Jones is informed that he can have it upon payment of $12,000, which is the fine levied to discourage his competition with the woolen mill-owners. Instead of selling his wheat at $1 he has sold at 80 cents. His net proceeds for his 10,000 bushels of wheat, after adding the fine and selling the cloth to his countrymen, is $8,000. He is between the devil and the deep sea. He must sell for gold at no profit or for cloth at a loss. It does not matter whether Jones, the farmer, does it himself or hires men to do it; whether the Chicago broker hands him 80 cents and settles at once or waits three months. The result is the same, the law is the same, the intent is the same.

"Protection is a fine levied upon the payment received for our exported farm surplus to prevent the surplus American farmer from competing with the American mill-owner."

HAPPY ABOUT PORK.

Inconsistent Protectionists Rejoice that Germany Will Buy Our Pork.

The protectionists are making merry over the removal of the prohibition of American pork by Germany. In their glee, however, they are overturning many of their favorite idols of economic heresy.

They are showing, for example, that it will make a market for from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 more of American pork; and in putting this down as so much gained, they neglect to make any deduction whatever for the German duty on pork. According to the oft-repeated teaching of our high-tariff wiseacres, "the foreigner pays the tax" in this country. But if the foreigner pays the tax when we import from Europe, then we must pay tariff taxes in Europe whenever Europe imports from us.

Now Germany has a tax on pork and bacon of more than 2 cents a pound. Are farmers ready to pay that tax in order to sell their hog meat? That is what they must do if there is any truth in what the wise Republican editors so often tell us. Look into the editorial columns of the New York Tribune and other high tariff papers, and you will find frequently assertions of this principle: When we put a duty on foreign goods there is no increase of the price of those goods in our own market, since the Europeans are compelled by our tariff to reduce their prices by the amount of the duty.

It is a poor rule that will not work both ways; and what is sauce for the European goose must also be sauce for the American gander. Of course our farmers will see that German lawmakers with this brilliant protectionist theory in their heads, must argue in this way: "We have put a duty of more than two cents a pound on pork, but that does not make it any higher to German buyers, since the American farmers have had to knock off more than two cents a pound from their price, and thus pay our tariff tax."

This is an exact reproduction of the "argument" so often made by our protectionists. Now, one question for these protectionists: If you believe your own teaching, why do you rejoice over the fact that the American farmers will have to take two cents a pound less for all the pork they send to Germany?

The protectionist organs are pointing out, too, the benefits which both countries are to get by the renewal of trade in pork. Not simply America but Germany, too, is to be benefited.

But this knocks down another protectionist idol. Have we not heard over and over again that when a nation imports what it can produce itself and is producing, there is a loss to the community? Labor, the high-tariff wiseacres assure us, is made poorer by every pound of competing foreign goods brought in. But Germany produces a very large number of swine; and it was to protect these that Bismarck prohibited our pork upon pretended sanitary grounds. Notwithstanding this excellent opportunity to apply their native-grown American theory on German soil, our high tariff organs are actually claiming that Germany will be much benefited by taking our pork.

When they make this statement they forget also that other cardinal principle of the protectionist crew, viz., that when you buy an article made at home you make a profit and the seller makes a profit, and thus you keep two profits at home; but when you buy a foreign article only one profit stays in the country. This is venerable protectionist teaching, but they shrink from applying it to Germany. They reserve it for use upon home-grown American fools.

But our protectionists are right for once. Get them off American soil and they throw their theories to the winds and indulge themselves in the unwonted exercise of ordinary common-sense. The American farmer will not pay the German tax; and our pork is really good for Germany. They see it!

The Truth About Wages.

The position of the tariff reformers in the matter of wages and competition from European pauper labor has been all along that the greater producing power of American labor should remove all fear of dangerous competition from Europe. They have always claimed that wherever a true comparison is made between wages in America and in Europe, a comparison of the proportion of wages in every dollar's worth of goods, American wages will almost invariably be found lower than wages in Europe.

The tariff reformers did not expect to see this fact admitted by the high tariff cranks; but now the New York Tribune, the most tariff-blinded of all protection journals, says:

"It is acknowledged by foreign manufacturers and railroad men who have visited this country and carefully examined affairs here that the higher efficacy of labor secured by higher wages here to a great extent counterbalances the difference in wages paid."

If so, what need for protection? Do you not see that you have given away your case?

This Year and Last.

Last year President Harrison and Mr. McKinley inveighed against cheapness, and declared that "a cheap coat means a cheap man."

This year all the Republican speakers and organs are trying to show that pretty much everything, including a coat, is cheaper than before the new tariff law was passed.

Last year every Protectionist newspaper declared that a higher tariff was necessary in order to prevent the "flooding of the home market with foreign goods."

This year they are boasting of increased importations.—N. Y. World.

JOHN BEESLEY, who has just died, was sexton of St. Michael's Church in Charleston, S. C., for nearly fifty years.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Open or Shut?

The movement to close the World's Fair at Chicago Sundays is a movement hostile to the Fair itself.—New York World.

There does not seem to be much occasion for difference of opinion. The debate is all on the side of Sunday closing.—St. Paul Globe.

What the people will indorse is the application of common sense to the question. Beyond this neither custom nor law can go.—New York Press.

By a vote of 56 to 36, the lady managers of the World's Fair registered themselves in favor of the Fair closing its doors on Sunday.—Milwaukee News.

The wise course, and the one that will in all likelihood be adopted, is to admit the public to the Fair on seven days in the week with certain restrictions on Sunday.—Indianapolis Journal.

Whatever position the reader may take upon the question of opening the World's Fair on Sunday, he must admit that the American Sabbath Union made a powerful protest before the Board of Managers.—Omaha Bee.

Open Fair gates would immensely diminish drukenness, disorder, excursions, crime, and depredations of a various nature by engaging the attention and time of tens of thousands in an orderly, pleasant, and profitable manner.—Troy Press.

The exhibition is being conducted under the auspices of the government, which has invited all other nations to participate therein, and it would be anomalous indeed if the managers should trample upon the laws which hedge the institution of the Sabbath and fling an insult into the faces of every Christian in the land.—Pittsburg Commercial-Gazette.

The machinery of the Fair may be stopped on Sunday to prevent the noise and give its attendants rest. But to close the Exposition on the one day when hundreds of thousands of people can alone visit it would not only be an injustice to them, and a fatal blow to the financial success of the Fair, but a foolish concession to a superstition which no longer dominates America or any other civilized country.—New York World.

Foreign War Clouds.

Everybody has been watching so long for an outbreak of war in Europe that it would now be about the most surprising thing that could happen.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

There is one good material reason for keeping the peace at present. Russia has just ordered a new rifle for her infantry and would probably rather not fight until rearmament is completed.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Certainly if the Emperor desired war he could find a better pretext in this (Dardanelles) incident than has served for many a previous outbreak, and an occasion which would give him an active ally in England, whether this latter country desired it or not. But William has said he was for peace, and evidently meant it.—Springfield Republican.

The Dardanelles incident would probably have caused war had it occurred a dozen years ago. At present, however, France is on Russia's side, Turkey is partially acquiescent on account of her opposition to England on the Egyptian question, and England will make no formidable protest under present conditions. Slowly, but adroitly and surely, Russia is forcing her way to the southward, and the old Muscovite dream of establishing its headquarters at Constantinople may be verified earlier than Central or Western Europe imagine.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Short crops will not stand in the way of war, but may precipitate it. The French are eager at all times for a row. The masses in Russia and Germany would welcome a campaign to relieve the monotony of semi-starvation. Austria and Italy have their internal troubles. England has vast interests on the continent and in Asia and Africa. If there is any big disturbance going on she will be dragged into it. France and Russia cannot much longer contemplate the triple alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy without making an effort to smash it, and the first flash of gunpowder will light a lurid blaze throughout Europe.—Atlanta Constitution.

Two Great Towns.

Chicago has long ago abandoned her competition with St. Louis and scorns any lesser rival than New York, whom she fairly derides since she beat her for the World's Exposition.—New Orleans Delta.

Chicago was so jealous of New York's Park place horror that it jostled down the cornice of a building on a poor newsboy, just to show that she, too, has some house that were put up beginning with the top story.—Minneapolis Times.

It is a very cold day when Chicago gets left. No sooner has New York announced the intention of putting up a building twenty-seven stories high than Chicago comes up smiling with plans for an Odd Fellows' temple thirty-four stories high. By the way, how high is that New York Grant monument to be?—[Peoria Transcript.

Since the census the Tribune claims Chicago has so gained in population by annexation and natural increase that it now has, or will have at the end of the year, 1,250,000 inhabitants. New York is told it must annex Brooklyn before 1900 or yield the crown to Chicago, which "will have 1,500,000 of population before the century closes." The chances are if New York doesn't hurry Chicago may count in Brooklyn.—[Montgomery Advertiser.

Minneapolis Says No.

St. Paul—not the apostle, who was not a matrimonial enthusiast, but the neighbor of Minneapolis—asked Minnie to marry him. Minnie says "No."—Detroit Journal.

St. Paul has proposed, but Minneapolis has rejected his suit. She says she won't marry the fellow who is so badly in debt and can't get within five miles of her.—Buffalo Times.

Miss Minneapolis forbids publication of the banns that were to make her one with Mr. St. Paul, and lets out the secret that five miles of comparatively open space lies between them.—Louisville Journal.

Minneapolis prefers to go it alone, and respectfully declines to unite in bonds of municipal wedlock with St. Paul. The newspaper fight between these two cities will be fanned into fresh flame for a while.—Buffalo Commercial.

St. Paul made a very bad move when she proposed consolidation with Minneapolis. The spiteful flour city makes the suggestion the occasion for mud slinging at the other twin, and at the same time booms herself in the most vainglorious fashion.—Kansas City Times.

Grunts and Squeals.

There can be no doubt that this decree will prove a direct blessing to this country.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A hungry man does not examine his breakfast with a microscope before he tastes it.—Philadelphia Record.

The great American hog seems to have at last got the German bars to such a height that it will have no trouble in jumping over. Hurrah for the hog!—Kansas City Times.

ALONG LAKE SUPERIOR.

SCENES AND TRADITIONS OF A ROMANTIC REGION.

A Great Spread of Country Abounding in Natural Attractions—The Dalles of the St. Louis—Interesting Indian Legends—Work and Wanderings of the Early Catholic Missionaries—The Copper Mines.

Superior's Shore.

The south shore of Lake Superior can much of it be regarded as quite like an unknown country. Picturesque America says it is 233 years since the first white man set foot there. He met a crowd of Ojibway and Algonquin Indians, and five years later they killed him. The two centuries and over since then are a long time in American history, yet in all that time but little about this great inland sea has been written. The lake is 380 miles long and 120 miles wide, and along the south shore are scattered massive rocky walls, giant cliffs, and dense forests, the equal to anything existing on the Atlantic coast.

At the extreme western end of Lake Superior is St. Louis Bay, separated from the lake itself by a narrow strip of land; or, more properly, two, called Minnesota and Wisconsin Points, forming a natural harbor of many miles in extent. It was first visited by civilized men in 1632, as nearly as history records.

Duluth, named after the noted Frenchman Du Lhut, stands on the north shore of the bay, at the extreme western end of the great chain of lakes, 1,750 miles from Quebec and 1,200 from Buffalo. Its situation is picturesque. From a narrow beach abrupt hills rise to a height of 500 feet. Upon the summit of the ridge thus formed and on what must have been the former level of the lake is a natural roadbed 100 to 250 feet wide, which local enterprise has transformed into Terrace drive. On the sides of the intervening hills rests the city.

Westward from Duluth are the Dalles of the St. Louis. Here Nature is harsh, rugged, and somber, tearing her way in a watercourse four miles long, with a descent of 400 feet. The banks are formed of cold gray slate rocks, clad with an ample growth of bleak pine, and twisted, split, and torn into the wildest shapes. Through the dismal channel thus bordered the current surges with terrific force, leaping and eddying and uttering a savage roar that the neighboring hills sullenly reverberate.

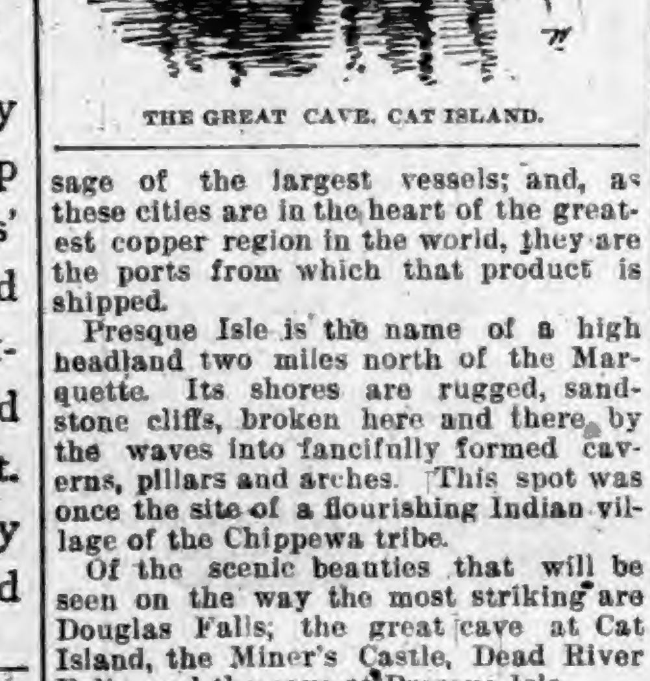
Upon the south shore of St. Louis Bay are the two towns, West Superior and Old Superior, with Superior Bay on the east. An Indian legend relating to the bay is still related there. It appears that the Chippewas imagined the home of the Bad Manitou to be at the gateway to Superior Bay. Because the currents of the bay and of the lake conflict just there and keep the water constantly, though not violently, disturbed, they fancied that the evil spirit kept house in or under the water just at that point. They knew he made trouble everywhere, and the unexplained disturbance in the water was therefore a certain sign that this was where he lived. In order to satisfy the demon they never passed that spot in their boats without dropping their valuables into it as a peace offering.

To the south, within a few hours' drive, are the falls of the Black River, the Minnehaha of Wisconsin, 150 feet or more in height, and just east of Superior Station the Nemadji River, a deep stream that flows into Superior Bay. The name was given by the Chippewas, and signifies "left hand," meaning the river at the left hand as one enters the bay from the lake.

Still skirting along Superior's southern border the Iron River, Pike Lake and White Bay are crossed and Ashland is soon reached. Northward lie what are known as the Apostle Islands. Father Marquette, the central figure of lake country history, passed some time on one of them, now called Madeline Island. An antiquated Roman Catholic chapel still stands at La Pointe. It was built of rough-hewn logs, and is now used as an adjunct of the newer structure. The chief object of interest in the room is a famous old pitcher that hangs over the altar, and that is only interesting because of a tradition to the effect that it was brought from France by the adventurous priests whose zeal led them to this wild region.

It is not far to Michigan and the heart of the Gogebic iron range. The country here is 750 feet above Lake Superior's level. Fish and game abound.

Houghton and Hancock, "the twin cities of the Gitchie Gummee," are located on opposite sides of Portage Lake, which separates Keweenaw Point from the mainland. The channel of Portage Lake is deep enough to admit the passage of the largest vessels; and, as these cities are in the heart of the greatest copper region in the world, they are the ports from which that product is shipped.



THE GREAT CAVE, CAT ISLAND.

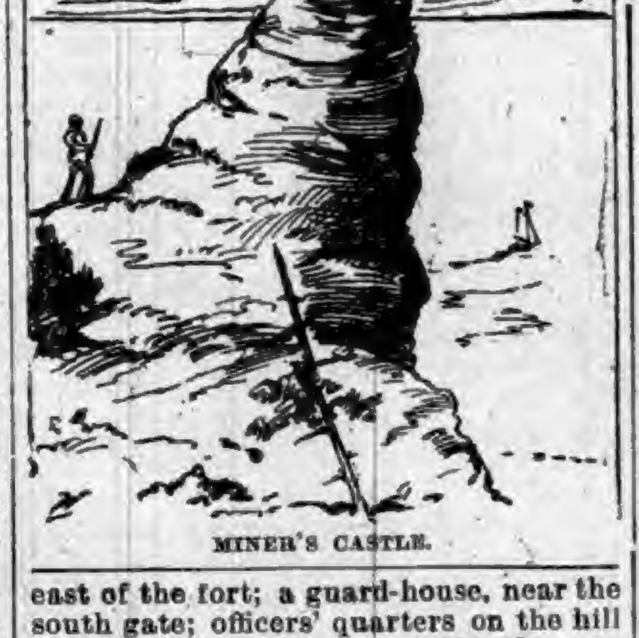
Presque Isle is the name of a high headland two miles north of the Marquette. Its shores are rugged, sandstone cliffs, broken here and there by the waves into fancifully formed caverns, pillars and arches. This spot was once the site of a flourishing Indian village of the Chippewa tribe.

Of the scenic beauties that will be seen on the way the most striking are Douglas Falls, the great cave at Cat Island, the Miner's Castle, Dead River Falls, and the cave at Presque Isle.

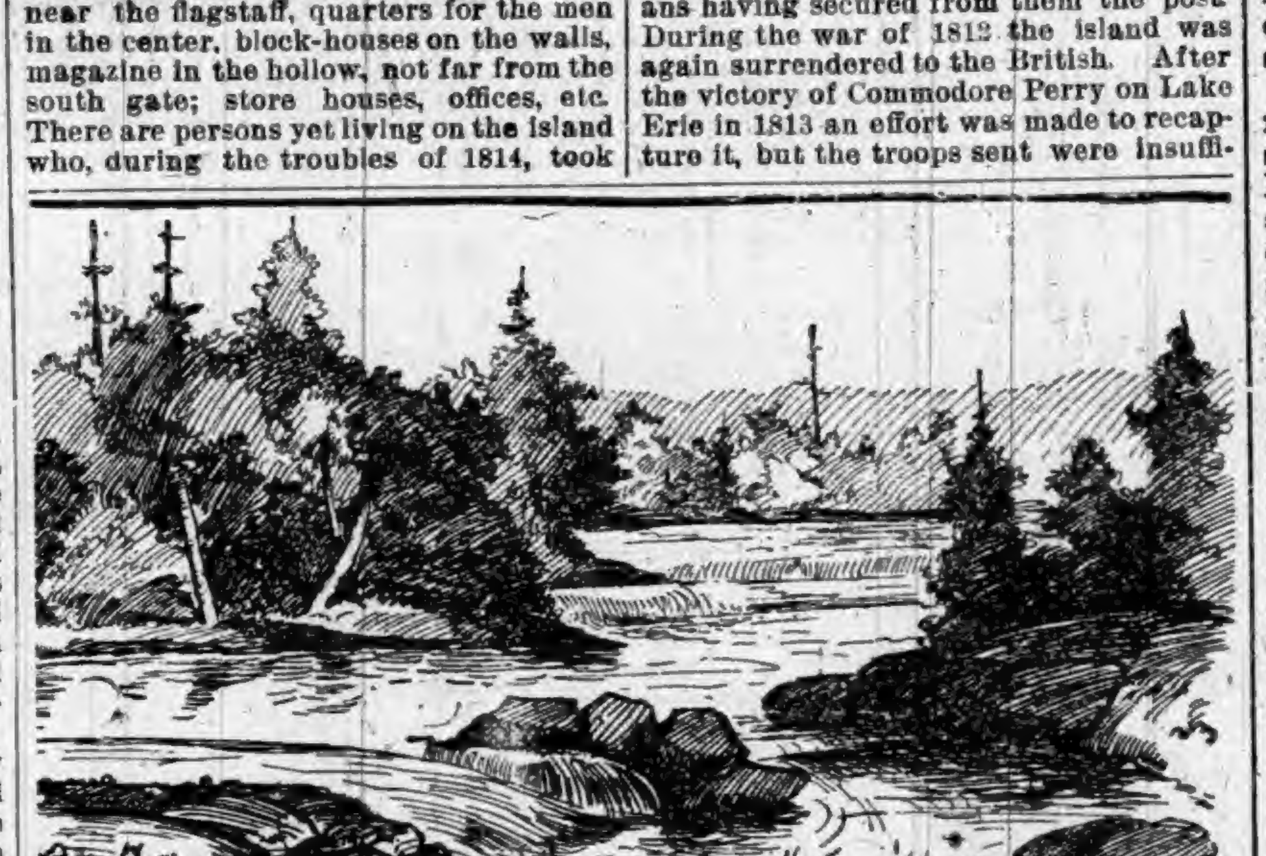
A spot that should be visited before leaving the lake shore is Mackinac, pronounced as though spelled "Mackinaw." Mackinac Island lies like a broken link between Upper and Lower Michigan. Around it meet the waters of the two great lakes, Huron and Michigan, whose level is 581 feet above the sea. This island has sufficient area to cause a journey of nine miles in skirting its shores. It is shaped as if it had been made square, then some giant force had pulled each of its corners a little way. It rises sheer above the translucent waters, a great plateau 200 to 300 feet in height, wooded luxuriantly and framed with a broad white beach.

As is the custom with old villages wherever they are seen, the little original settlement crouches at the foot of the bluff beneath the fort—a straggling, picturesque settlement of shops and cottages, churches and hotels, facing the white strand and the marvelously clear water. As is also the custom with the wiser planning of mankind to-day, the far choicer high ground is being built upon with modern hotels and lovely villas. Up there, also, is the military reservation of 103 acres, and the remainder has been set apart by the Government—justly appreciating its unique attractions—for a national park.

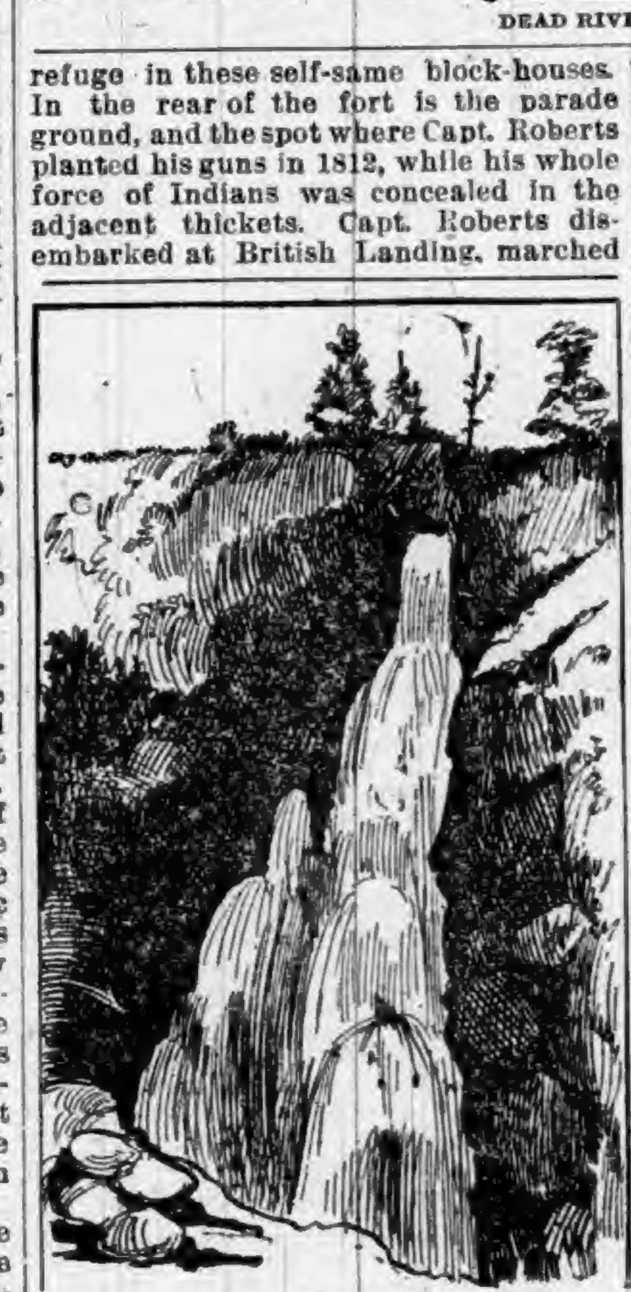
Fort Mackinac, which stands on a rocky eminence just above the town, was built by the English in 1780. The buildings are a hospital, outside the wall and east of the fort; a guard-house, near the south gate; officers' quarters on the hill near the flagstaff, quarters for the men in the center, block-houses on the walls, magazine in the hollow, not far from the south gate; store houses, offices, etc. There are persons yet living on the island who, during the troubles of 1814, took refuge in these self-same block-houses. In the rear of the fort is the parade ground, and the spot where Capt. Roberts planted his guns in 1812, while his whole force of Indians was concealed in the adjacent thickets. Capt. Roberts disembarked at British Landing, marched across the island, and took up his station at this point without being discovered.



MINER'S CASTLE.



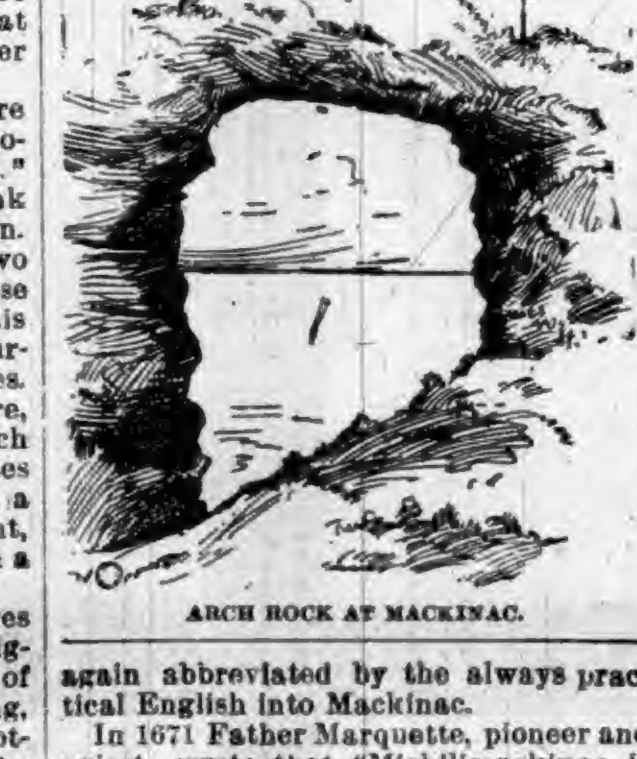
DEAD RIVER FALLS.



DOUGLAS FALLS.

Half or three quarters of a mile behind Fort Mackinac, on the crowning point of the island, is Fort Holmes, built after the British captured the post in 1812. The excavation encircling the embankment or earthworks was originally broader and deeper than now. The place of the gate is seen on the east side, one of the posts yet remaining to mark its position. In the center of the fort was erected a huge block-house, beneath which was the magazine. Near the gate was the entrance to several cellars, which have now caved in. History shows this fort to have been considered a very remarkable and formidable defense in its time. Its old name was Fort George, but when it became an American possession it was renamed in honor of Maj. Holmes, a hero who fell at Early's Farm.

As far back as history begins to vie with traditions that reach into the distant past Mackinac Island has been a place of great interest. A legend relates that a large number of Indians were once assembled at Point St. Ignace, and while intently gazing at the rising sun, during the great Manitou or February moon, they beheld the island suddenly rise up from the water, assuming its present form. From the point of observation it bore the fancied resemblance to the back of a huge turtle; hence they called it by the name of Mas-che-ne-mac-sing, which means a great turtle. The name, when put into a French dress, became Machilimackinac, to be in turn again abbreviated by the always practical English into Mackinac.



ARCH ROCK AT MACKINAC.

In 1671 Father Marquette, pioneer and priest, wrote that "Michilimackinac is an island famous in these regions, of more than a league in diameter, and elevated in some places by such high cliffs as to be seen more than twelve leagues off." Father Marquette was doubtless the first white man to visit it, or at least to dwell upon it. He established a school on the island in 1671 for the education of the Indian youths, and so much was he attached to "the Straits" that when he died in 1675 it was at his request his Indian converts brought his body back to the little mission established by him at St. Ignace. The first vessel ever seen on these waters was the Griffin, built by the explorer La Salle on Lake Erie in 1678.

In 1695 Cadillac, who still later founded Detroit, established a small fort here. Then the contests and skirmishes, not unmingled with massacres, until finally Mackinac, with all the other French strongholds on the lakes, was surrendered to the English in September, 1761. In 1793 began the conspiracy of Pontiac—a coup de guerre wonderful for the sagacity with which it was planned and the vigor with which it was executed.

A year afterward, a treaty of peace having been made with the Indians, troops were again sent to raise the English flag over the fort. The present fort on Mackinac Island was built by the English in 1770. By a treaty of peace between Great Britain and the United States Sept. 3, 1783, the island fell within the boundary of the United States, but under various processes the English refused to withdraw their troops. By a second treaty, concluded Nov. 19, 1794, it was stipulated that the British should withdraw on or before June 1, 1797. Two companies of United States troops arrived in October, 1796, and took possession, a previous treaty with the Indians having secured from them the post. During the war of 1812 the island was again surrendered to the British. After the victory of Commodore Perry on Lake Erie in 1813 an effort was made to recapture it, but the troops sent were insufficient in numbers, and not until 1814 was the American flag again hoisted over the Gibraltar of the lakes.

In savage minds Mackinac's superb position was appreciated, then the missionaries made it their chief pulpit, next civilized warfare made it a coveted stronghold, later it became a commercial center. This was when the fur trade was carried on by John Jacob Astor. Mr. Astor organized the American Fur Company with a capital of $2,000,000. The outposts of the company were scattered throughout the whole West and Northwest. This island was the great central mart to which the goods were brought from New York by way of the lakes, and from Quebec and Montreal by way of the Ottawa, Lake Nipissing, and French River. From this point they were distributed to all the outposts, while from all the Indian countries the furs were annually brought down to the island by the company's agents, whence they were sent to New York, Quebec, or to Europe. This company was organized in 1809 and continued to do business until 1848.

MRS. SUSAN G. COOKE.

The New Secretary of the Women's Board of the World's Fair.

Mrs. Susan G. Cooke, who has been officially appointed to take Phœbe Couzins' place as Secretary of the Board of Lady Managers, is a very rapid worker, clear-headed and expeditious, and in addition to these qualities is exceedingly patient and sweet-tempered.

She was born in New York. Her father was Dr. George Spaulding Gale, one of the most prominent surgeons of Vermont, and her grandfather, also a native of Vermont, was one of the heroes of 1812. Her mother was allied to one of the oldest families in New York and possessed much intellectual ability. Mrs. Cooke was educated in New York City and shortly after graduation married Sidney E. Cooke, a member of the New York Stock Exchange. They moved to Knoxville, Tenn., and Mr. Cooke died there in 1883. Mrs. Cooke has had much experience in charitable work and for several years was one of the managers of the Brooklyn Orphan Asylum. She is a woman of wide culture and with a winning gentleness. She has a quick sense of humor and is an interesting conversationalist. She has also the faculty of adjusting difficulties without resorting to heroic methods and promoting the ends of peace and harmony.

They Will Not Touch Castor Oil.

No sort of bird, beast, or creeping thing will touch a castor-oil plant. It seems to be a rank poison to all the animal world. Even a goat will starve before biting off a leaf, and a horse will sniff at it and turn up his upper lip as though it had the most detestable odor on the face of the earth. Army worms and the locusts will pass it by, though they may eat every other green thing in sight, and there is no surer way to drive moles away from a lawn than to plant a few castor beans here and there. Even the tobacco worm will refuse to be fed on its leaves. There is hardly another instance in natural history of a plant being so universally detested by the animal world.—Globe-Democrat.

Reforms Under Alexander II.

The reaction which has set in since the withdrawal of the restrictions imposed by Nicholas was complete. Not only was the censorship no longer exercised with anything approaching rigor—a negative change which had the effect of calling into existence journals innumerable, nearly all of an extreme liberal tendency—but police supervision was now so inadequately performed that secret printing-presses, all used for revolutionary purposes, could be established in the very heart of St. Petersburg. It was in 1861 and 1862 that the first numbers of the revolutionary print called "Land and Liberty," and of another called "Great Russia," were produced and circulated from hand to hand, and that revolutionary proclamations were for the first time printed and posted up at night on the walls of the public buildings. The prohibition enforced by the censorship of Nicholas' time against all foreign books of a political and philosophical character had been removed with such success that volumes which no one out of Russia would consider dangerous, but which had really the effect of exciting and inflaming the inexperienced Russian mind, were introduced in large quantities. Buckle and Mill were much read in Russian translations. "Mill on Liberty" appeared in two versions, one of which was enriched by notes from the translator, who pointed out that Mill's notions on the subject of freedom were meager and not sufficiently advanced. * * *

The first half-dozen years of the reign of the Emperor Alexander formed a period less of reform than of relief. It was not until February, 1861, that, after a long and painful process of elaboration, the reform known officially as the "law for the amelioration of the condition of the peasantry"—in other words, the emancipation of the serfs—was proclaimed. Meantime the precise constitution of the contemplated district and provincial assemblies for the management and regulation of local interests had not yet been decided upon, while the institution of open tribunals, with oral evidence and the jury system, existed only as a project fully entertained. But the newspaper press had already been placed in quite a new position, and the censorship was exercised with a very light hand, both in regard to publications issued in Russia and to those introduced from abroad.

The universities, too, had been thrown open to all who could or could not afford a few shillings a term in the shape of fees; for a fund had been established by the richer students, aided by the professors, to which persons unconnected with the universities were allowed, and even encouraged to contribute, in the interest of those for whom the almost nominal charges made by the university authorities were nevertheless too high. Exhibitions and scholarships were founded for their benefit; and the actors, actresses, singers and musicians of the capital were expected, and indeed required, to give entertainments in aid of the poor students' fund, which it became so much the fashion to support that the poor student seemed at one time on the point of himself becoming fashionable.—H. Sutherland Edwards, in Harper's Magazine.

English Comment on Our Poor-Houses.

Pauperism and the United States are ideas which it is difficult for the mind to associate; nevertheless the census returns show us that pauperism is there not wholly unknown. Some of the American paupers are supported by contract with private persons who receive them on their farms or places of residence. Others are maintained in public almshouses, and of this class of poor there are now 73,045, which is less, however, by some 5,000 than the figures of 1880, when the population was little over fifty millions. Of this number the negroes and mulattos count for 6,418, the Indians for 36 and the Chinese for 13. It is amusing to note the reluctance in America to call these institutions "almshouses"—our term "workhouses" is, of course, unknown. In Arizona, says Mr. Howard Wines, in California, Colorado, and Nevada they are termed "hospitals;" in Ohio "infirmaries;" in Indiana, "asylums," and in North Carolina the names of most almshouses were changed by a recent act of the Legislature to "homes for the aged and infirm."—[London News.

New Clearings in Frontier Settlements Often give birth to miasma, as one of the first fruits of an upturning of the soil. Malaria is a relentless foe to the newly arrived emigrant if he be unprepared to meet it by the use of a reliable preparative and preventive. It, therefore, behooves those seeking the far West in search of homes to provide themselves with a medicinal guaranty against chills and fever, bilious remittent, and ailments of kindred origin. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has for nearly half of a century been esteemed the best. From Maine to Oklahoma, from Victoria to San Juan del Sul, its acknowledged superiority meets with no challenge in localities where it has been used. Medical testimony, the most positive and direct, backs up the general verdict, no less in regard to its virtues in case of liver complaint, dyspepsia, constipation, rheumatism, and kidney ailments than in cases of malarial disease.

Usury.

To check the evil of usury, the municipal councils of many small towns in Russia have established pawn houses, in which money is loaned at a very low rate of interest. It might be well to have similar establishments in many cities and towns in this country. It is hard to understand why it is right that the poor, who are invariably compelled to give ample collateral security on their modest loans, should be forced to pay the most exorbitant rates of interest.

Some time ago a sunstroke so affected my nerves that at times they were beyond control; eyes were dull and without expression, and a twitching of the muscles of the face and almost continual movement of the hands and arms, especially the left side. There was impediment of speech, and at times would be so overcome with dizziness as to be unable to stand. How's
Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

Florence Jackman, from near Waterloo, went Tuesday to Chicago, where she will spend one year in a preparatory school, after which time, she will enter upon missionary work in Japan.

The COURIER correspondent was in error last week in saying that J. G. Johnson had sold out his millinery store. He has not, but will remain at the old stand His grand fall opening is Friday and Saturday of this week, Sept. 18 and 19.

Will Leas was up to Sturgis last Thursday to the fair to advertise the Waterloo fair. He did not think the grounds there were very good, although they have a full mile race track. But with the 80 acres of land, this track takes all of it, so that at one point there is not room to drive around the outside.

Mrs. A. J. Sinclair who has been very ill for a long time died last Wednesday morning. An autopsy was made the same afternoon by Drs. Chamberlain, Broughton, Bevier, Carpenter, Darby, I. O. Buchtel, of Auburn, and Dr. Humphrey of Angola. The funeral services were held at the residence at three o'clock p. m. Friday. A husband, three sons and one daughter, are left to mourn a devoted wife and mother.

One evening last week about 9 o'clock two young men came out of C. Meek's restaurant, where they had taken lunch as a freight train was passing. They attempted to cross the track when the train went by; the noise had prevented their hearing one approaching from the opposite direction, and one of the men was caught on the pilot and carried west Two ribs were broken but he was not seriously injured. His companion was killed or died very soon. His name was Ferris and he lived at Flint, Steuben Co.

The week just past has been a very interesting one to many of our citizens. The town has been full of ministers, over a hundred it is said, and the services in the U. B. church have been very interesting and drew crowded houses, the occasion being the annual conference of the U. B church. Saturday evening a converted Roman Catholic priest and a converted nun of the same faith gave their past experience. Sunday, morning and evening, the pulpits of all the churches were filled by some of the many visiting ministers. Bishop Cassel, of Elkhart, preached, morning and evening, in the U. B. church, where the building was packed. The sermon in the morning was addressed especially to the ministers, but it was full of teachings for every one and elicited close attention from all present. After the sermon, one minister and three elders were ordained.

CONCORD.

James Hennessy was sick Monday.

Singing at the church every Wednesday and Friday evenings.

George Reed and wife of near Auburn, visited at Wayne Scott's Sunday.

Will Koch spent Saturday night and Sunday with friends at Fairview.

Mert Johnson was down from Huntertown one day last week on business.

John Morr will move in the near future on the Olive Nelson farm near Auburn.

Celia Morr visited friends in Auburn Junction and attended the fair last week.

Burt Timmerman, wife and daughter, were the guests of Chas. Jackson's at Mt. Hope Sunday.

John Baker bid his friends goodby last Saturday afternoon and left for Vanceburg, Kentucky.

Our school commenced Monday at the Carr school house with a fair attendance, and with Henry Krabill as instructor.

Willie Scott is some better, but suffers from the abcess on his neck. Dr. Bowman lanced it Sunday. He is improving.

Miss Rosa Jones, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Berta Fetters for several weeks returned to her home in Bryan, Ohio on Monday.

Holly Wasson and a friend by the name Tyndall boarded the train Monday for the wild west. Holly says we may hear of him being married to an Indian squaw and living in a dugout.

Cormie Gibford will go to Indianapolis soon to learn stenography and typewriting. Cormie is a bright student and will be sure to succeed in whatever he undertakes. We wish him success.

Mr. Mansfield is here visiting his wife, and Mr. Coate came home also last week, so there is quite a family reunion at the homestead. Mr. Coate will stay for a short time and then he will return to his work at Muncie.

Is. Layman, who went to Janesville, Wis., several weeks ago to attend a telegraph school, writes home that if he was back in old Indiana he would stay here. Israel is a gritty chap, but has never been away from home before.

Miss Moore and brothers gave their young friends a party on Saturday evening. A large crowd was present and a pleasant evening was spent in playing games, eating candy and chewing gum. That is the girls report any way.

For the last few weeks there has been a great cry at St Joe about the scarcity of butter. But lo and behold, each of the stores got two or three pounds ahead and refuse to buy what comes in. Hurry up the creamery gentlemen for surely it is needed.

Concord isn't dead yet, if indications amount to anything. Henry Baker is starting the boom by putting up a new store building and we hear some one else will follow with a soloon. Concord will be a lively town this winter with two stores, a saloon and a new church.

Married: at the residence of the bride's parents on Wednesday evening Sept. 9, 1891, Henry Krabill of Mt. Hope, to Miss Dora Shilling.

May happiness be theirs,
May peace their steps attend,
And may contentment fill the years
Until their lives shall end.

BUTLER.

J. A. Campbell reports the illness of his brother, L. W. Campbell, as still more serious with hope of recovery meager.

Our people gave Auburn but a very moderate attendance at their fair last week, owing partly to indifferent railroad accommodations and a busy season of the year.

The Butler Review has taken new quarters in the Tomlinson block. We welcome its new editor to our minst and hope that sunshine and plenty will soon round out his attenuated physical proportions.

Miss Sarah Imhoof, of Troy, whose serious illness was made mention several months ago, and upon whose body a lot of over wise doctors, attempted to perform a surgical operation, has cheated them all and has recovered nearly perfect health, caused mainly by giving doctors a wide birth and throwing physic to the dogs.

Word comes to our people that John Leonard, recently of this place, has committed murder at some point in Mich. The report is that he was caught in an act of petty larceny, and being crowded into close quarters drew a revolver and shot his would be captor. He is only a boy yet of eighteen or nineteen years, but has not borne a very good reputation here.

Rev. J. D. Snyder, of Waterloo, the bold and fearless exponent of U. B. Radicalism has pulled down his standard and united with the M. E. church at Butler, together with his whole family. We gladly welcome them to their new home. The very foundations of this old church that has fearlessly tried to defend the faith once delivered to the apostles, from the ruthless hand of its enemies seems to be crumbling under its divisions.

Mrs. Ella Bruce, died at her home on West Oak street last Wednesday after an illness of many weeks of consumption. Her funeral took place from the M. E. church, of which society she was a member, last Sunday. Rev. Brake, of Warsaw officiated, assisted by Rev. Stone, of the M. E. church and Rev. Diffinbach, of the Lutheran church. She was a most estimable lady, was in her 46th year and leaves a husband and four children. Her remains were taken to Hicksville for interment.

The wedding was a quiet she, no one being present but the family and David Snyder, of Hicksville, who was present to play the wedding march. The ceremony was solemnized by Rev. J. J. Fred, of Spencerville.

John Baker is home on a visit to his mother. He is working for a bridge company which has lately been working in Kentucky.

The singing school was organized at the church here Sunday evening. Quite a crowd was present, a nice class joined and everything is in a prosperous condition.

The Spencerville and St. Joe meat wagons have a race every Tuesday morning to see which can get here earliest. Sometimes before McNabb is out of sight, Curie will sail into town with those remarkable trotting mules and some times sells more beef than McNabb.

One day recently, upon going into the barn, Miss Alice Draggo found one of their colts had stepped upon an iron rake in such a manner as to run one of the teeth nearly full length into his foot. She called in Henry Baker and Richard Ervin, who after some difficulty succeeded in removing the rake. It left a bad wound, but under Uncle George's careful doctoring it is healing nicely.

A Correction.

J. G. Johnson of Waterloo, writes that he has not sold out as reported in the COURIER last week, nor has he any intention of doing so. On the contrary he is doing a good business and expects to continue at the same old stand, keeping the finest line of millinery and fancy goods in the market, and all of the latest styles. His grand fall opening Sept. 18 and 19, at which time everybody is invited to come and see what nice, tasty goods he has got for the fall trade. Miss Nellie Newberry will assist him again in the trimming department.

A Fatal Mistake.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach, and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary, in his new book on "Heart Disease," which may be had free at F. E Davenport's, who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles' unequaled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulders, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, dropsy, etc. His restorative nervine cures headache, fits, etc. 5

How to Succeed.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck, but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force There is nothing like the Restorative Nervine, discovered by the great specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits, and hysteria. TO WEAK MEN

Suffering from the effects of youthful errors, early decay, wasting weakness, lost manhood, etc., I will send a valuable treatise (sealed) containing full particulars for home cure, FREE of charge. A splendid medical work; should be read by every man who is nervous and debilitated. Address,

Prof. F. C. FOWLER, Moodus, Conn.

Canadian "boodlers" are now taking refuge in America. Thus the course of reciprocity takes its flighty way.

Drunkenness, or the Liquor Habit, Positively Cured by administering Dr. Haines' Golden Specific.

It is manufactured as a powder, which can be given in a glass of beer, a cup of coffee or tea, or in food, without the knowledge of the patient. It is absolutely harmless, and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1853—Continued.

"The annual delinquent list then was the principal source of income of the county press, as the country being comparatively new, the farmers poor and money scarce the taxes were allowed to run over.

Hence the hands of the office had to wait for the annual visitation of this golden calf for a final cash settlement. Of this revenue, the Messenger controlled quite a field; there being no paper in Steuben, the list of that county was printed in the Messenger office and circulated in handbill form.

Country printing in those days rather primitive in the matter of outfits, and the material used for such work was necessarily crude and bungling. Wooden reglets were used in lieu of metal quadrats, and home-made at that, and the labor of setting up the list occupied about three days. And after it was completed it required a correct eye to run a line across the page to trace out a delinquent description."

On a star-lit wintry night early in January 1856, Joe Loveland stood by and saw the building which contained the office go down in the midst of the greatest conflagration that ever visited Auburn, and its career was ended.

The action of the town authorities in passing ordinances during 1853, indicates an earnest desire for Auburn's good.

Messrs. Griswold, Baker and Brinkerhoff were a committee appointed to draw up an ordinance to suppress tippling and firing within town limits.

A provision of the former was to the effect that any person arrested for intoxication could escape punishment by informing upon the person who gave or sold him the liquor. This was certain to prove nugatory since a curious sense of honor has proved a protection to saloon keepers to the present time.

The marshal was to receive $2 for a conviction and was liable to a fine of $2, if he neglected his duty.

An old resident tells us that the people of Auburn were law abiding and peaceable. Sunday was a quiet day. Many went to church; others remained at home to rest for they were working people. He thinks that in morals and Sabbath observance, there has been no progress compared with the increase of population and school and church conveniences.

The movement to arrest disorderly persons was caused by the conduct of a party of strong, wild young men who came of a Saturday or a rainy day to town to drink at the groggery till they were ready and anxious to provoke fight on light occasion. Sheriff Straight was large, plucky and powerful, and commanded their respect; but there were times when the pressuasive eloquence of a Judge Morris was needed to keep peace.

During this year, sidewalks were established at a width of ten feet and the planting of shade trees was authorized within the ten feet. Judging from the appearance of the town in 1885, the property owners general acted upon their authority giving Auburn its beautiful foliage of the present.

When the old settlers' meeting was being held in 1885 in the grounds of widow Houghton, old James McCrum, of Richland, now dead, standing on the walk looked across the street to the row of tall locusts which stood along the north side of the present McIntosh property and said, "I carried in my hand and planted the sprouts from which have grown those trees."

Houses have been moved from central locations to less valuable lots, repainted and bear the suggestion of newness; but the trees still stand where hands now moldering into dust, had planted them, doing their part to beautify and adorn the town.

The platting of Garrett resulted in the organization of Keyser township formed from the two north rows of sections of Butler and the two south rows of Richland, giving each of the three townships twenty-four sections.

Then recently, Union township has been divided and the northern portion including the town of Waterloo has been organized as Grant township.

It is known probably to few that at the September session of the board of county commissioners in 1853, that a petition was granted that diminished Franklin township by her east tier of sections and annexed them to Troy as part of that civil township; these sections were however re-attached to Franklin during the March term of 1855. It is not likely that further territorial changes will be made in townships.

In treating of this year we have alluded to W. K. Straight, who was a conspicuous figure in Auburn and DeKalb county about this time. Many of the old settlers remember incidents in his career that are worth preserving. He was elected county sheriff in 1850 getting 553 votes to 383 for his opponent, Joseph Miller. He was re-elected without opposition in 1852, receiving 708 votes out of a total of 1050. He is described as a man of remarkable size, strength and courage, his mere presence and personal appearance being often sufficient to cowe the desperate men he sometimes had to handle. J. H. Madden, now with the Smith & Madden marble works here, had a good knowledge of him at one time, and tells a number of anecdotes. At one time when court was in session, it adjourned about four o'clock in the afternoon and Straight being a great hunter, at once took down his gun and started out into the woods that then covered the creek bottom close by. By dark, he got home with a nice deer, but was told a prisoner had escaped from the old log jail. He at once saddled a horse and without waiting for supper started off for the place of "Old Sile Doty," a noted character of those days. It was about eleven o'clock when he reached his destination and he pushed into the room without warning, and found eight men present, his prisoner being one of them. All arose at once and showed fight. Straight coolly, but firmly told them he would not molest anyone but the man he came after and that one, he proposed to take. A brief talk convinced the men, that Straight was not to be trifled with. He took his man and brought him back, though he looked to see the other fellows dodge out from behind trees on the dark road to stop him.

At another time a horse thief was escaping going through Steuben and Lagrange counties, and Straight followed so close on his track that the fellow left his horse and plunged into a swamp. Straight followed, and finally tired the man out. When found, he was lying in the thick brush, and could easily have killed the sheriff, who had passed within a few feet.

On another occasion he wanted a man over in Ohio, not far from Hicksville, and on going over there, called on A. P. Edgerton and said, "I want a man who is hiding near here." "Well," said Edgerton, "go and take him then." "But," said Straight, "this is in Ohio." To which Edgerton rejoined: "Never mind the state line, just bend it east till it gets beyond the man you want, then take him, and after you are gone, I'll bend the line back again for you." Straight got his man. We believe he is still alive, in Iowa, though about eighty years old.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

Rome, the Eternal City, which in these progressive times is rapidly outgrowing the picturesqueness that formerly endeared it to travelers, is sympathetically described and admirably illustrated, in its modern aspects, in an article entitled "Roma—Amor." by Henry Tyrell, opening the October number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly. "A Terrible Case," the new serial story by that favorite novelist, Etta M. Pierce, begins propitiously. The Marquis Lanza writes charmingly of the historic Island of Mackinac; Isabel McDougall, upon "Artists Models"; and George C. Hurlbut describes an exciting subterranean river journey, in the marvelous abyss of the Padirac, in France. Other interesting illustrated articles in this number are: "A Lady's Ride up the Bolan Pass," by Mrs. David Ker; "Decisive Battles as as factors of Progress," by W. I. Culver; an Egyptian sketch, by Col. J. F. Milliken; "Lawrence Alma Tadema, R. A."; "Recollections of James Russell Lowell"; and "The Ivory Gates" (Human Teeth'; by Charles Lotin Hildreth. There are short stories by Lucy Hooper, Dr. Parsons, and others, and a number of fine-art plates.

In a Short Time.

A prominent man of Clarinda, Iowa, says: Through the recommendation of of J. P. Burrows, of our city, I gave your Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup a trial in a case of severe cough, after using it a short time my cough was cured. Which fact gives me such great confidence in it's merits that upon every occasion I recommend it to my neighbors.

Yours,

AMOS CLARK.

Strange Story of the Sea—Shot a Burglar—The Three Links—Wept for the Wrong Man.

STRANGE, IF TRUE.

Two Bathers Picked Up by a Spanish Craft and Carried to Foreign Lands.

Jacksonville (Fla.) special: Samuel Thornton, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and his sister-in-law, Miss Ada Jewell, of the same city, are here, and if the story they tell is true, they have had one of the most marvelous escapes from death on record. Thornton was seen by a United Press representative, to whom he told the following tale: "On the afternoon of Aug. 23, Miss Jewell and myself went in bathing at Coney Island. There was a very strong undertow that day, and we were carried out to sea. Both of us could swim, and after floating around for a while we fortunately came across a floating log. On this we drifted about until nearly dark, when a Spanish barque, bound for a South American port, picked us up. Miss Jewell immediately collapsed from exhaustion on reaching the deck of the vessel. This was followed by an attack of fever and she was delerious for five days. None of the crew of the vessel could speak English. On September 9th we were transferred to another Spanish vessel bound for Yucatan. On the morning of Sunday, September 20th, we were set ashore on a barren beach, twenty miles from this city, which place we reached by walking." Mr. Thornton has telegraphed to his brother in Brooklyn for money, with which to take passage home. Miss Jewell confirms her brother-in-law's story, but a remarkable part of the case is that neither can remember the names of their captains. Both have stood their hardships well.

The Three Links.

The prize Drills for Cantons and individual patriarchs at the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows, in session at St. Louis, resulted as follows: The first event on the program was a purse of $1,700, divided into three parts for the best drilled canton for which six cantons entered. Canton Elwood, No. 33, Department of Indiana, received the first prize with a percentage of 84.33; canton Frank, No. 55, Germantown, O., second, per cent., 81.73; Canton Indianapolis, No. 2, Indiana, third, 80.10; Canton Occidental, No. 1, Chicago, fourth, 78.50; Canton Lincoln, No. 17, Joplin, Mo., fifth, 72.16; Canton St. Joseph, St. Joseph, Mo. 70.00. Individual drill for a purse of $150, divided into three results: Chevalier T. R. H. Switzer, Canton Occident, Chicago, first; Chevalier J. W. Jones, Canton Indianapolis, second; Chevalier J. Coyle, Canton Indianapolis, third.

The Cigarmakers.

At a meeting of the International Cigarmakers' Union, at Indianapolis, the President referred to the strikes which had taken place during the past year, and said that these numbered 134, and had cost the Union $48,792. Many of them were the result of hasty and impulsive action, and a constitutional barrier should be so increased as to make them impossible. The report of the Committee on Constitution was submitted and was found to contain a number of recommendations, the most important limiting the representatives from local unions and excluding the Chinese and tenement house workers from membership.

Shot a Burglar.

Burglars effected an entrance into W. H. Smith's general store, at Eau Claire, Wis., through a rear window. An Indian doctor, living in the basement of the building, heard the men about and lying in wait for them he caught one of the robbers making his egress through a rear window. The doctor fired his rifle and the robber fell mortally wounded, shot through the stomach. His companion escaped. The wounded burglar gives his name as William Harriman, of California.

Three Miners Killed.

Peter Folleste, John Gilbert, and Eric Jarvola were taking down two pillars of ore directly over the mouth of No. 6 shaft at the Republic Mine near Marquette, Mich., when the ground gave way beneath them and they went headlong down the shaft. Another fall of ground from the foot wall covered the shaft again. It will be days and weeks before the bodies can be recovered, as this shaft was a wreck from the recent fire.

Wept for the Wrong Man.

Two years ago Farmer Wright, living in the north part of Marion County, Indiana, shot and killed a tramp who had built a fire near his barn. The body was identified by Mrs. Andrew Rabb as that of her husband. The other night a man was arrested in a box-car, and in the Police Court he proved to be Andrew Rabb.

Tornado in South Dakota.

A tornado struck the northern part of Duel County, South Dakota, and passed into Lac Qui Parle County, Minnesota, unroofing buildings, blowing down barns and scattering grain stacks. No lives are reported lost. The gale passed from northeast to southwest.

A Fatal Mistake.

Richard Edgerton, one of the oldest citizens of Independence, Iowa, was poisoned while sitting by the corpse of his eldest daughter. He experienced a faint feeling and called for liquor. By mistake his wife gave him a dose of carbolic acid. He died in about ten minutes.

Child Burned Up.

In the burning of John Walter's barn near Gilead Ind., his 5-year-old child was consumed, only a handful of his bones being recovered. It is supposed the child set the barn on fire playing with matches.

Put Stones on the Track.

Near Bur Oak, Mich., a large pile of stones was placed on the Lake Shore track, but by good fortune the passenger train which struck it did not leave the track, although the engine sustained serious damage.

No Trouble About It.

A Government official, familiar with the Behring Sea question, speaking of the complaint made by Sir Julian Pauncefote that his Government had violated the modus vivendi in regard to the killing of seals, said that the question was on the construction of a treaty of June 19, 1891, which allowed the North American Commercial Company to take 7,500 seals. The treaty went into effect June 15 to expire May 2, 1892, and the question is whether the Company was to be allowed to take 7,500 seals after June 15, or whether the treaty allowed it to capture this number of seals during the entire season, which went into effect before the treaty was signed. The official said no trouble need be anticipated in settling the difficulty.

DOES IT MEAN WAR?

British Occupation of Mitylene Confirmed—Russia Said to Be Plotting for Constantinople.

Constantinople special: The following is the text of an alarming telegraph dispatch, relating to the Mitylene affair, as received at the British Embassaby in this city:

"MITYLENE, Sept. 15, 9:30 a. m.—English have disembarked with guns at Sigri islet without permission and are now installed in tents on the islet, which is surrounded by torpedoes. The Governor has asked the British Vice Consul the reason for this proceeding. The Porte's foreign minister has addressed to Sir William White, the British ambassador at Constantinople, a note asking him to explain the matter orally, and that an explanation be also furnished in writing. Sir William has not yet replied and it is surmised that he is awaiting the report of Admiral Lord Walter Kerr."

Berlin special: The latest information leaves no doubt that the gathering of an immense Russian force in Dessarabia was intended as a part of a plot to capture Constantinople by means of the Russian fleet and army. The plot has miscarried, and matters go on with the sublime porte much as ever, the country being bankrupt, and even the Sultan having to curtail his household expenditures. The mention of the Mitylene incident was the first intimation to Russia that an English fleet was near the Dardanelles and prepared to make an attack in case of necessity should Russia continue to send her vessels of war through the straits.

SWIFT JUSTICE.

Charles Howard, the Would-Be Train Wrecker, Receives a Merited Punishment.

The man, Charles Howard, who placed the ties on the track of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad, about twenty-one miles east of Chicago, with the purpose of wrecking train No. 9 on the night of Sept. 14, was taken to the justice of the peace at Crown Point by the officers of the law, and after a preliminary trial, in which he pleaded guilty, was committed for trial at the present term of court. Judge Johnson, of Valparaiso, presided, and he was taken to the court-room, the case docketed, and trial had without jury, he having pleaded guilty in the open court. The only witness examined by the State was E. P. Lord, assistant to Mr. S. D. Casanave, Superintendent of Motive Power of the Pennsylvania lines, northwest system, who was a passenger on the train on the occasion of the attempted wrecking. After his testimony had been given, the Judge directed the prisoner to arise, and the sentence of the court was passed upon him. He was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary and disfranchisement. The proceedings before the justice were commenced a little while after 10 o'clock, and sentence was pronounced at about 12:15, indicating that justice to evil-doers under Indiana laws is swift and sure.

AFTER DIAZ'S SCALP.

His Subjects in Northern Mexico Revolt and Arm Themselves for a Bloody Conflict.

San Antonio (Tex.) special: The news received here from Northern Mexico indicates that the revolution in that country is still in progress. The engagement near Mier between the invaders and the Government troops were not as serious as reported. There was a pitched battle and a large number of shots were exchanged, but the number killed outright is not thought to be large. Catrino Garzas is reported to have aroused the malcontents in the northern part of the Republic and they are joining the revolutionists in large numbers. The Mexican Government is becoming uneasy at the aspect of affairs, and there is no better evidence of this than the fact that President Diaz, through the Secretary of War, ordered a massing of troops in the northern part of the Republic. The report reached here that the Mexican revolutionists had a battle with troops near Monterey, but no confirmation of the rumor has yet been received. The private dispatch giving the information states that many men were killed and wounded in the engagement. Little credence is placed in this, as it is known that the main body of the revolutionists were in the vicinity of Camarago.

BLOWN UP.

Over a Score of Workmen Lose Their Lives in a Collier in Brussels.

Brussels special: An explosion took place at the Farchies-la-Manche Colliery, near Charleroi, Province of Hainont. Eighteen bodies have already been recovered from the pit and many workmen are missing. The latest reports from the scene of the colliery explosion place the number of dead at twenty. There are also eleven workmen severely injured.

An explosion of gas in the St. Michael Brewery, Rue del Senne, shortly before noon completely destroyed four houses and injured several workmen employed in the brewery. It is also feared that several persons have met death in the ruins of the four houses.

A wealthy merchant of the place, who was passing the brewery at the time the explosion occurred, was instantly killed, a mass of wreckage crushing him to the sidewalk.

Desolation Marks an Erstwhile Happy and Prosperous City.

Madrid special: The bodies of 1,200 victims of the flood at Consuegra have been buried. The town wears a most desolate aspect. The official report of the disaster says 530 buildings in Consuegra have vanished from their sites, while 150 are in a precarious condition and need to be demolished. The lines of forty-eight streets of the town have been literally obliterated. Ten men are under arrest at Consuegra charged with robbing the dead.

The damage done by the floods is now estimated at $4,000,000. The river Arargullo, as a result of the flooding, has changed its course to a considerable extent.

Dispatches from Consuegra contain further distressing particulars regarding the flood-destroyed town. The workmen who have been there engaged in removing from the mud-buried streets and other places the dead and drowned cattle have left in a body, and positively refuse to work. They claim that the stench arising from the bodies is so severe that no human being can handle them.

Fined 'Em All.

A dramatic scene occurred at the trial of John Gilpin, at Greensboro, Ga., for the murder of his brother-in-law. Both being jealous over the favors of a younger sister. Public sympathy, as well as the evidence, was overwhelmingly against Gilpin. At the conclusion of the closing argument the audience burst into cheers, which it took Judge Jenkins five minutes to suppress. The prisoner thought he was going to be lynched and was frightened. The Judge had the doors closed and fined each of the 200 spectators, after which he declared the case to be a mistrial.

Mystery Solved.

San Francisco special: The mystery surrounding the schooner Pannaonia, so long overdue at this port from the Marshall Islands, is at last cleared up. The vessel sailed from San Francisco on May last laden with a general cargo, and in addition to a crew of seven on board were Capt. Lovedales, wife and three children. It is also said that several missionaries had taken passage on the Pannaonia to come to this city. The schooner was wrecked on a reef in the northwest of the Hawaiian Islands and every soul on board was drowned.

To Release Convicts.

Governor Buchanan, of Tennessee, has wired Governor Brown, of Kentucky, that he had received information that Kentucky miners were preparing to release the convicts in the mines at Briceville, Tenn. He says the same men have before invaded Tennessee and released convicts. He asks Governor Brown to repress this lawlessness. Governor Brown replied that he would do all in his power to prevent the trouble anticipated, but called Governor Buchanan's attention to the fact that Kentuckians doing unlawful acts in Tennessee are liable to punishment under the laws of that State.

Town Wiped Out.

Cumberland (Wis.) special: Forest fires are raging in the country, immediately south and in plain sight of the city, and a strong south wind prevails. Several farm houses and barns, two wood yards near the Omaha track and a large amount of property has been burned. Men are now fighting the flames, and there is much apprehension in this city. The village of Peerly was almost wiped out of existence by fire. On the Omaha track a most distressful fire is raging in the cranberry marshes, between Valley Junction and Norway Ridge. Between twenty-five and thirty square miles of marsh have been consumed, and the fire shows no signs of abatement. What the loss will reach is impossible to estimate.

Bold Michigan Bandits.

The notorious Larkin brothers attempted to hold up another man about four miles from Port Huron, Mich., on what is known as the "Wooden Track." The Sheriff sent several officers to try to capture them. These bandits have been a terror to the farmers of St. Clair and adjoining counties for weeks. They are armed with Winchester rifles and revolvers and are thoroughly desperate. If the officers overtake them there will be a bloody fight. They hide in the woods during the day and lay for their victims at night, the thick second growth of pine making a safe hiding place for them.

Miss Ava in Chicago.

Vera Ava, whose recent escapades in Chicago and Cincinnati have stirred up the whole country, arrived at Chicago and delivered her promised sensational lecture in a museum. Her remarks, which contained nothing not already published, were somewhat applauded and many people fought for the privilege of grasping her hand. Before her appearance at the museum, she called at the office of the Chief of Police where she said she intended to denounce the whole Catholic world and for that reason she requested and demanded police protection.

Fears Another Uprising.

Nashville special: In view of the failure of the Tennessee Legislature to settle the convict question, serious trouble is feared at Briceville. Superintendent of Prisons Wade says that he anticipated a riot. The armistice agreed upon between the Governor and the miners was for sixty days, and Superintendent Wade said, "Lock out for another uprising then. I am firmly of the opinion that the State authorities will have to send troops to Anderson County, and by a decisive action suppress the miners."

An Important Decision.

Logansport (Ind.) special: Dennis Uhl, of this city, has been appointed by the Cass Circuit Court receiver of the Eel River Railroad, running from this city to Butler, Ind. He has filed a bond and qualified and will take possession immediately. He was appointed on the complaint of D. D. Dykeman, a stockholder. This action terminates the Wabash lease, breaking its Peru and Detroit and Chicago and Detroit divisions and brings the terminus back to Logansport.

Russia Seizes Two American Vessels.

Victoria, B. C., advices say that the vessels sailed by Dan and Alexander McLean, reported seized by Russians for sealing in Behring Sea, were American vessels and not, as first reported, British vessels. The McLean Bros., who were natives of Canada, had become naturalized American citizens and it is now said the attention of the United States Government will be called to the matter.

Shot His Companion.

Three miles east of Montpelier, Ind., Clyde Smith, a 12-year-old boy, shot James Smith, a 5-year-old boy, through the thigh. They were shooting birds when the older boy told the smaller that he would shoot him. He told him to shoot, when he took him at his word and shot him. As soon as the shooting was done the boy ran away and nothing has been heard of him since.

He Is Sure King.

Allerton went another mile in 2:09¼ at Independence, Iowa, thus putting an end to all dispute as to the stallion championship. The quarters were: 32¼ 1:04½, 1:37¼, 2:09¼.

Schooner Ivanhoe Wrecked.

The schooner Ivanhoe went ashore near Gastroville, on the southern coast of California, and is a total loss. The crew were saved.

Town Reported Wiped Out.

It is reported that the town of Hurley, Wis., has been wiped out by forest fires. No particulars are yet obtainable.

UNITED WITH CANADA.

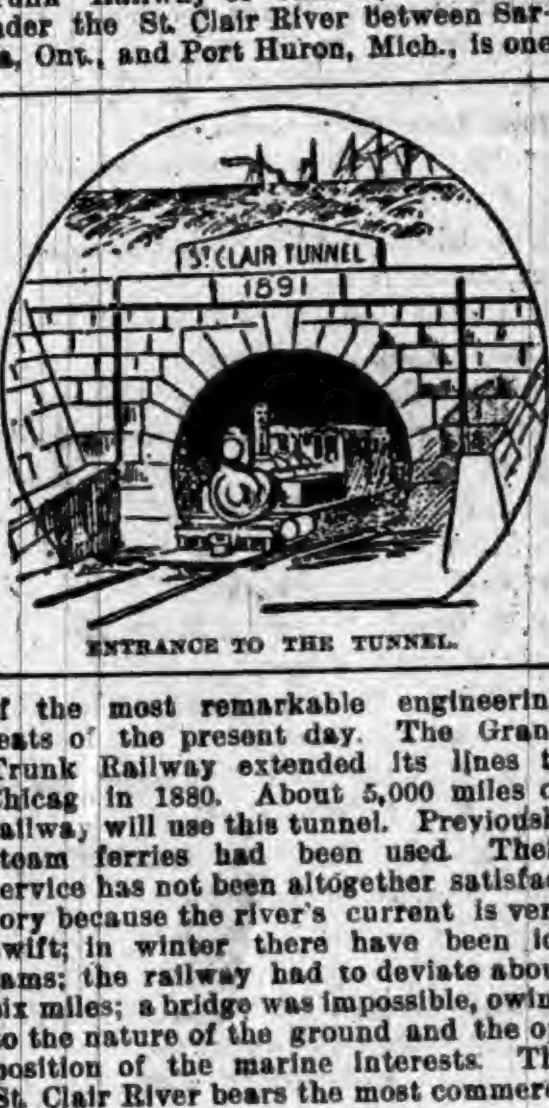
DEDICATION OF THE ST. CLAIR TUNNEL.

The Grand Trunk's Remarkable Engineering Achievement—Many Obstacles Delay the Work, but Are Finally Overcome—Six Thousand Feet Long Between Port Huron and Sarnia.

A Great Work Complete.

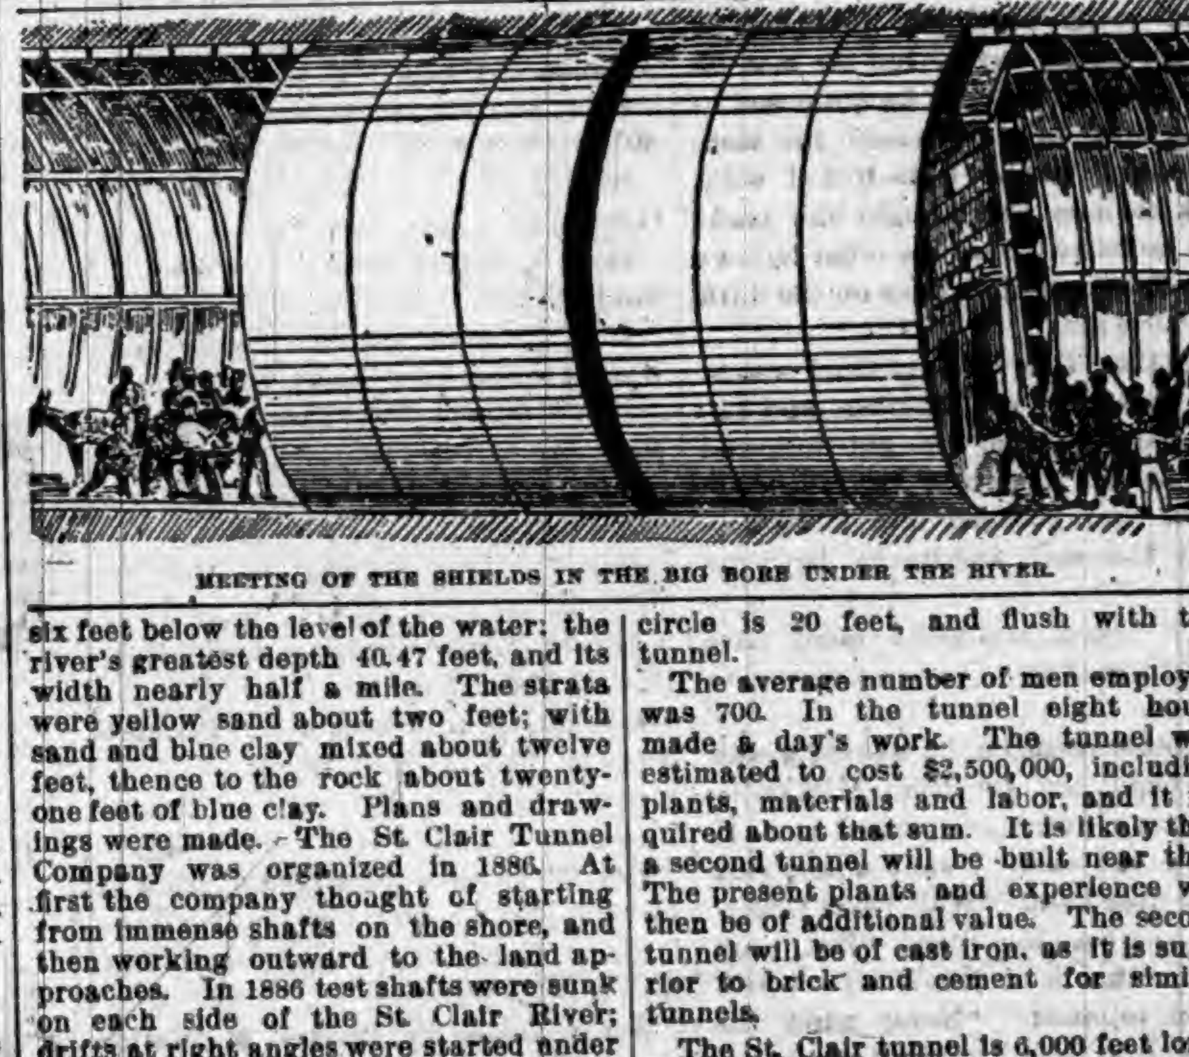
The ceremonies by which the St. Clair River tunnel was formally dedicated were the most elaborate of any ever held in that section. Extensive preparations had been made both at Port Huron, Mich., on the American side, and at the town of Sarnia, at the Canadian entrance to the great tunnel which now connects the Dominion with Uncle Sam's domains. Sir Henry Tyler, President of the Grand Trunk Railway, with other officials and prominent public men of both the United States and Canada, made an official trip through the tunnel, starting from the American side. They were treated, upon their arrival in Canada, to a royal reception, after which they returned to Port Huron, where banqueting and speech-making again awaited them.

The St. Clair tunnel, on the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, extending under the St. Clair River between Sarnia, Ont., and Port Huron, Mich., is one of the most remarkable engineering feats of the present day. The Grand Trunk Railway extended its lines to Chicago in 1880. About 5,000 miles of railway will use this tunnel. Previously steam ferries had been used. Their service has not been altogether satisfactory because the river's current is very swift; in winter there have been ice jams; the railway had to deviate about six miles; a bridge was impossible, owing to the nature of the ground and the opposition of the marine interests. The St. Clair River bears the most commerce of any stream in the world.



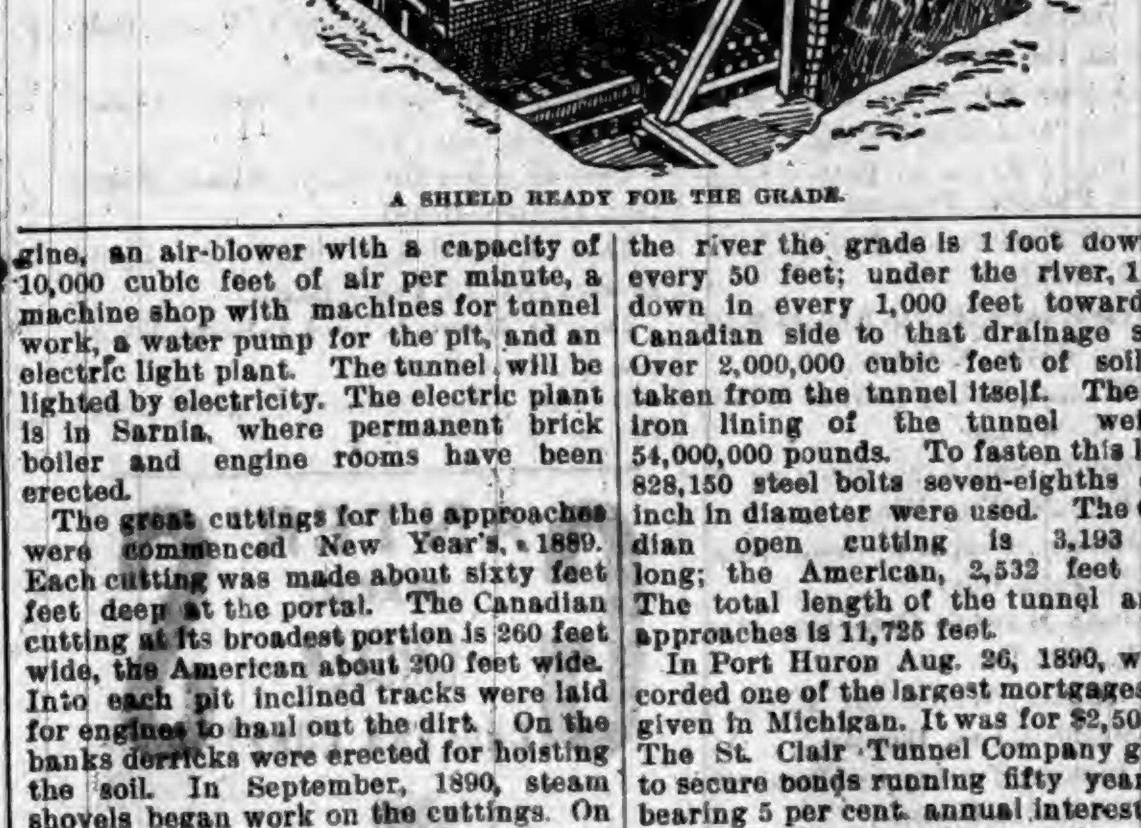
ENTRANCE TO THE TUNNEL.

In 1884 preliminary surveys were made. Borings found the rock eighty-six feet below the level of the water; the river's greatest depth 40.47 feet, and its width nearly half a mile. The strata were yellow sand about two feet; with sand and blue clay mixed about twelve feet, thence to the rock about twenty-one feet of blue clay. Plans and drawings were made. The St. Clair Tunnel Company was organized in 1886. At first the company thought of starting from immense shafts on the shore, and then working outward to the land approaches. In 1886 test shafts were sunk on each side of the St. Clair River; drifts at right angles were started under the river; water and gas stopped work. In 1887 these shafts were begun. The American one will be used as a ventilator.



MEETING OF THE SHIELDS IN THE BIG BORE UNDER THE RIVER.

The tunnel plants were erected back from the river; in Michigan about 1,800 feet, in Ontario about 1,900 feet. Each plant contained a boiler-house, hoisting or winding engines, a ventilating engine, an air-blower with a capacity of 10,000 cubic feet of air per minute, a machine shop with machines for tunnel work, a water pump for the pit, and an electric light plant. The tunnel will be lighted by electricity. The electric plant is in Sarnia, where permanent brick boiler and engine rooms have been erected.



A SHIELD READY FOR THE GRADE.

The great cuttings for the approaches were commenced New Year's, 1889. Each cutting was made about sixty feet feet deep at the portal. The Canadian cutting at its broadest portion is 260 feet wide, the American about 200 feet wide. Into each pit inclined tracks were laid for engines to haul out the dirt. On the banks derricks were erected for hoisting the soil. In September, 1890, steam shovels began work on the cuttings. On each side of the river two shovels were used, each attended by an engine and train of flat cars. Several hundred men were employed night and day, lime lights being used at night, and the soil was removed in layers. The work of these shovels was greatly hindered by rains and numerous landslides occurred.

The tunnel walls are made of cast iron, suggested by Chief Engineer Hobson. In the circle are thirteen segments and a key. Each segment is 4 feet 10 inches long, 18 inches wide, and 2 inches thick, with flaeges inside of 1¾ inches thick and 6 inches deep. In each segment were cast 32 holes, 4 in each end flange and 12 in each side flange. Through these holes passed steel bolts seven-eighths of an inch in diameter. In each section of the tunnel the circular joints required 157 bolts and the longitudinal joints required 56 bolts. The flanges took in a circle of 20 feet and 5 inches in diameter. The edges of the plates were planed in the machine-shops near the tunnel entrances. Each plate was then heated and dipped in cold tar. This had been found better than to dip the cold iron into hot tar. Formerly the tar would not dry quick enough; later the tar was dried by the time the segments were cool. The segments were lifted to place by a circular crane revolving on a spindle in the center of the shield. This spindle had a vise at one end and a counterbalance weight at the other.

When the bed of the river was reached, quicksand and water made great trouble. For some time it was thought the tunnel might have to be abandoned. Compressed air was found a sure remedy. At the river line on each side, brick and cement, air-tight bulkheads were built across the tunnel. Each bulkhead had two air chambers, one on each side, 7 feet in diameter and 17 feet long, with air-tight doors at each end. Through each air chamber passed a car track. Inside the tunnel, beyond the bulkhead, work was begun under an air pressure of 10 pounds to the square inch. From time to time the air pressure was gradually increased, until the men worked under an artificial pressure of 22 pounds per square inch, a total atmospheric pressure of 37 pounds per square inch, or about 2½ atmospheres. On the Canadian side the highest air pressure was used because of quicksand. On the American side compressed air was used from April 7, 1890; on the Canadian, May 20, 1890.

Because of water and quicksand the St. Clair tunnel could not have been constructed without the aid of hydraulic mining shields. Such shields had been used successfully in London, Chicago, Buffalo, Broadway tunnel, New York City, the Hudson River tunnel, and in other works. This shield is a cylinder, like a headless barrel. Its front end has sharpened edges to cut into the earth. The thin rear end is called the hood. The inside is braced with iron, both vertical and horizontal. Around the main walls are sets of hydraulic jacks. Each jack has a valve whereby it may be cut off at any time from the pump that supplies the jack. The masonry, or iron plates, of the tunnel, being built up within the thin hood of the shield, air is supplied to the jacks and the shield is forced ahead, usually the length of the pistons of the jacks, or about two feet. The shield having advanced the men remove the soil from the front of the shield. Everything being in readiness the shield is again pushed forward, the tunnel walls built up, and the excavated soil removed. Each of the St. Clair tunnel shields weighed eighty tons.

The American shield was started July 11, 1889, the Canadia Sept 21, 1889, and they met at 11:30 p. m., August 30, 1890. The shields' shells were left in the tuntunnel and the tunnel walls laid up in them. The American had done the most work, and the easiest progress was toward Canada, the average being ten feet each day.

The tunnel approaches have the same general appearance of solidity as the tunnel itself. On each side of the great cutings are high and deep stone retaining walls. Each portal is 36 feet high and 148 feet wide, about 10 feet thick over the entrance of the tunnel, and about half that width at each end. Like the retaining walls the portals are made of rough, heavy limestone blocks. Over the entrance of each portal is inscribed "St. Clair, 1890." The diameter of the circle is 20 feet, and flush with the tunnel.

The average number of men employed was 700. In the tunnel eight hours made a day's work. The tunnel was estimated to cost $2,500,000, including plants, materials and labor, and it required about that sum. It is likely that a second tunnel will be built near this. The present plants and experience will then be of additional value. The second tunnel will be of cast iron, as it is superior to brick and cement for similar tunnels.

The St. Clair tunnel is 6,000 feet long. To the river's edge on the American side it is 1,716 feet; on the Canadian, 1,994 feet; under the river, 2,290 feet. The outside diameter of the tunnel is 21 feet, the inside 19 feet 10 inches. tunnel nearest the river is 8.43 feet from the river. At its lowest point the top of the tunnel is 56.83 feet below the level of the river. From each portal to the river the grade is 1 foot down for every 50 feet; under the river, 1 foot down in every 1,000 feet toward the Canadian side to that drainage shaft. Over 2,000,000 cubic feet of soil was taken from the tunnel itself. The cast-iron lining of the tunnel weighed 54,000,000 pounds. To fasten this lining 828,150 steel bolts seven-eighths of an inch in diameter were used. The Canadian open cutting is 3,193 feet long; the American, 2,532 feet long. The total length of the tunnel and its approaches is 11,725 feet.

In Port Huron Aug. 26, 1890, was recorded one of the largest mortgages ever given in Michigan. It was for $2,500,000. The St. Clair Tunnel Company gave it to secure bonds running fifty years and bearing 5 per cent. annual interest, covering all the present property of the company. Rent and tolls can be collected for allowing other railways than the Grand Trunk system to use the tunnel.

It is believed that the Grand Trunk route, as thus improved, will offer facilities for through communication between Chicago and all points in the East which will be appreciated by passengers and shippers. There will be no more trouble from ice blocks or other obstructions in the river and the best time will be made for traffic of all kinds.

In digging out the colossal statue of Rameses II. nine feet and four inches of consolidated Nile mud had to be removed before the platform was reached. This platform was laid 1,361 years before Christ, in the reign of Rameses. Hence, three and one-half inches of this consolidated mud represents a century, there having lapsed 3,215 years since then. Under the platform a depth of thirty feet of Nile mud had to be penetrated before sandy soil was reached, and, according to this, 10,000 more years must have elapsed. Pieces of pottery were found there that show the Egyptians to have possessed enough civilization to form and bake vessels of clay 13,000 years ago.

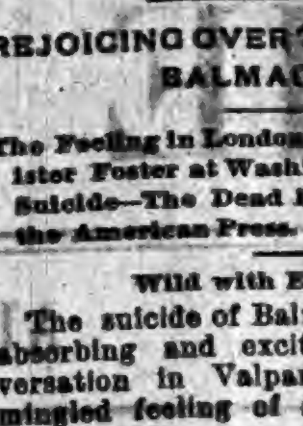
CELEBRATING IN CHILI.

REJOICING OVER THE DEATH OF BALMACEDA.

The Feeling in London One of Relief—Minister Foster at Washington Approves the Suicide—The Dead President's Letter to the American Press.

Wild with Excitement.



BALMACEDA.

The suicide of Balmaceda is the one absorbing and exciting topic of conversation in Valparaiso. There is a mingled feeling of savage rejoicing at his death and of bitter regret that he should have killed himself instead of falling into the clutches of the infuriated citizens, who would have delighted to rend him limb from limb for the long list of cruelties for which they hold him responsible.

It is impossible for any one not in this country or not a native to realize the intensity of the hatred that was entertained toward the ex-President. The national holidays were prolonged by the news of the suicide. The feasts, illuminations, and other celebrations in honor of the success of the Congressional party were followed by the marching of frenzied crowds through all the streets shouting songs of triumph over the death of their former ruler.

The Valparaiso papers came out with extras from Santiago about the suicide. The Argentine Minister at Santiago, in whose house Balmaceda killed himself, resolutely refused to furnish any of the local papers with a copy of the pathetic letter written by Balmaceda a short time previous to his shooting himself, in which he defends his course as President. It is the general belief that Balmaceda's death will hasten in a great degree the restoration of peace throughout Chili. Now that the chief enemy of the Junta is no more it is likely that his followers will be shown mercy, since without Balmaceda to direct them they are little to be feared. Italy, France, Sweden, Spain, and Norway have followed the lead of the United States in official recognition of the Junta. Germany, it will be remembered, was the second nation to do so. No official recognition has yet come from England. This creates considerable comment.

In London the news of Balmaceda's death made a marked impression. The general feeling in English commercial circles is one of relief and joy. While Balmaceda lived there ever could be no assurance that he might not stir up another revolution to the great detriment of the English interests in control of the nitrate traffic.

The matter was the news sensation in Washington. It was as startling as it was unexpected.

"So Balmaceda has blown his brains out," said Mr. Foster, the Chilean confidential agent. "I am sorry to hear of his going off in that way, but it was probably the best thing he could do. He found all manner of escape cut off. He had failed in an attempt to cross the Andes. He had not the physical strength to endure the hardships of a journey through the mountain passes in midwinter. He was cut off from his vessels and found it impossible to get out of Santiago without detection. These facts undoubtedly preyed upon his mind and all hope left him. In his extremity he resorted to the pistol. Self-murder did not have as much terror for him as it would have for others who believe in a future state. While Balmaceda studied for the priesthood he gave up the teachings and traditions of his fathers and became almost an atheist. To those who knew the feeling aroused by Balmaceda's acts of tyranny there is no surprise at all that the masses should rejoice at his death. He was a bad man, and Chili is glad to get rid of him in any manner. Everything, however, will soon quiet down, and with Balmaceda out of the way peace is assured."

Balmaceda left a statement to the press of the United States. As almost the last declarations of a dying man they are of especial importance. He says:

"I acted during the past eight months with the firm conviction that I was right. I had no one in the army on whom I could place my trust. My generals were false to me. They lied all through the war. Had my orders been obeyed I believe that the battle of Concon would have resulted in a decisive victory against the enemy. My heart all through this trouble has been with Chili. I sought to rescue my country from foreign domination. I strove to make her the first republic in America. My enemies say that I was cruel. Circumstances compelled me to sanction certain acts, but many bad deeds that have been attributed to my orders were never known by me until they had been committed.

"Until the final battle at Placilla I had strong hopes of triumphing over my foes. Victory was assured by my generals, Alcerecca, Barbosa and Viel. They all lied. I now know those who pretended friendship for me only because of the money that was to be gotten out of me. All the money that I have in my possession is $2,500. My wife gave it to me on the night of Aug. 28.

"Your minister, Patrick Egan, many times offered me good advice. He urged me to make peace with those opposed to me and to retire from Chili. I did not heed his wise advice, for I thought he was under the influence of the junta's orders, who were then refugees in the American legation. All through the trouble my closest advisers were always opposed to any overtures for peace."

J. J. Rhineham, While Demented, Takes Another Man's Horse and Is Shot.

J. J. Rhineham, a stranger in New Ross, was shot and mortally wounded by William Evans. Rhineham got off the train early in the evening and said he wanted to go to Danville, Ill. His actions attracted attention and it was apparent that he was temporarily demented. This was further shown when he climbed into Evans' buggy and drove away, oblivious to the fact that the property did not belong to him. Soon the owner appeared, and in company with Coroner Bronough, secured a rig and started in pursuit toward Lizton. They met the stranger returning. He was driving as if simply enjoying himself. Evans jumped out and grasped the reins of his horse but the stranger simply drove ahead without stopping. Evans then pulled his revolver and deliberately shot the man in the head, the ball entering at the corner of the left eye. Nothing will be done with Evans for the shooting.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

"Now," said Mitchell, "walk her around twice."

As the attendents obeyed him, the clown turned a somersault, lit square on the barrel, and shouted:

"Ladies and gentlemen—and them babies in the corner—I have now the felicity and five dollars, salary in advance, for introducing to your notice the illustrious Princess Arabella Cinderella Anabella Sally Lum Mehitable Measles Donebrown Smith."

"Now!" said Mitchell.

The attendants released the white mare, and moved quickly over the ring board. The white mare shook her head and—balked. Dick's gaze was fixed on the spot where he had beheld his strange vision. Firefly's first bound almost unseated him. Away she flew, and around the center of the ring Mitchell walked, turning as he kept his eye on mare and rider.

The clown pretended vast astonishment with uplifted hands—but the keenest pair of eyes among all there were Ben Brown's, as he followed the ringmaster, and made faces behind his back.

There were a sea of faces every way Dick looked. This was not like the audience he had beheld in the city he had left in the morning. It was almost twice as large; and ten times more enthusiastic.

For the first and only time in his life a mortal terror overcame Dick. The white mare made a break—or dash—to leap over the ring right where Dick had beheld the image of Joe.

If Firefly should leap over there, it was sure death to the people she trampled over. He saw death before and behind him, in imagination, as he ploughed his way through the vast crowd, for the audience was so vast that the people were pressed up within a few feet of the ring.

Ben Brown's eyes never moved from the boy's. He saw there something he did not understand. A startled, wild look. And the boy did not appear to have his wits about him. He let the mare have her own sweet will—and she indulged it. Her scorn of attendants, ringmaster, and rider was superb. She threw her head up and rushed—slackened her speed, held her head down and bolted. She stood still, and threw her heels up at imaginary foes. She turned and glared at Dick—and galloped on like mad.

There were spectators there who knew everything. Men who did not know the difference between a blooded horse and a sawhorse said it was all to mislead people. The "white horse was as gentle as a milkman's." "Oh, a cart-horse was just as dangerous."

Dick grasped the reins tightly as he realized that in his abstraction he had wasted a golden opportunity. He gave the reins a jerk—the mare stood stock still. He did an unparalleled thing then. He cut the beast square across the cheek with his rawhide. The blow was so hard the pretty tassel flew off—and the mare flew, too—flew like the wind round and round the ring, and still Dick lashed her flank.

The blare of the band and the shouts of the multitude inspired him to further effort. He cut her across the cheek again—and Firefly stood stock still, almost unseating her rider.

Then she deliberately put her head back before he could prevent her, and bit at Dick's leg. Biting was her habit. She had torn boards to shreds, but the boy was resolved she should not make a meal off any part of him.

He was now cool and collected. He whisked his right leg across the saddle as he had done with Black Bess, held his legs close to the mare's side, leaned forward and lashed her repeatedly on the face.

Firefly flew—she was well named. The crowd said she emitted sparks from her eyes. Anyway, she flew around the ring in agony of fear now—she was afraid of her rider. Still Dick lashed her; still the cheers grew louder, deafening, until the rider drew the rein tight. And he drew it the mare checked herself and trembled with fear.

Suddenly she stood still—motionless as a statue.

The ringmaster looked at rider and horse amazed.

The clown made a variety of gestures, indicating the thing mystified him completely, but he moved closer to Dick and said in a low tone, for his ear alone:

"Bow—bow quick, then jump off."

Just then a drunken man crowded forward. Another seized him by the arm roughly, and the drunken man whipped out a revolver.

Dick did the last thing he ever would have dreamed of had he not realized that he was again within a few feet of the vision that reminded him of Joe.

He sprang upon the saddle, stood upon his feet on the mare's back. He was bowing to the multitude. Their cheers were ringing in his ears, when a shot startled the mare, creating consternation everywhere.

The mare bolted, her rider fell in the very midst of his triumph, and the mare was caught, stood shivering like one with an ague ten feet distant.

When Dick recovered his consciousness and look up, he was looking into the eyes of the girl that looked like Joe's twin sister. His head was in her lap. A crowd was bending over both. He heard the clown's voice saying:

"There, he's all right. He'll be none the worse in an hour's time."

Then Double Dick swooned the second time.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A PARADISE.

When Dick opened his eyes again, he was lying in a downy bed.

The air was full of perfumes—the perfume of flowers. There was the sound of music in the distance; low, sweet, entrancing music. A flood of sunlight poured in upon him.

Dick closed his eyes, and murmured to himself, "It's all over—I'm dead and in heaven."

He wasn't sorry—he wasn't glad. He just wanted to lie. There never was, in the world below, such a downy couch.

There was a rustle—a movement. Dick looked up. It was Mrs. Brown, the clown's wife, bending over him.

She was dressed—had her best bonnet on and gloves.

"Dear boy! How long you have slept. How do you feel? You are not sore anywhere—you have no pain anywhere, have you, Dick?"

Dick sat bolt upright in bed and looked about him. The room was bright—the walls were covered with warm colored paper, with such rich warm flowers. Gold predominated.

"I—I—where am I?"

Mrs. Brown laughed merrily.

"Don't you know, Dick?"

"I—I thought I was dead and in heaven," said Dick.

Mrs. Brown clapped her gloved hands, again and again.

"O, that's too funny for anything!" Then she called some one to her side.

A fine-looking lady came and looked down at the boy and smiled sweetly.

"O, the poor boy—to think such a place as this is heaven. Why, when Monsieur Dufaur hears it he will laugh his sides sore. Heaven, indeed!"

The music had ceased.

"But I heard—music—such beautiful music," said Dick.

"O!" Madame Dufaur blushed. "Child, it was only me practicing a new piece, but it is charming. I shall think more of it now it reminded you of heaven."

"What am I doing here? I must get up."

"Certainly you shall. You are only resting. I thought it best. The doctors—both great men—said you were not hurt—rest would be good, and you have slept as sound as a babe.

"I'll leave you now and tell Ben; he's not alarmed at all, but he may as well know," said Mrs. Brown.

"I was going up Broadway—now I'll return and Ben will go with me. You're not a pin the worse."

"Me! Why, I don't feel sick at all."

"Then we will let you dress yourself," said Madame Dufaur.

"Tell me how I came here, and where I am?" said Dick.

"You are in Monsieur Dufaur's academy. Madame here was at the circus, and when you were hurt, or fell, she made the surgeon, whom she knows, bring you here. Ben wouldn't let you stay in the men's tent, and it was so far to my hotel."

"And is this where—where the young lady lives?"

Mrs. Brown and madame exchanged glances.

"What young lady?"

"I—I was sure I fell—that some young lady—well, I thought I was lying near a young lady when I fell."

"So you were—a young lady who went to the circus with Monsieur Dufaur. Do you wish to see her? When you get up you will see her."

Mrs. Brown then withdrew, Madame Dufaur saw her to the door, and Dick speedily dressed himself. Then he looked out on the street.

It was a very quiet, respectable street. Such fine houses on all sides, and some had spacious grounds about them. Dick did not know they were public institutions. They looked like palaces in his eyes.

Presently a servant brought him a breakfast that was like nothing he had ever dreamed of. The dishes were beautiful. He could not help admiring them. The eggs were cooked in a way new to him. There was something that might be potatoes; he never tasted anything as good. The cakes—they melted in his mouth, and there was enough for three people.

He felt ashamed of himself when he looked at the little that was remaining. He was so hungry, and everything was so delicious, that before he thought of "how it would look" he had ate to his satisfaction.

Dick never forgot that breakfast.

After the servant came in and took the things away, a very handsome man, with bright, piercing, black eyes, came in.

"So! I see you are yourself. Well, my brave boy, I am proud to make your acquaintance. You have the courage, the will, the determination. So, so! You are as sound as my watch, which I would not part with for five hundred dollars. And so you did think you were in heaven. Ha, ha! Well, I wish I could show to you what place I was bred in France: then you would be in heaven, as much as man can make here on earth."

Madame Dufaur came in while her husband was talking, and behind her stood a young lady, the side of whose head was turned to Dick. When Madame Dufaur came forward the young lady glanced shyly toward Dick. Dick was looking at Madame Dufaur, who spoke to him, when Monseur Dufaur heard an exclamation.

He turned quickly, as did his wife. Dick looked, too. The young lady was staring with open mouth at him.

"Dick!"

"Joe!"

Dick caught her hands quickly, his eyes dancing with joy.

"It was you all the time!"

"I—I was not sure it was you. Not until——"

Dick looked ashamed, and Joe held her head down and blushed.

"Now, I suppose," said Dick.

Joe nodded prettily.

How different she looked. Her hair was arranged so lovely; it displayed the contour of one of the prettiest heads ever placed on woman's shoulders. And her eyes were so different. They shone with a soft light—they used to snap with fire at him.

And then her dress. It was so neat—so prettily worn. Everything suited her—seemed made for her. She was part and parcel with the material, or, rather, her dress seemed part of her.

As for Dick, he had a brand-new suit on—the suit the clown had bought him the day previous. He looked like a young prince. Certainly no person to look at Dick that moment would believe that boy was raised in a poorhouse.

"What! you know each other!" said Madame Dufaur.

"We were raised together," said Dick.

"What!" said Monsieur Dufaur, "you too come from that horrible place?"

"Yes, sir," said Dick modestly.

"So-so. So-so. And you ran away? Eh. Is that it?"

"I did, sir."

"I take your hand."

Monsieur Dufaur actually treated him like a prince.

"Any boy who would fight for Joe here"—Joe was blushing furiously—"eh, little one—she has talked of you a thousand times. How you always took her part—lied to save her beatings. The lies are recorded to your favor in heaven! That beast Caper! He should be boiled in oil! Bah! Caper. I should like myself to do it."

"Why, it is quite a little romance," said Madame Dufaur. "Well, you two can go out in the garden and tell all that you have to tell. I give you one hour."

The hour seemed half flown only, when Joe discovered how time had sped.

"Oh, Dick! I haven't told you half, nor tenth of all I've to tell."

Then, seeing him smile, she cried in alarm: "Oh, and you've never said a word—only listen! I don't know a blessed thing—not a thing—that's happened to you."

"Never mind; now I know where you live, I'll come back and tell you what a precious jolly time I've had!"

"You must. I'll be just crazy," Joe said, clapping her hands, "to hear it."

Then, after reflecting a minute:

"Ain't it upside-down, every way? I ought to be the Arabian Queen—and you—you ought to be assisting Monsieur Dufaur."

"Yes," said Dick, sighing; "but Ben's awful good and kind—and I want to get rich—and then the things I'll buy you, Joe!"

"Isn't it splendid to make money, and to ride with thousands applauding you? My, but I'd like to ride that way!"

"You mustn't Joe. I'll make lots of money for you—you'll see."

And Dick meant it.

When he was going away to meet Ben Brown at the circus, Monsieur Dufaur and his wife stood at the door bowing. Joe could not trust herself; she stood at the window up-stairs and wiped her eyes.

REMEMBER that you are not game just because some big man makes you quail.

HERE'S A FISH STORY.

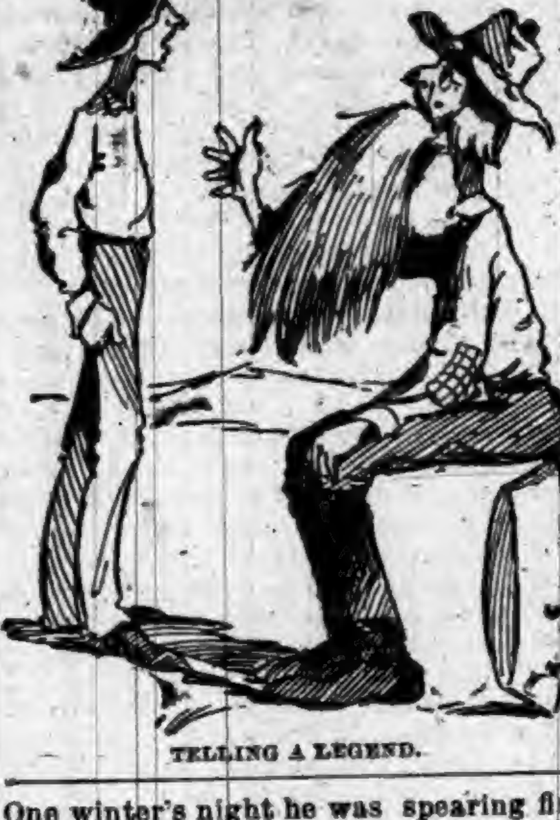
A TALE RELATED BY WISCONSIN FARMERS.

The Great Pickerel of Twin Lakes and How He Was Finally Shotcuted—A Place Where Legends Grow Very Large Between the Eyes—Farmer Bundy and a Festive Pickerel.

Biggest of the Season.

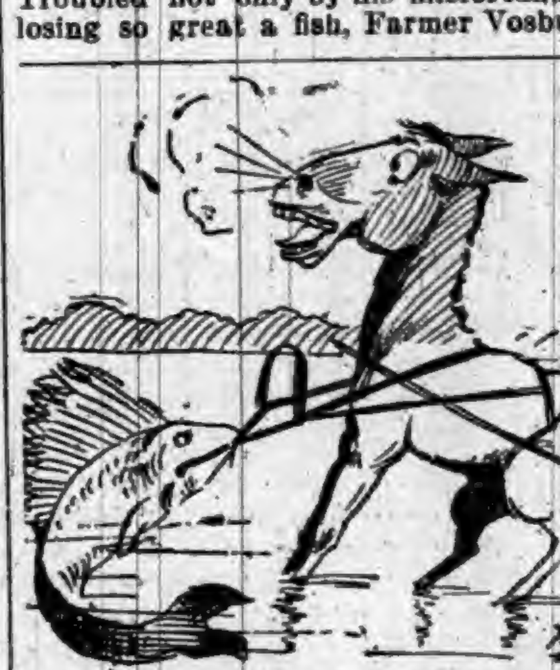
The Twin Lakes of Wisconsin lie eighty miles west of Chicago. On the west shore of the smaller lake and within a stone's throw of a field of wild rice and wild celery is a ridge, and upon this ridge was the recent home of a camping party. The spot is one where legends grow large between the eyes. Every night, when the moon was painting a luminous pathway upon the lake, farmers in hickory shirts and hats that had been drawn to a peak at the crown would tramp over the ridge and sit down by the camp-fire and talk about these legends which not only relate to the fish in the lake but to the things that fly over the lake. One of the farmers' stories, according to a writer in America, of the lower lake is associated with a pickerel. And when it is told by the farmers, who have now finished their harvesting, they roll their eyes and expectorate with a vehemence that is calculated to carry conviction to the mind of every listener. The other legend relates to a mosquito of enormous size and strength, and an insect of fiendish pertinacity when engaged in his business.

Farmer Bundy carries the pickerel legend back to the time of the war, when he was a boy in the house just over the crest of a yellow stubble-field.



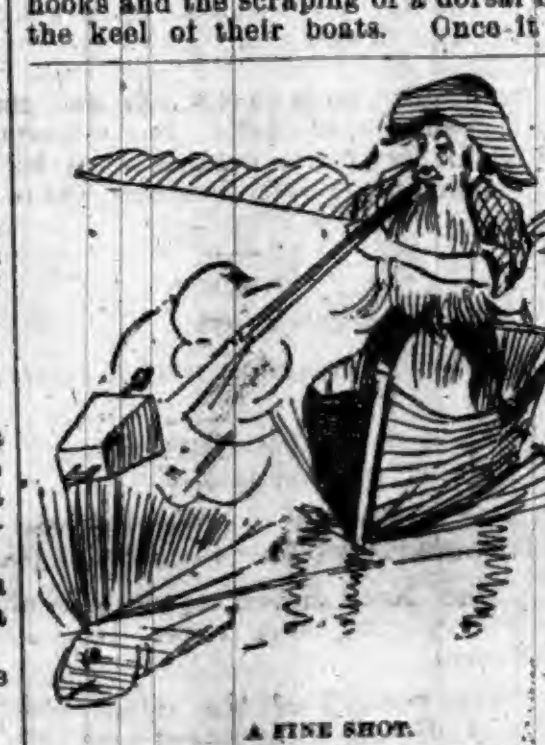
TELLING A LEGEND.

One winter's night he was spearing fish through the ice, when of a sudden he heard a snort, and then, before he could lift his spear, a pickerel of enormous size seized him by the foot and tore the loose overshoe away. An instant later the fish darted beneath the ice and was not seen again until 1869, as the legend runs, when Farmer Vosburg caught him and landed him in a boat. It was a strong pull, for the fish, even at that day, weighed as much as Farmer Vosburg's eldest child. The hook was wrenched from the bleeding gills, and the sturdy fisherman was about to hit the fish in the head with an oar, when he suddenly attacked his captor and knocked him into the stern sheets with one swish of his tail. When the farmer rounded to, the pickerel was out of the boat and cutting water ten yards away like the blade of a knife. His dorsal fin, it is now recorded, looked like a sail set before a spanking breeze. Troubled not only by his misfortune in losing so great a fish, Farmer Vosburg set up a cry of dismay when he beheld that his watch and chain were gone. It was an old-fashioned chain, for it encircled his neck and fell in two loops into the pocket of his velvet vest. There was no doubt that this pickerel was the one Farmer Bundy saw six years before, for the overshoe, with its rusty buckle, was firmly wrapped about the middle of the fish. This discovery caused much comment in farmers' households on both sides of the lake. Everybody was perplexed. It was finally agreed that the pickerel had run his long snout through the opening of the shoe, and then through the loop made by the buckles and flap.



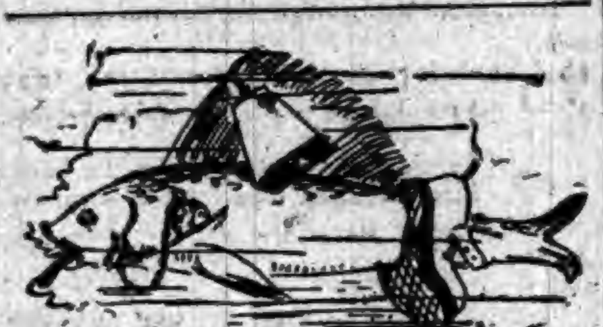
TEARING OFF THE HARNESS.

From 1869 until 1874 nothing more was seen of the pickerel. Now and then fishermen casting for bass in the wild celery would revive the story by reporting the rush of an enormous fish at their hooks and the scraping of a dorsal fin on the keel of their boats. Once it was told that a pickerel with a head as long as a sexton's spade and a body which was fully the length of the rotting posts of the old bridge, had been seen plunging along the surface of the water with a noise that sounded like the exhaust of an engine in a saw mill. One day in 1886 Farmer Mader drove his horse and wagon into the lake to wash them. He was scrubbing the spokes of the wheels preparatory to going to the annual "trot" at Richmond, when he heard a mightly splash. He threw up his hands in amazement, for before his bulging eyes was the great fish tearing the harness off the plunging horse. The bridle snapped. There was a jingle as the bit was yanked from the jaws of the animal. The check-rein parted and followed the glistening buckles and rings as they shot into the water behind the black fin of the fish. Farmer Mader gave the alarm the country round, and within two hours an expedition was formed to capture this mammoth pickerel. But the search, careful and alluring as it was, proved of no avail.



A FINE SHOT.

The story of the great fish of the lower lake was the subject of common talk for a month or more, and then it was referred to only when strangers asked to have it told to them. There was something gruesome about the antics of this wonderful pickerel which was always and vaguely referred to as "the big fish." It plainly differed from the rest of the fish in the lake. Some persons went so far as to say that he "hollered" on certain nights, and these nights, it was further claimed, were when the moon was at its full. It was even said that the great fish was amphibious; that he came to shore from time to time and walked about on short, squatty legs, and that when he was of an observing turn of mind he would rear himself up in the water and sweep the country with a pair of flaming or phosphorescent eyes. One day in 1889 a party of Rockford men, camping at Hickory Point, were using a hoopskirt wrapped in mosquito netting in catching minnows in the shallow channel which connects the two lakes, when they felt a vicious tug and then their contrivance darted from their grasp and was not seen again. Of course, "the big fish" was held responsible for this theft, as also for the loss of a leathern band and a brass bell which had been ruthlessly torn from a cow as she was drinking water from the lake.



THE BIG PICKEREL.

During the fall of 1890 fishermen on the lower lake reported having heard strange noises in and above the water, sometimes like the muffled tolling of a bell and then again like the upsetting of a panful of silverware. One man, who was on the lake at night, said the noises he heard sounded like a charivari. The source of all these sounds was a mystery. Finally Farmer Vosburg, who knows more about the lake than anybody, made up his mind to discover the cause of the disturbance. One evening when the air was still he put out in a boat with a shotgun. His cruise lay along the west shore. He had been out but an hour when he heard a splash, the clang of a bell and the tintinnabulation of other metallic substances. He knew he was in the wake of "the big fish," for no other fish could compare with the monster ahead of him. Putting all his strength to his oars Farmer Vosburg made chase. Of a sudden "the big fish" raised again, and for the second time the bell rang distinctly and there came the same metallic jingle. Farmer Vosburg is a fine shot. He can shoot the heads off chickens at 200 yards. When he fired at "the big fish" there was a grunt which was almost human and blood began to stain the waters. "The big fish" had been killed. His head was in shreds and his white belly was turned up to the rising moon. Farmer Vosburg hauled the monster into the boat. If he had doubted the identity of the fish, that doubt was dispelled when he beheld Farmer Bundy's overshoe still about the middle of the leviathan. Then, too, the fish was firmly entangled in the hoopskirt net of the Rockford encampment, while from gills to tail he was girdled with the straps of Farmer Mader's harness. Around the dorsal fin and belly was the leathern band and brass bell; but stranger than all to the gaping farmer was the discovery of his watch in a sort of pocket in the side of the fish which, doubtless, was cut with a spear years and years ago. The timepiece was intact. Even the crystal had not been shattered. The watch had stopped at 1:03. That was the price at which Farmer Vosburg had sold his wheat three days before.

She Is a Milleress.

Freedman's Town, a suburb of Houston, Texas, boasts of a female miller, who has repeatedly proved herself a match for any three men that have pitted their united strength against hers, and who successfully routed Officer John Baxter and three of his assistants, all men of fine physique.

The woman is a negress as black as night, and of a stature slightly above the average, but magnificently built and extraordinarily active. Her grip is such that she can easily stop any piece of machinery in the mill. Recently she broke a drive chain and thus saved the life of an old farmer whose long coat tails had become entangled in the gears. She works in all parts of the mill, and when firing she frequently breaks coal with her fist, if the hammer is not near. Elevators are of no use in that mill, for she carries grain to the top of the mill faster than any machine that has been made. She can carry four two-bushel sacks filled with wheat to the top of the mill and be down stairs again before most millers could walk to the top of the mill. She just takes a sack under each arm and one in each hand and up she runs, seemingly without effort.

When the police attempted to arrest her, she not only was able to prevent them from putting the handcuffs on her, but taking the officer and his posse, one by one, flung them out of the house and closed and locked the door.

Baxter, in particular, is accounted a man of unusual strength, and is of large build; but he says his muscles were as a child's when compared with those of the colored woman. The woman, whose name is Caroline Jenkins, is about 30 years old, and is the mother of seven children.

She has been seen to pick up a barrel of flour and carry it a distance without appearing to overexert herself, and when tested was found to be able to break with ease a new grass rope an inch in diameter.

When she runs out of coal she should utilize her great strength to operate the mill.—American Miller.

BISHOP WILBERFORCE once came near going on strike himself, and by a threat of so doing he carried a point. Entering a crowded church in which he was to preach, one day, he escorted inside a lady whom he met at the door but who complained that there was no room. To his order to the beadle to find her a seat, that functionary replied that it was impossible. Thereupon the Bishop declared: "Oh, if you don't, I won't preach!" A luxurious empty pew was quickly discovered.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon; if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Delicate ladies, do not fail to use this great cure, because it will put the bloom of freshness and beauty upon your lips and in your cheeks, and quickly drive away your disabilities and weaknesses.

THE Chicago Mail sarcastically says it is pained to note that a Chicago firm has just imported 1,774 boxes of tin-plate weighing 168,580 pounds from Wales, paying $2 028 82 increase in tariff duties owing to the McKinley bill. Why this firm should persist in importing tin-plate from Wales, while according to the Republican papers, tin-plants are springing up throughout the United States like mushrooms after a shower, it is difficult to understand. In the meantime who ultimately will pay that $2,028.82 increase?

Dead on The Track.

Charles Wiseman was killed by a train on the Wabash, between town and the Junction, Saturday evening. He was intoxicated at the time. His body was found by W. H. Keeran, of the Auburn Church Furniture Co., as he was coming up the track to his home. It was taken to the car house at the station, the coroner notified, and later, the remains were taken to Garrett, where he had his home. On Monday, Coroner Miser held an examination to learn if possible, just how it occurred. Mr. Keeran was called, as was Barton Sthair, who had been with Wiseman last. The engineer and fireman of the train and a number of others were called in.

George Arnold, Marshal of Garrett, testified to taking the body from the car house, where it had been left when first taken up. He took it to Garrat', for interment.

W. H. Keeran sworn: "I reside in Auburn, am a member of the Auburn Church Furniture Co. On Saturday night, Sept. 19, I was returning home on the west-bound B. & O., train, due at the Junction, 10:50 p. m. It was a little behind, and I got off at about 11:15, walked along platform to go up Wabash track, but stopped at end of platform as a freight train stood on the Wabash main track waiting for target to go west. They got target, and as soon as they had passed I went on up the track. As I approached the cut two-thirds of the way up to the station, saw something on the track ahead of me, for it was a very bright night. First thought it was a calf that the train had run over, then as as I came nearer, it looked as if it might be a dog. But closer, I saw it was the body of a man. He lay across the track, clothes torn off except a little at the wrists, head to the south, face down. One leg was off, the other nearly off, lay bent up under the body. I started on up to station, and about two rods further, I found the other leg lying inside track. I told the night operator, then went to my residence near by, got a lunch, then went back to where the body was. Found several persons there. The face was raised, and I saw it was Charles Wiseman. He had worked for our Company about two years before. I staid till he was picked up."

G. W. Barnhart sworn. Clerk in Bevier's saloon on south Main street. "Wiseman came into my place about 3 p. m., Saturday, and got a glass of beer. Seemed sober. We were alone. I have seen him intoxicated at other times in Garrett. He came up from Junction."

Samuel Grosh sworn. "Am nightwatch in Auburn Foundry & Machine Works. Saturday night about 11 o'clock, I was outside talking a moment with Mr. Sennett, the miller at the Auburn Mills, who boards with me. We walked south to the bridge in the road, and I came back. As I approached the spot where the Ft. Wayne road crosses the Wabash track, I noticed two men talking, and one of them said, 'Stranger, come here, I want you to see that I have done all I can to keep this man from going down the track to the Junction, as he is not in a safe conition to go. I have tried to get him to go down the wagon road, but he refuses. I want to clear my skirts of blame. He is going back on a friend, for he wont listen to me.' This was Barton Sthair, and he told me the other man was Charlie Wiseman. Something was said about Cool being killed on the track. But while we were talking, Wiseman turned and started down the track. He seemed intoxicated, stepped high and staggered a little. We watched him till he got past the next crossing and seemed past the cattle-guard. Sthair went up street. I went back into the factory and went to work. Sthair did not seem drunk. As we started away, we thought we could see the headlight of a train far up the track, and hear a slight rumble. Think I heard train go by soon after, while at work, but took no notice of it. Saw Wiseman's body after he was killed."

A. B. Oelrichs sworn. "Live at Butler, am engineer of train No. 99, that is supposed to have killed the man Saturday night. Left Butler at 10:45, due at Auburn, 10:55, but did not pass here till 11:16. Did not stop. Shut off steam east of the station at the half-mile post, and went through at about 13 miles an hour, slowing down for target at the Junction. Saw no one but the night operator, who was leaning out of the window, saw nothing on the track, though the night was very light. Felt no jar. At Junction, saw a man standing on the platform with something wrapped up like a picture frame. Thought at first it might be the line repairer, wanting to ride with us. But on coming up, saw it was a stranger. (This must have been Mr. Keeran) At Columbia City, the operator had received a message from the operator at Auburn, saying 99 had killed a man. The fireman and I then got out with our torches and looked over the engine and the trucks for several cars back, but saw no signs of blood or any indications of an accident. If the engine had gone over a man, think we must have felt the jar. Have never run over a man, but as we have run over pigs, etc., and felt the jar, think a man would be felt plainer. Met no train till we reached North Manchester, where we found 96 going east.

Frank Stafford, his fireman, testified to substantially the same.'

Otis Smith sworn. Is a painter. He had met Wiseman in saloons that evening. "I board where Bert. Sthair does." He told of Bart. coming in about midnight, and thinks he was not drunk. The rest of his testimony is in substance same as Sthair's.

Barton Sthair, the last man to talk to the deceased, was then sworn. "Have known Wiseman about three years. He often drank too much. Have seen him drunk. He was drunk last Saturday night about 8 o'clock, but afterwards braced up a little. I saw him first that day soon after 5 o'clock. We had been paid off, and then went to Neal's, and Wiseman came in. We shook hands, but at first did not recognize him, as had not seen him for two years. We took a glass of bear together, but I then told him I must get my laundry and go home and get my clothes. He said, "Don't be in a hurry." But I went. Saw him on 7th street after supper. He wanted me to take a glass of beer. I said, 'No Charley, you are too full.' Later, I returned and found him there again. Several were with me, and we were scuffling and playing about, but he thought we were in earnest. We went to several saloons, but I did not see him drink any more. It was about 10 or 11 o'clock, when we started for the Wabash depot. He wanted to go to Garrett. We went around to Edge's saloon, and I called for two glasses of beer, but Edge told Wiseman he had had enough, and would not let him drink. I took mine, but Wiseman said notning. We came along by Davenport's drug store, out onto Main street, and Wiseman started north. I told him that was not the way, and finally got him started south. I led him by the arm all the way as he seemed unsteady. Told him I would go to the Wabash depot, but not to the Junction. At the depot we sat and talked awhile on the platform. I wanted him to go down the wagon road, as I thought him in no condition to go down the track. He would not listen to me, but said he was man enough to go down the track and take care of himself. I then said I would go west to the crossing of the Ft. Wayne road. At that point we stopped, and I again tried to persuade him to go down the wagon road. I saw Mr. Grosh, night man at the foundry, and called and told him how things stood, and that I wanted him to witness that I was doing all that I could to get Wiseman to go down the wagon road, but that Wiseman refused. Wiseman would not listen, but turned soon, and started alone down the track. We watched him till we thought he had passed the cattle-guards west of Van Buren street, and then I went up Main street. A little way up I met Marshal Pfefferl and Constable Stoner. Said nothing to them. Went on up town, stopped at Sommers', and then went home. Do not know whether Wiseman had a watch or money. only saw him spend ten cents.

Court here adjourned till next day, Tuesday, when Orrin Meese and R. D. Tefft were examined. Meese knew but little about the matter, and Tefft only gave better details of the body after it was picked up. "The clothing was all off and in a sort of bundle near the body. The trunk was not hurt, except some bruises and dirt. The head had several hurts on the forehead and the jaw, as if a flange of the wheels had passed over it, and the left eye was turned nearly out. Both legs were off above the knees, and the right one was up the track about 100 feet east. Near this was a part of a shoe and some pieces of bone crushed from the ankle. There was a little blood where these pieces of bone lay, but hardly any, anywhere else, even where the body lay. Saw no valuables. The section men brought a hand car and a bier, and took the remains up to the hand car house near the depot, not to the coal shed. Clothing showed no blood. At first, some thought it was Eli Weaver. But the latter had some fingers off one hand, while on looking at Wiseman's hand he had one finger done up in a rag."

Several others testified, but knew little or nothing. The testimony of all agreed almost exactly. The only thing certain is that Wiseman was intoxicated and the train ran over him. If the engineer and fireman are right in their claim that engine did not run over him, he must have fallen into the train somewhere. Some think he might have been lying down among the gravel heaps all along there to raise the track with, and got up after the engine had passed, and then fell into the train.

Mrs. Sam. Hanna will entertain the L. L. C., of which she is a member, on Saturday, of this week.

Log cutters of the band sawmill, who have been laying off awhile, have begun work again in dead earnest.

S. J. Brandon is absent a good deal of the time traveling for the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works.

A man was run over by the west-bound through freight, Saturday night, on the Wabash track a little west of the station, and killed. (There is a notice elsewhere.)

P. F. Ryan, foreman of the band sawmill, is off on a visit among friends in York State. We believe Mr. Perrine attends to that part of the work while Mr. Ryan is away.

Van B. Perrine has sold out from the Gandy & Nickey Co., band sawmill, the firm now being A. B. Nickey and his son, S. M. Nickey, who will continue the business. We understand, they have bought a tract of timber land in Arkansas, and in a year or two will move the mill to that point, as the supply here is getting scarce. In the meantime, however, they will buy and saw up all the timber they can get, that is suitable.

Within the last month the band sawmill has shipped out four car loads of picket stuff. It goes to various parts of the country and is used to make the wire fastened picket fence. This establishment also makes a great deal of stuff used in crating buggies, supplying the three establishments in Auburn. Part of this is made from the slabs and odd pieces, and part is made by sawing entire logs of elm, etc. Then they cut up a great deal of the odds and ends of better timber, such as oak, ash and maple, into chair stuff, and similar material for use in furniture, besides what hickory is made into neck yokes, etc., where timber is suitable.

Give the new mill a good trial.

At the Wiseman inquest Monday, a man with a tired anti-railroad look, sat in the crowd till the fireman and engineer had testified and gone, when he suddenly roused up and told Coroner Miser, that John Mitchell ought to be called in, as John had seen blood on the track at the Junction. Then he rambled on about railroads, and said "they were always killing men and then trying to scheme out of it." Railroads were not to be trusted, and he talked hurriedly about the late accident at Waterloo. He was asked who he was, and replied he was a printer and connected with a paper. He added that he had two places of residence, six days in the week at Waterloo and one day in Auburn. He also said he answered to the name of Kirkpatrick, that he was opposed to railroads, but that the other papers of the county dare not say their souls were their own, as the railroads owned them, had bought them with passes. "But we don't have any of their passes, we wouldn't take 'em if they were offered to us." From this it appeared he was the motive power of the new paper at Waterloo, and it struck us that if he put on a jag like that every day, poor Waterloo could soon sympathize with Garrett and Auburn in the matter of "jaggedy" printers. After delivering himself of these sentiments so blasting to the railrord interests of the country, the man with the ornamental jag, two residences and nary a pass, drooped his head sadly, and soon fell asleep. He waked up in time to receive the benediction as Coroner Miser dismissed the court.

The Kendallville fair begins Sept. 28, and ends Oct. 2. They always have a good fair, and good races and are making special efforts to have this year, one of the very best.

Mrs. Fair, who went west this summer to visit her daughter, Mrs. Goetschius, and other relatives, is reported sick at John Sommers' at Pueblo, Colorado. We hope it may not prove serious.

David Kutzner, the oldest of the Kutzner brothers, has been here a week or two visiting the relatives, especially his daughter, Mrs. Ed. Wise east of town. His home is near Canton, in Starke county.

Pupils are so numerous that a new room has been prepared in the north building, and Julia Hodge will teach there. Every year or two we have to put in an additional teacher, yet the census gives us but 2,415 people.

The Waterloo fair has secured special trains over the Lake Shore, from Wauseon on the east to Goshen on the west. The Jackson road usually holds its local freight so as to accommodate those who cannot go on the passenger trains. tf

The Swing washer is a closed washer, and therefore better than an open one, for you are out of the steam, which is a great comfort; the heat is kept longer, which is a great saving. Buy a Swing washer of W. L. Meese, the inventor and maker. 39 41

Charlie Ling has bought out Fin Gibson's bakery and business, and will keep up the work at that popular stand, in its usual good shape. Mr. Gibson will probably go on the road. He sold out because of poor health, for his business has always been good.

One hundred cents is a dollar in value, par,
O yes, it will pay for something better;
A part it will buy a Bill Head cigar,
Which answers its purpose to the letter:—
It is so fresh, so fragrant and fair,
What pleasure to the smoker it brings,
Comfort goes with him everywhere.
As to this fine cigar he fondly clings.

Mr. McDougall of the Postal line has made arrangements to have weather signals again. They will come over his line. There is also a new plan, invented by a man at Seymour, Ind., in which the steam whistle of some factory gives out signals than can be heard many miles. Auburn has big whistles that can be heard a long ways. The reports by telegraph will be put up in the postoffice each morning.

Schaab & Murphy have moved to their new location, next door south of Davis' hardware. Don't forget the place. They want to see all their old customers and many new ones, and will, as ever, give them good bargains in all kinds of Clothing, etc., etc.

The best thing in speed, at any fair, is the running race of double team in harness. This brilliant feature will be remembered in the Auburn fair, as among the most exciting and interesting features. The same gentleman, Mr. Crandall, will give the same exhibition each day at Waterloo, twice each for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, making in all six heats. The team is a beautiful one, the horses well trained and under perfect control. He made the half mile in 57 seconds on the Auburn track. It was one of the leading features. Nobody can afford to miss this grand race.

Dr. K. K. Wheelock, specialist in diseases of the eye and ear, was in town over Sunday. He has been treating little Charlie Schaab's eyes, for some trouble they are causing. The Doctor has a fine reputation in this line. We might add that he is also professor of diseases of the eye and ear in the medical department of Taylor University at Ft. Wayne, and special examiner on the pension board for claimants suffering from diseases of the eye and ear. As will be seen by a card in the COURIER, he will make regular visits in Auburn. It will be of interest to those who suffer from these causes to consult him. He is no stranger but has been known to many of our people all his life.

J. S. Weaver treated this office to splendid pears and apples last Saturday, and the entire force pronounced Mr. W. a daisy.

Beuret has put in a stock of fine heating stoves, both for wood and coal. Call and see his styles and get terms. He can suit you.

Dr. Buchtel and wife went up to Goshen Tuesday to attend a two days' session of Homeopathic physicians of this and adjoining states.

Are you are aware that the Bill Head cigar, made by Kessler Bros., is a free smoker, solid material and delightful until it is all consumed?

Wednesday, Sept. 30, is Soldiers' day at the Kendallville fair. All soldiers and children are admitted free. Eminent speakers will be present.

The creamery building is nearing completion. It will be a very neat and pretty building when it is finished, almost too nice for that purpose.

I. J. McFadden of Waterloo, was here yesterday selling a lot of the finest grapes we have seen. He raised all kinds of fruit this year including peaches.

Willis Brown came near getting badly hurt last Saturday by some binder tongues falling on his head. As it was Dr. Buchtel had to take several stitches in his scalp.

The L. L. C. will meet with Mrs. Minnie Hanna on Saturday afternoon. Lesson, page 217 to 226. Leader, Mrs. Emanuel; Banks and Banking, Mrs. Lewis; work by Miss McTighe.

LOST: Lady's hair breastpin. A family relic, valued for its associations. The finder will confer a great favor and be suitably rewarded by returning to Mrs. R. S. Davenport, or to Davenport's drug store.

See our notice of the 100th Indiana, at Auburn, Oct. 14. This is the regiment of Dr. Swartz, Hon. E. D. Hartman, Henry Wolf, and others, though but few reside in this county. But we will welcome them all.

Miss Katherine Woodhull of Angola, will be in Auburn again on Friday of this week to resume work with her class. Her pupils and others interested can receive full information by calling on Mrs. Don. Garwood.

Dr. Helwig, late president of Wittenberg College, at Springfield, Ohio, has left the Lutheran church and will be a Presbyterian minister. He is a brother to Jacob and Isaac Helwig well known citizens of this county.

The North Side will ere long be quite up with the times in matters of manufacturing. The creamery, ashery, woolen mill and various other enterprises speak in very plain terms regarding the success of that immediate vicinity in matters of business ventures.

J. D. High, a DeKalb boy now at Atchison, Kansas, sends his subscription to the old reliable COURIER this week. The boys in the west are good pay, as well as good friends and good fellows generally. And we are glad to know they are to know they are generally prospering.

The editor of the Dispatch ought to get one of those Canada musical machines, like the one that was here over Sunday. It would make it easier for him to play commissioner, surveyor, legal adviser, town dad, bridge builder, etc. etc., besides that which comes on him daily, the care of his newspaper.

Glencoe, Canada, has produced a musical and mechanical genius. He was here Saturday evening exhibiting a machine, by means of which he could play a tune on five instruments at once. We might add that he could carry on a conversation at the same time. He played two violins, a bass viol, cornet and a piano at the same time, using feet, fingers and mouth. It attracted many visitors to the new Shaffer building where they charged a small sum for admittance. They are showing it at the fairs, and it always draws a crowd.

The Presbyterian church looked bright and clean Sunday, with its full surface of new carpet, new wall paper and decorations, new furniture, newly oiled seats, and an abundance of lovely flowers. The sermons morning and evening were extra good, and the choir sang as if they felt all the music there was in the books. There was a good congregation and they all seemed to enjoy meeting again in the old familiar place, with its new decorations. It is to hoped that as this very hot weather disappears, our people will gennerally feel how welcome they will be at this cosy place of worship and attend generally.

G. S. McCord is back from Ft. Wayne. The week or so he spent getting instructions and practice at Peltier's undertaking and embalming establishment has been very valuable. He made a special point to learn arterial embalming, or embalming through the arteries rather than by cavity embalming. As there were twelve bodies there during his stay, he had ample opportunities and will be prepared especially for this work, when the new Schaab Furniture Co., gets its establishment started. With Mr. McCord's former experience in this business in general, and his present efforts for a special work, he will prove a valuable man to the new firm and to the community.

There will be a grove and basket meeting held in Silas Nodine's woods in Union township, commencing Saturday eve, October 3, to be held by Rev. H. A. Croy and wife and their assistants. All are cordially invited.

He pointed to the button
He wore upon his breast:
She pressed it softly with her head—
His arm it did the rest.
October 8 at Waterloo,
They know that fair's the best;
He'll buy their tickets at the gate,
To give his arm a rest.

White birds eye maple bedroom suits are the latest, the prettiest and nobbiest new thing in the furniture line. These suits cost from $25 to $75. They are particularly pretty for a spare bedroom furnished in blue and gold. At Foster's, Ft. Wayne you will find a nice line of them which they will deliver in your city with freight charges prepaid.

Trustee W. H. Fair of Butler township, and wife are off on a visit with relatives at at Newell, Iowa. Among these are the two sisters of Hon. D. D. Moody, Ada and Ida, now married and settled there. We remember these two young ladies well, as the twin sisters we never could tell apart, as they looked and dressed so nearly alike. They were teachers, and we believe have taught some in Iowa. We are glad to hear they have done well.

We unintentionally overlooked some important items in our notes of the Auburn fair last week. The Eckhart Carriage Co., sold nine of their splendid buggies in one day, Thursday. Some were sold on the ground and some at the factory. Mrs. W. H. McIntosh received a number of premiums, among them, the first on quinces, of which fruit they have always been successful growers. We hope that at the next fair the exhibitors will call our attention to their exhibits more freely, and to the premiums they may receive.

Charles Wagoner and his brother Lewis, from Fairbury, Jefferson county, Neb., were here last Saturday. They formerly lived north of Waterloo, but for some years have been at their present home. They were always hard working boys, and now in middle life, are in good circumstances, both having good and valuable farms with plenty of stock and other things about them. They report John Rohrabaugh, another DeKalb boy, near them as also in good shape every way. They read the COURIER, vote the democratic ticket, sleep sound and are happy. Why shouldn't they be? They have had big crops, and peaches are fine at 30 cents a bushel.

While Harry Richie was getting a $10 bill changed at the postoffice Saturday evening, he dropped a $5 bill on the floor and did not notice it for a few minutes. Finding his money short, he started across the room to pick it up, as he was told he had dropped a bill. But a young man named Long, had picked it up and gone away with it. Believing that Long intended to keep it, Ritchie swore out a warrant, and gave it to Mr. Stoner, but the young man had gone into the country to see his girl and the constable missed him. He returned Sunday, and hunted up Richie and returned the money. People are divided in their opinions as to whether he meant to keep the money or not.

TOO MANY of the good times are for the young. There is no reason why a man should stop having a good time because he has passed 50. The old people should get together, enter their protest, make arrangements for enjoying themselves, and leave the young folks at home to watch the house for a change.

A MARBLE statue has been found on the island of Milo of a Grecian boxer, and is said to be a splendid work of art, in a good state of preservation. "THE world do move." A prominent Texas paper, the Austin Statesman, in a leading editorial declares that "the pistol must go." That is the voice of civilization. WHY do people say that a thing is like a dream to express their opinion that it is beautiful? There is nothing very pretty about most dreams. They are usually a repetition of everything wretched and unhappy that has happened during the day. To every pleasant dream you have, you have twenty that make you feel sore all next day.

AS A source of wheat for export, Canada has been credited with a surplus of 20,000,000 bushels. It is now announced that the Dominion can spare at least 33,000,000 bushels. This is an increase of 18,000,000 over last year in surplus, and indicates the rapid advance of the Red River country into the grain-growing competition of the world.

THE Shah of Persia knows his business. Furthermore the Shah is, to use a sporting expression, very hot stuff to deal with. Embezzlers do sometimes get into hot water after all.

FRANCE politely announces the transfer of Minister Roustan from Washington to Madrid as a "promotion," and sends to Washington in his stead an obscure diplomat who has been vegetating in Tangier. AN esteemed contemporary remarks that "the woman who lights the fire with coal oil is still abroad in the land." Begging the esteemed contempo's pardon, she is not still abroad in the land. The woman who is just going to light the fire with coal oil may be, but the woman who just has done so—she may be still, and she may be abroad, and she may be in the land, some six feet or so in it, but she is not still abroad in the land, not by a jugful.

THE discovery of the new route across the continent of South America, by which it is possible that the journey from Lima to the eastern river ports may be reduced from thirty to four or five days, will tend to postpone the building of the proposed "back-bone" railroad. The advantages of the newly discovered short cut added to the present advantage of the water route would make a trip by the proposed railroad route a time-wasting journey.

A NEW YORK man has invented a sort of collapsable hat to be worn by women going to the theater. On the street it is an intricate maze of bows and lace, but in the house, by the pulling of a string, it becomes an unobtrusive and modest little affair. The inventor will win the gratitude of posterity if he succeeds in getting the idea adopted by the fair sex, but, being an old seafaring man, he should recall the old adage of his craft about turning a woman and a ship.

CHILDREN should be taught early that water drowns and that fire burns. The dangerous combustible oils that explode and cause death and the treacherous under-currents which drown the expert swimmer, should convey lessons of caution to the living that would never be unlearned. There are people, however, who are foolishly trustful in the accomplishment taught at a natatorium as the mother who, when asked if she was not afraid to let her daughter cross the ocean, said: "La, no; she can swim."

A NEW YORK woman has just distinguished herself by scalding a man who declined to become her son-in-law. Here is a new danger. It is bad enough for a man to be roasted by the mother of his wife, but when by avoiding that danger he simply jumps from the roasting pan into the scalding vat, there is no safety left for the poor male sex. If every man were to be tortured by the would-be mothers-in-law he has disappointed some would have a hard path to travel to the grave.

LOAFERS are as regular in their habits as business men. You can always find them at their favorite places, and generally in the same chairs. They are usually great readers, and are promptly on hand to read the morning paper. Having performed this duty, they will discuss politics until noon, when they get a beefsteak and go home. They are down town later in the day, but only for a short time, unless they are poker players. If they are poker players, their afternoons are devoted to work.

NOW THAT the dirty journalist and disreputable newspaper man, Elliott, of Columbus, is at last behind the bars of the penitentiary, where the equally infamous Bebout harbored for a year, it is to be hoped that those who consider slander as legitimate will be somewhat chary of indulging in personal abuse. It is a strong object lesson which some may wisely take to heart, and profit thereby. A newspaper is not properly the vehicle for the gratification of personal malice, nor for the extortion of blood-money nor black-mail.

THE most unique souvenir spoon is the one which has the weird design of an arched-back cat and an old woman astride a broom. It is not a new feature of the spoon collection, having been manufactured some years ago, and it does not take with American people. It has not become a craze yet to claim descent from witches, but foreigners buy these souvenirs with avidity. They certainly represent a remarkable epoch in American history. The prehensile ancestor and the witch of Salem made a picturesque lineage, to say the least.

IT was assumed that when the Great Eastern was condemned as a structure too large for profitable use upon the water, the limit of size for ocean steamers would be reached far below the dimensions of the experiment of a third of a century ago. That was 692 feet in length on deck, and was a failure for the uses it was built for. It was made of service in laying of some of the ocean cables, and within the past year or two was broken up for junk. But the tendency now is to enormous size with the increase in speed. The Cunard line is building a steamer to be 600 feet in length, which is expected to break the present record. It is eighteen feet longer than the Teutonic, the latest record-breaker, and 100 feet longer than the champion of 1882. The limit does not appear.

Washing Away the Earth.

A French geologist has made a careful calculation of the amount of solid matter yearly carried off into the ocean by the action of the rivers of the world and other causes. He estimates that the reduction of the average height of the surface of the solid land is 0.006 inches each year. Making allowance for the corresponding rise in the bed of the ocean, and taking no account of the occurrence of volcanic and other exceptional phenomena—the general tendency of which is to hasten the process of disintegration—the period at which the solid land will have ceased to exist and the surface of the earth will be covered with water has been estimated. As, however, that period is 4,500,000 years distant, the prediction need cause no immediate disquietude.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A PARLOR match led to the discovery of a house-breaker in Kalamazoo, Mich. After entering a house, he imprudently endeavored to light his way by igniting a match that made a snapping report like a toy torpedo. The noise awoke a sleeper, and he captured the house-breaker.

A TARIFF ROBBERY.

HOW A ROBBER GOT $200,000 FROM WOMEN.

Why Fruit-Jars Have Been High—A Combination to Put Up Prices—One Manufacturer Scoops in a Fortune of Tariff Spoils—Pittsburg Grocers Protest Against Trusts—McKinley's Protected Britishers—A Merry Monopolist.

Cause of Their Cost.

Why have fruit jars cost so much during the present season? That is the question that many good housewives have been asking themselves. With excellent fruit going to decay because they were not able to pay the high prices for jars, they have looked forward with a feeling of regret for the pies of canned peaches, apples and other kinds of fruit which they will miss next winter.

Do our women know what there is behind this great rise in the price of jars? It is a trust, a tariff trust, and it has taken advantage of the large fruit crop to collect the protective tariff spoils which the McKinleyites have guaranteed to it. The tariff on glass jars for fruit is 40 per cent. on the best kinds and still higher on the cheaper grades. Besides this, glass jars are very expensive things to pack and ship, being very liable to break in handling; and as the new law makes no allowance for glass broken in shipment from abroad, unless the part broken is as much as one-tenth of the whole, the domestic manufacturers get the benefit of still higher protection.

Whenever, therefore, an importer buys $10 worth of glass fruit jars in Europe he is compelled to pay $4 and more as a penalty for bringing them into this country. This $4 is then added to the price of the jars and it keeps on accumulating in the hands of the various dealers till it reaches the farm where this tax is finally paid. Every dealer gets back the tariff price he paid and more; the farmer's wife has no way of getting hers back—she foots the entire bill and pockets the loss.

This is a fair specimen of protective tariff taxes. The fruit jar tax was imposed to keep foreign jars from competing with those made here, and it accomplishes this so thoroughly that we do not import enough of these jars to make them worth mention in the Government reports. Foreign jars were to be kept out in order to encourage domestic manufacturers, and this object is also accomplished, as is shown by the way in which these precious domestic manufacturers have combined and put up prices during the past few months.

One of the men in this fruit-jar trust made a snug fortune this summer. The story is told in a late number of the National Glass Budget, an organ published in the interests of the glass-makers. This paper prints an account of the resumption of work after the summer rest in the fruit-jar factories. The factories opened, says the Budget, in the midst of the wildest boom in the glass fruit-jar trade since 1879. * * * Behind the boom there is a most interesting story of how Whitney Bros., of the Whitney Glass Works, at Glassboro, N. J., have scooped up a clear profit.

"Two years ago Whitney Bros. found themselves in a position where it was to their advantage to take the entire product of an outside factory which ran on jars for them. The Whitneys' own mills continued to turn out the usual amount, and the trade looked with horror upon the jars, which were piled up into the thousand gross.

"At the beginning of the season a combination was made in which it was agreed to maintain the price at $7.50 a gross. The Whitneys were in, but even this combination did not let the others rest easy. When the boom came the Whitneys had about 45,000 gross of jars on hand, and they were the masters of the situation. Up jumped the price. It rose quickly from $7 to $7.50, to $8.50, to $10.50, to $11; and to $11.50, and still Whitney Bros. had thousands of jars. They could not ship them fast enough to check the rise. From five to fifteen carloads have been going daily from the storehouses in Glassboro and Salem, and yet but a small fraction of the demand was met. Prices continued to jump, and Tuesday offers as high as $12 and $14 a gross were made without securing the jars. The resumption of work at the factories will have no appreciable effect on the market."

This is a distinct case of tariff robbery. Any one can see that if the protective tariff did not prevent the importation of foreign made jars there would have been a supply of them here to meet the large demand, and that the New Jersey men could not then have fleeced the women of $200,000. In order to "encourage domestic industry" the McKinleyites turn over all the farmers' wives to the tender mercy of a grasping monopoly made up of a few jar manufacturers. Is it not a sin and a shame thus to put it into the power of a half dozen men to lay tribute upon thousands of households?

Why the Ship Rolled.

A protectionist traveler just returned from Germany has the following to say in a high tariff organ: "The best thing I heard was on board the steamship Lahn of the North German Lloyd line on my way home. Among the passengers was a German gentleman of wealth, who is a manufacturer of cutlery near Cologne. He was accompanied by his wife, and while on deck one day was engaged in wrapping her up in a rug in her steamer chair. It proved to be a very difficult undertaking, as the ship on a light sea was rolling heavily from side to side. Some one remarked about his predicament, that it was a curious thing for the steamship to be rolling so heavily, when he replied in distinct English: 'It is not at all curious. It is that McKinley bill does it. There is no freight aboard ocean steamships going to America any more, and the ship is light in the hold. That is why she rolls so badly.' I thought that was a pretty good illustration of the protective tariff bill."

Yes; a pretty good illustration. We are now exporting enormous quantities of wheat, and many ships even sail here empty from Europe to load with wheat, thus making it necessary for our product to pay a higher freight to get into the European market, and thus in a measure hurting its sale.

But how long can trade of this kind continue? Where much goes out and little comes in the balance must be made up in money. But no nation can be drained of its money; for as money grows scarce it becomes dearer. In other words, the prices of commodities fall, and when prices have fallen there we cease to send our products there.

One-sided trade cannot long exist. This is admitted even by the organ of the American Protective Tariff League. In its issue of April 3 it said: "Probably no economic law is more rigid than that a nation's imports must, in the long run, be paid for by its exports."

From which it follows that the more we buy in Europe the greater will be the demand there for our products of farm and factory; and in order that we may make a foreign mraket for "another bushel of wheat and another barrel of pork," we must lower our tariff wall to let in more foreign goods.

Protection in Mexico.

Henry Wall Allen, of Kansas City, writes a letter from the City of Mexico to the New York Standard, in which he says: "The vast majority of this population are so poor that they have never had on shoe or stocking. It is estimated that 95 per cent. of them never buy an imported article. (How McKinley and his followers would bow down and worship such a people.) But cotton cloth is the one thing that, more or less of it, generally less, everybody must have. With free trade Fall River could supply it at five cents a yard. But, as it happens, this article is protected. The price of an inferior quality of it ranges between ten and twenty cents a yard, and the mill operatives work fourteen to fifteen hours a day for from thirty-five to seventy cents. The manufacturers, it may be needless to add, have become very wealthy."

KICKING AT TRUSTS.

A PROTEST FROM THE PITTSBURG GROCERS

Condemning Trusts and Combines—Crackers, Jellies, Preserves, and Fruit Butter Held at High Prices—Trusts Protected by the Tariff.

The Retail Grocers' Association of Pittsburg, Pa., has been having a mild whack at trusts and combinations. After commending the action of the sugar refiners in reducing the price of sugar as the result of the removal of the duty last April, the association says:

"We regret to say that there are other manufacturers of staple goods which are largely consumed, such as jellies, preserves, fruit butters and crackers of all kinds, who maintain former prices, notwithstanding the great reduction in sugar and the bountiful supply of wheat and fruits of all kinds."

The association further believes "that crackers of all kinds, jellies, preserves, and fruit butters are entirely too high, and that prices are maintained by influences other than the law of supply and demand," and that "all kinds of fruit products can be maintained and manufactured at greatly reduced prices."

In commenting on this, the New York Merchants' Review, a stern foe to all our tariff trusts, says: "There can be no question as to the tariff being involved in this matter of the prices of the goods mentioned in the resolutions of our Pittsburg friends, and it may be said without exaggeration that the tariff is responsible for the condition of which the grocers complain. They appear to be thankful for the reduction of sugar prices—a result of the passage of the McKinley law—but as the same measure, by its provisions which maintain or increase the duties of certain other goods handled by grocers, is chiefly responsible for the existence of manufacturers' trusts and combinations, or at least gives them power to maintain prices above the level of foreign markets, the quarrel of the Pittsburg Association it would seem, ought to be with the tariff and those responsible for its onerous provisions."

It should be added that the cracker combine is protected by a duty of 20 per cent.; the combines controlling jelly, preserves, fruit butter, etc., by a duty of 35 per cent.

In England the poor working people buy fruit, jams, marmalades, etc., as substitutes for butter. If it were not for our protective taxes on these articles, would not the trusts be compelled to sell at lower prices and thus put these articles in reach of poorer people than can now indulge in them?

A Merry Monopolist.

The pocket-knife trust, which calls itself the American Pocket-Cutlery Association, has been gradually moving up prices ever since the McKinley law was passed. One of the leading spirits in this trust is Thomas W. Bradley, of the New York Knife Company, Walden, N. Y. In a letter to the New York trade journal, Hardware, he writes in a merry way about the good things that the McKinley law is doing for the pocket-knife monopoly. He says:

"American manufacturers of pocket cutlery have, under the McKinley tariff, an opportunity to sell their product in an American market such as they have not had for years. * * * American makers are extending their works, increasing their output, and getting slightly better prices. * * * Life is a sight more worth living since Major McKinley and his colleagues framed a protective tariff to protect."

How much this merry monopolist and his friends have advanced prices may be seen from the following statement made by a prominent New York dealer in a recent interview: "Here," he said, "is a three-blade knife which has had a very large sale in the West, retailing at 75 cents. A year ago we bought this knife at $4.25 a dozen, but on Oct. 18 the price was raised to $5.20. Last January a further advance to $6 was made, and I see here that we bought it in June at $6.70. At this latter price, after the knife has passed through the hands of the jobber, the retail merchant will not be satisfied with less than a dollar as the price to the final purchaser."

These higher prices are the natural result of raising the old duty from 50 per cent. to a McKinley duty running all the way from 74 to 116 per cent. The knife trust simply takes what McKinley gave it; and the thousands of consumers all over the country must pay more for their knives.

THE great plate-glass factory at Irwin, Pa., with a capital of $1,000,000, has recently turned out its first glass. It is announced that its output will be 1,250,00 feet per annum. This quantity, at the average prices for American plate glass, will bring the company $937,000, while the same glass bought in Europe and laid down in New York, without the duty, could be bought for $412,0 0. Great is protection for American industry.

THE Boston Transcript, a Republican journal, offers the following to temper the glee of the McKinleyites in their rejoicings over free sugar: "It is now thought that $12,000,000 will be required to pay the sugar bounty the present year. We are supposed to have made sugar free, and the American people will pay $12,000,000 in 1891 for having done it. The Government doesn't furnish the money. It is the people.

IN 1890 cheese to the value of $1,295,506 was imported into this country. The same year we exported cheese to the value of $8,591,042. What we imported came in the shape of the small and rich Swiss and French cheeses, with which the article we export cannot possibly compete.—Rural New-Yorker.

THERE is a duty of 45 per cent. on pickles, and a combine of twenty-five pickle manufacturers has just been effected at St. Louis and prices fixed for the season. What a pickle these tariff trusts would be in if there were no protective tariff to give them full control of the American consumer!

IT is a highly interesting fact that the protected producers of pig lead in this country sell lead in Canada at a price lower by 18 per cent. than the price which the people of the United States are required to pay. Another object lesson of the beauties of McKinleyism. —Boston Globe.

THE tariff trusts are gradually raking in everything. Now it is a snath trust. This trust was recently organized as the National Snath Company; and articles of incorporation have been filed at Jackson, Mich. The trust is protected by a duty of 35 per cent.

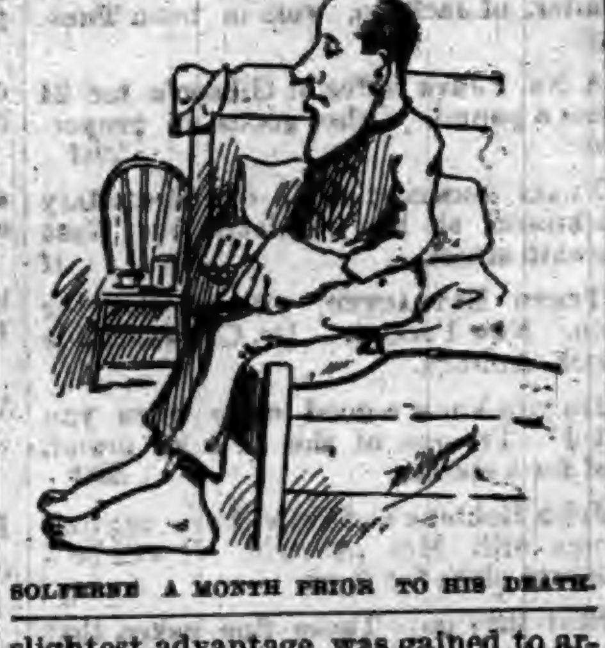
ACROMEGALY KILLED HIM.

The Mysterious Malady That Carried off Francisco Solferne.

Francisco Solferne, the Italian fruit-dealer whose disease baffled the skill of the medical fraternity, died at the Almshouse, says the San Francisco Examiner.

Solferne was admitted to the Almshouse in June, and the disease which ended his life is called acromegaly. It causes an enlargement of all the bones of the body. About all the physicians could do was to study the malady, which slowly but painlessly sapped the life of the victim. It is known that the cancellous tissue of the bones becomes hypertrofied, causing the extremeties to become enormously enlarged, and not much more can be told by the physicians.

Dr. Bunker tried every known remedy for kindred ailments, but not the slightest advantage was gained to arrest the progress of the disease, which is almost unknown to science.



SOLFERNE A MONTH PRIOR TO HIS DEATH.

When Solferne applied for admission to the almshouse he presented a hideous spectacle. His head was enlarged to nearly the length of that of a horse's. The forehead was high and broad and the frontal bone projected far beyond the eyes. The nasal bone had grown to the size of a banana, and his ears could scarcely be covered by an ordinary-sized hand. His whole body was affected in a similar manner, his hands being of such an enormous size that one could easily cover the surface of a ham, and his feet were as large as a five-gallon beer keg, with toes grown to the proportions of a man's fist.

The knee joints were about as large as his legs at the thighs, and from the waist up his body had the circumference of the bodies of two 200-pound men, his ribs having grown out of all proportion.

About a month ago Solferne took to his bed, lost his former cheerfulness, refused to converse with any one, became very irritable, and finally relapsed into a lethargic state, from which he could be aroused with difficulty when it was necessary for him to take food.

Solferne said that the disease first attacked him when he was about 20 years old, but thinking it was some ordinary trouble, paid no attention to it. But as time passed his extremities grew larger rapidly. Medical advice was of no value, and nothing could be done to save him.

The body was buried in the potter's field. Some of the physicians talk of resurrecting it and making a thorough and systematic investigation of the cause of the disease.

THE NEW COMMANDER.

Captain John Palmer, of the G. A. R., and His Creditable War Record.

The newly elected Commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, Captain John Palmer, of Albany, N. Y., was born on Staten Island, March 22, 1842. His war record is an excellent one. On Sept. 10, 1861, he enlisted in the Ninety-first New York Volunteers, and was constantly with that regiment until it was mustered out July 3, 1865, taking part in all its engagements. He was seriously injured at the battle of Five Forks in the combined charge of cavalry and infantry. By force of his soldierly qualities he attained successively the grades of Corporal, Sergeant, Sergeant-Major, Second Lieutenant, First Lieutenant, Adjutant, and Captain. Since the war he has been engaged in the fresco painting and decorating business at Albany. He is one of the best-known and most popular members of the order of his State, is a charter member of Lew Benedict Post, No. 5, Department of New York, and was for several terms Commander of this post, which, with headquarters at Albany, is one of the largest and most influential posts in the country. He was twice elected Commander of the Department of New York, and in 1879 was chosen Senior Vice Commander-in-chief, acquitting himself with credit in all these important positions. Being thus placed in the direct line of promotion to the highest office in the Grand Army, his election was assured the moment the delegates from New York determined to unite upon him as their choice. He is a forcible speaker, a good presiding officer at department and national conventions, and has frequently been placed at the head of important committees by both State and national encampments.

A Dream of Happiness

May be followed by a morning of "La Grippe." Easily, and why? Because the displacement of covering in bed, a neglected draught from a partly closed window, an open transom connected with a windy entry in a hotel, may convey to your nostrils and lungs the death-dealing blast. Terrible and swift are the inroads made by this new destroyer. The medicated alcoholic principle in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will check the dire complaint. A persistence in this preventive of its further development will absolutely checkmate the dangerous malady. Unmedicated alcoholic stimulants are of little or no value. The just medium is the Bitters. Not less efficacious is it in cases of malaria, biliousness, constipation, rheumatism, dyspepsia and kidney trouble. The weak are usually those upon whom disease fastens first. Invigorate with the Bitters.

A Bad Place to Die In.

A wandering son of Thespis, writing to this paper from a wild place in the wild West, says: "Last week a man was killed here in a street encounter. The coroner who sat on the body appropriated to his own use a diamond pin found in the shirt front of the dead man. The sheriff came in and swapped watches with the corpse, leaving a $4 Waterbury instead of an elegant gold time piece. The judge who tried the murder case, finding a pistol on the remains, fined it the sum of $30 for carrying concealed weapons, which amount he took from a roll of bills in the dead man's trousers. This is an actual fact.[—New Orleans Picayune.

Ventilating Railroad Cars.

A new method of ventilating railroad carriages and preventing dust from entering with the air has appeared in France. The more quickly the train moves the more rapidly the apparatus works. The air is made to traverse a receptacle containing water, which cools it and relieves its dust, after which it goes through another filtering before entering the carriage.

Checked

—the frightful inroads of Scrofula and all blood-taints. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery purifies and enriches the blood, cleanses the system of all impurities, and restores health and strength. It cures all diseases arising from impure blood. Consumption is one of them. It's simply lung-scrofula. In all its earlier stages, the "Discovery" effects a cure. It's easy to see why. The medicine that masters scrofula in one part, is the best remedy for it in another. It is the best. It's warranted. It's the only blood and lung remedy that's guaranteed to benefit or cure, or the money will be refunded. No other medicine of its class does it. How many would be left if they did?

It's the cheapest blood-purifier, sold through druggists, (no matter how many doses are offered for a dollar,) because you only pay for the good you get.

Your money is returned if it doesn't benefit or cure you.

"German Syrup"

Croup. We have selected two or three lines from letters freshly received from parents who have given German Syrup to their children in the emergencies of Croup. You will credit these, because they come from good, substantial people, happy in finding what so many families lack—a medicine containing no evil drug, which mother can administer with confidence to the little ones in their most critical hours, safe and sure that it will carry them through.

ED. L. WILLITS, of Alma, Neb. I give it to my children when troubled with Croup and never saw any preparation act like it. It is simply miraculous.

MRS. JAS. W. KIRK, Daughters' College, Harrodsburg, Ky. I have depended upon it in attacks of Croup with my little daughter, and find it an invaluable remedy.

Fully one-half of our customers are mothers who use Boschee's German Syrup among their children. A medicine to be successful with the little folks must be a treatment for the sudden and terrible foes of childhood, whooping cough, croup, diphtheria and the dangerous inflammations of delicate throats and lungs. ⑩

DEAL IN HUMAN FLESH.

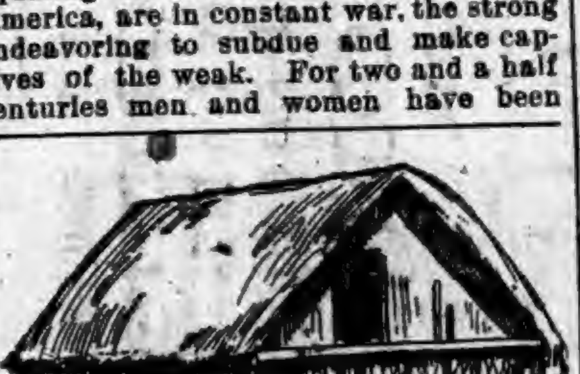
WHERE THE SLAVE TRADE STILL EXISTS.

How the Business Is Carried On, and What Sort of People Indulge in It—Desolation Wrought by the Slave Hunter—Scenes and Incidents—On Exhibition in the Market.

The Slave Trade.

The present crusade against the slave trade will probably prove the death-blow to this nefarious institution. Less than one hundred years ago slavery was recognized and legalized in every country on the globe, with perhaps one exception, but such has been the growth of an enlightened public opinion on this subject that now no civilized nation tolerates it, and all are engaged either directly or indirectly in efforts for the suppression of the traffic in human beings.

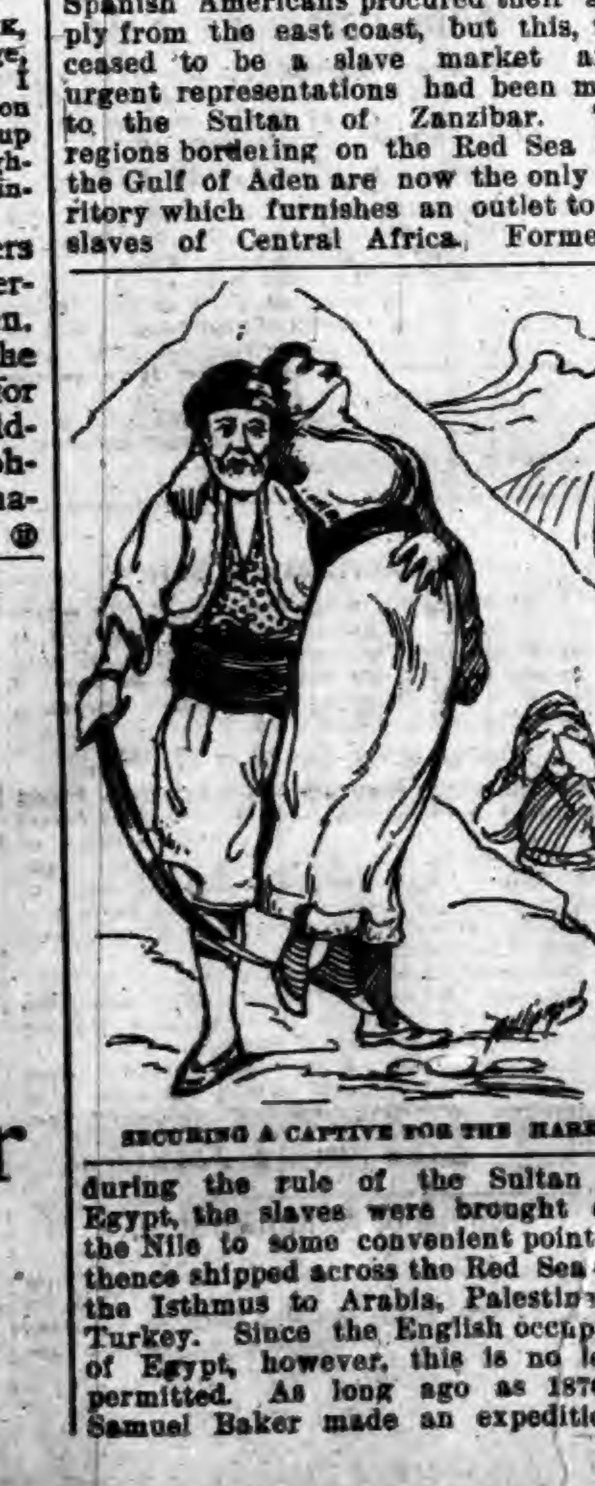
The African slave trade, the curse of modern times, was begun by Portugal in 1481, continued by Spain, and, with scarcely an exception, every maritime nation of Europe at one time or another found profit in the purchase and sale of the unfortunate creatures torn by violence from their homes and destined to a fate sometimes worse than death. The slave trade has, in Africa, brutalized a tract of country extending fifteen degrees on each side of the equator by forty degrees in width from east to west, a territory of over 4,000,000 square miles. The inhabitants of this vast extent of country, a district about equaling in size the whole of North America, are in constant war, the strong endeavoring to subdue and make captives of the weak. For two and a half centuries men and women have been bred for sale like animals, and when the supply proved inadequate they were hunted like wild beasts. The Abbe Reynol, as long ago as 1777, computed that 9,000,000 slaves had been taken from Africa, 50 per cent. of whom had died from the sufferings endured during their transportation to other countries. Sir John Hawkins, in 1562, began the business for the English, and in two centuries the slave trade, as managed in British ships, reached enormous proportions. In 1786 the English had 130 ships engaged in the traffic, and, annually transported to their colonies in America and elsewhere from 50,000 to 60,000 slaves. Bad as was this exhibit, that of the Spanish nation in its relation to the slave trade was even worse. The horrid butcheries practiced by the conquerors of Mexico, Peru, and the West Indies practically depopulated those quarters of the world, and, to fill the places of the hapless Indians, the Spaniards were forced to have recourse to African slaves. Thus the Spanish colonists early began the importation of slaves from Africa, and were the last to relinquish the profits arising from the horrid traffic. As late as 1860, 40,000 slaves were landed in Cuba, most of whom had been ruthlessly taken from their homes by the Arab traders, who annually desolated large tracts of country in the interior of Africa. The horrors of the "Middle Passage" have often been told, but not so well does the world know of the deeds perpetrated in the Dark Continent in order to furnish victims for the traffic.



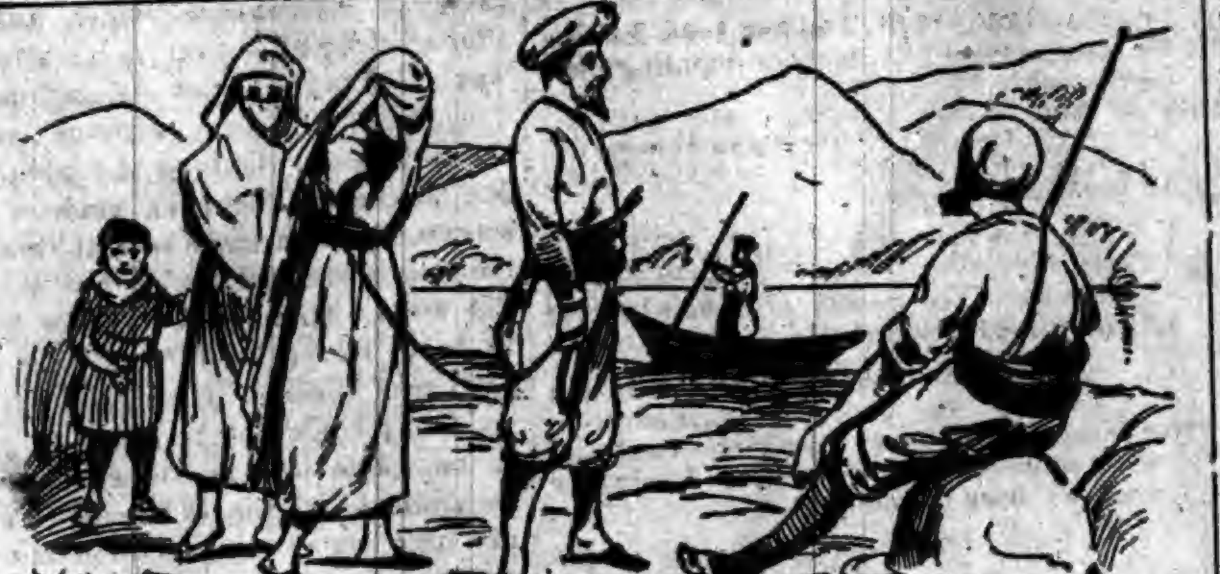
A SLAVE-SHED IN ZANZIBAR.

The slave traders and dealers of Central Africa are mostly Arabs. They are men of wealth, and in preparing for a slave raid usually employ a considerable number of professional soldiers, who are either Arabs like themselves or natives trained to the use of arms. With their hired murderers they proceed to the interior, and after locating a village they deemed it desirable to attack, by a forced march they arrive in its vicinity usually a little before daybreak. With the first ray of dawn the light cane and straw huts are set on fire, and the affrighted inmates rush forth only to fall before the deadly aim of the Arab sharpshooters, safely located in the surrounding jungle. Grown men and able-bodied women who make resistance are ruthlessly murdered. The old and the very young are left to die of starvation, and only the strong of both sexes are carried off in the train of the slave dealer. As human life is cheap, little regard is felt or shown for the helpless captives. Sometimes the marches across the desert are long, and many fall by the way. A slave too weak to carry his chains is shot, or if too far gone to be worth a charge of powder is left to be devoured by the hyenas. If 50 per cent. of the slaves reach a market, the dealer will still realize largely on his investment; so he has no incentive to spare life or show mercy.

Formerly prevailing on both the east and west coasts of the Dark Continent, the slave trade is now confined to a comparatively limited area. At the beginning of this century the slaves for the Americas came from the west coast, but long since that traffic was cut off. After the west coast was closed, the Spanish Americans procured their supply from the east coast, but this, too, ceased to be a slave market after urgent representations had been made to the Sultan of Zanzibar. The regions bordering on the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden are now the only territory which furnishes an outlet to the slaves of Central Africa. Formerly, during the rule of the Sultan over Egypt, the slaves were brought down the Nile to some convenient point, and thence shipped across the Red Sea or by the Isthmus to Arabia, Palestine and Turkey. Since the English occupation of Egypt, however, this is no longer permitted. As long ago as 1870, Sir Samuel Baker made an expedition up the Nile for the purpose of discovering the extent of the slave trade in the Soudan, and disclosed the the fact that at least 50,000 slaves a year were taken from that country into Arabia and Turkey by way of the Nile and the Red Sea. The English occupation of Egypt put a stop to traffic in human beings on the Nile, and from that time on the slave caravans passed overland by routes unknown to Europeans. These routes are still followed, and in some way large caravans of slaves annually reach the shores of the Gulf and the Red Sea at points whence their shipment is comparatively safe. Those waters are diligently patroled by men-of-war and gunboats of England, France and Italy, but the utmost diligence has not been sufficient to stop the traffic.



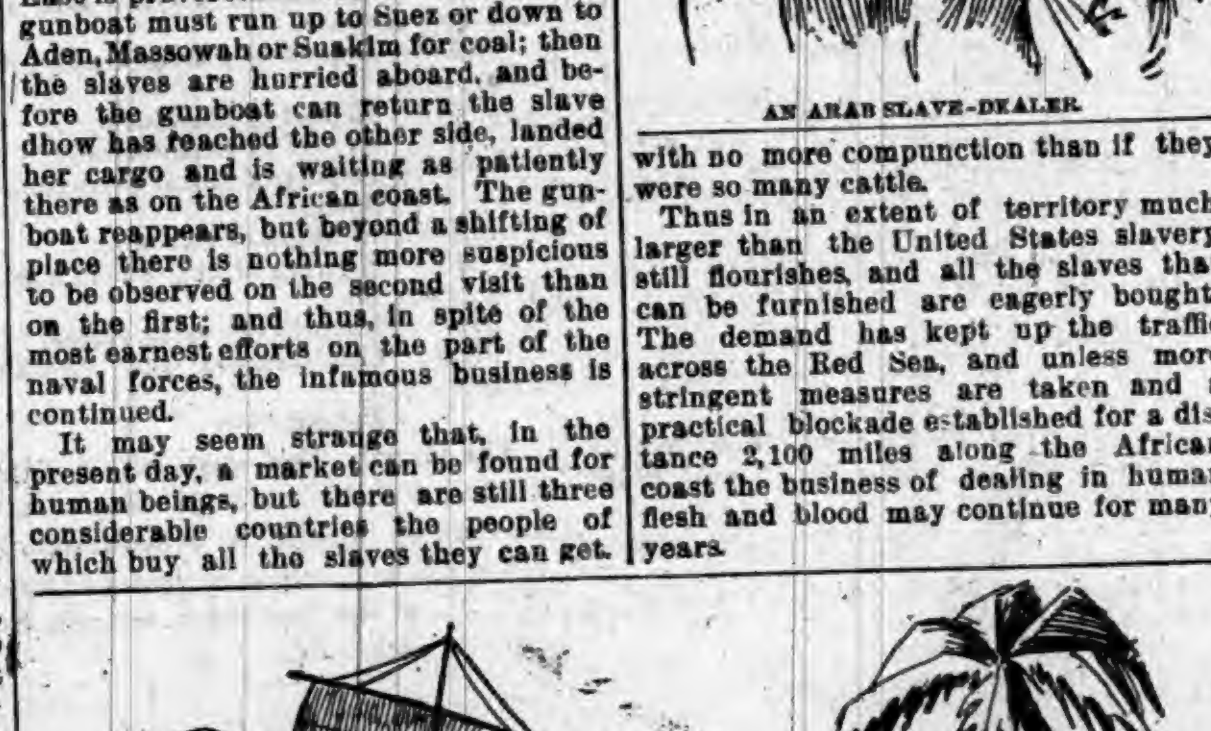
SECURING A CAPTIVE FOR THE HAREM.



AFTER A SUCCESSFUL RAID IN CIRCASSIA.

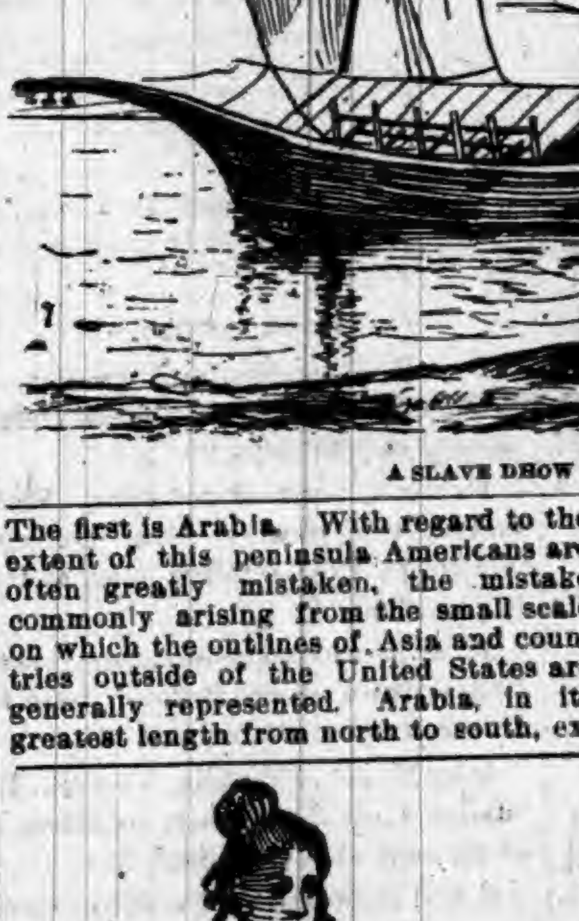
The Red Sea is about 1,500 miles long, and from twenty, in its narrowest part, to 250 wide. The Gulf of Aden presents 600 miles more of coast line, and to prevent communication between two shores so extensive is practically impossible. The slave caravans are halted a short distance in the country, a large boat is prepared and kept near the shore. The approach of a foreign man-of-war creates no uneasiness, for unless slaves are actually on board nothing can be done. A gunboat, its officers sure that slaves are about to be embarked, may wait in the vicinity for a month or six weeks, but not the slightest misdemeanor will be observable. The patience of the East is proverbial. Sooner or later the gunboat must run up to Suez or down to Aden, Massowah or Suakim for coal; then the slaves are hurried aboard, and before the gunboat can return the slave dhow has reached the other side, landed her cargo and is waiting as patiently there as on the African coast. The gunboat reappears, but beyond a shifting of place there is nothing more suspicious to be observed on the second visit than on the first; and thus, in spite of the most earnest efforts on the part of the naval forces, the infamous business is continued.

It may seem strange that, in the present day, a market can be found for human beings, but there are still three considerable countries the people of which buy all the slaves they can get.



A SLAVE DHOW ON THE RED SEA.

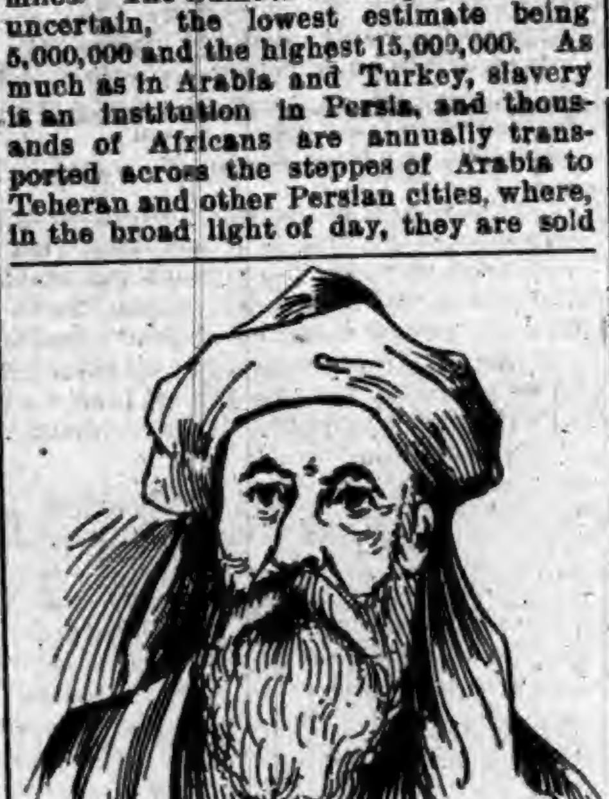
The first is Arabia. With regard to the extent of this peninsula Americans are often greatly mistaken, the mistake commonly arising from the small scale on which the outlines of Asia and countries outside of the United States are generally represented. Arabia, in its greatest length from north to south, extends about 1,500 miles, and from east to west about 800; thus, allowing for the irregularities of the coast, it has about 1,500,000 square miles of area. The United States, excluding Alaska, has an area of about 3,000,000 square miles, so that the peninsula of Arabia is really about one-half the size of the United States, in extent being about as long, from north to south, as the distance from St. Paul to New Orleans, and about as wide as from St. Louis to New York. The number of people in Arabia is uncertain, the lowest estimate being about 4,000,000, and the highest exceeding 8,000,000. Very little is known of the interior, it being inhabited by tribes of fanatical Mohammedans, who never have permitted the passage of foreigners through their country. But one thing we do know, that there is a lively demand for slaves, and a ready sale for them at any and every part of this immense extent of country. Thousands of the Africans annually transported from their native country to Asia are sold in the markets of Muscat, Jeddah, Mecca, and Medina, but not a few of the best pass on through Arabia to Turkey.



IN THE MARKET.

The Turkish Empire, of which Arabia is supposed to form a part, forms by far the best foreign market for African slaves. Nominally the Sultan's dominions comprise about 5,000,000 square miles and 57,000,000 population, but leaving off Egypt, Tunis, and the independent states of the Balkans, about 1,500,000 square miles of territory and about 31,000,000 of people are governed from the Sublime Porte, the territory being about half as large as the United States, and with also about half the population. In all this country slavery is still practiced; millions of slaves are held by the Turks, and people living thousands of miles away in the heart of Africa cut each others' throats in order that household service in Constantinople or Damascus may be faithfully performed.

The third great territory in which slavery still finds a place is Persia. As in the case of the others, the extent of this country is scarcely appreciated by Americans. The length of Persia from east to west is about 900 miles, its breadth from north to south is about 700, and its area nearly 650,000 square miles. The number of the population is uncertain, the lowest estimate being 5,000,000 and the highest 15,000,000. As much as in Arabia and Turkey, slavery is an institution in Persia, and thousands of Africans are annually transported across the steppes of Arabia to Teheran and other Persian cities, where, in the broad light of day, they are sold with no more compunction than if they were so many cattle.



AN ARAB SLAVE-DEALER.

Thus in an extent of territory much larger than the United States slavery still flourishes, and all the slaves that can be furnished are eagerly bought. The demand has kept up the traffic across the Red Sea, and unless more stringent measures are taken and a practical blockade established for a distance 2,100 miles along the African coast the business of dealing in human flesh and blood may continue for many years.

The capture and detention of Africans is not, however, the only slavery that exists in the three countries named. The institution of the harem is known in all three, and the harem is but legalized slavery in its most objectionable form. The supply of women and girls for the harems of the East is kept up by the most detestable means. The field for the kidnaper was formerly Georgia and Circassia, the two mountain countries lying between the Black Sea and the Caspian. The women of these countries have always been famous for their beauty, and before the Russians overran that region the harems of Constantinople were supplied from the mountains of the Caucasus.

Other states have no right to interfere in the domestic affairs of these Oriental despotisms, and so cannot suppress slavery within their limits. The most that can be done by any civilized power is to endeavor to diminish the evil by cutting off the source of supply, and so prevent an increase in the number of slaves. This, it is fair to presume, is being done; but the increased efficiency of the two patrols on the Red Sea has had a curious and unexpected result in Africa.

AUTUMN COSTUMES.

Two Very Stylish Gowns with Hats and Gloves to Match.

The two costumes pictured in illustration are types of autumn styles such as are met with at the exclusive and refined country resorts. The white cloth gown on the right is most charmingly set off by a yoke and a deep band of pale-blue silk striped with white, while the bottom of the skirt and the corsage are finished with deep volants of pleated white gauze. A very stylish black velvet hat of an original shape, trimmed with autumn flowers, and black gloves complete this exquisite costume. The garment worn by the lady on the left is made up in old red silk, richly trimmed with black lace, and is intended to be worn over a thin house gown when driving. A black feather boa and a black lace hat richly garnitured with autumn flowers add to the air of refinement and distinction which characterizes this garment.

Her Wit Saved Her.

The advice usually given, "Keep cool in danger! Don't let your wits desert you!" is good as far as it goes. But more effective, perhaps, will be an illustration of how a woman once saved her life by her cool courage, which allowed her wits to devise the plan that thwarted a madman:

A lady was sitting in her parlor in Paris at dusk one evening, when a man entered, and without ceremony seated himself. He had probably obtained entrance to the house as a patient, for the lady's husband was a doctor. She was astonished at his boldness, but still more at his personal appearance. His face was haggard, his eyes wild and his dress disordered.

After he had gazed at her for a few moments, she said, "If you wish to see the doctor"——

"I am a doctor," he interrupted, with a wave of his hand. "I have heard that you are a great sufferer from headaches. I have come to cure you!"

The lady became now really terrified, for she suspected the true character of her visitor. Her husband was out. There were no servants on her floor, and she could not call any, for the man had seated himself near the bell-cord.

Without betraying her fear, however, she replied: "It is true that I am subject to headaches, but how can you cure them?"

"It is simply done," said he, glaring at her. "I propose to cut off your head, examine your brains and turn them over. Then I shall replace them and put your head back upon your shoulders."

The lady turned deadly pale. Alone with a madman, and threatened with a horrible death! The maniac detected the change. "You need not fear," said he; "my remedy is painless. But come, we must be quick!"

So saying, he rose and moved toward her. She rose, too, and with a calmness, assumed by a tremendous effort of will, said, "But, sir, blood will flow and my dress may be spoiled; permit me to bring a towel from the next room."

The lunatic made a gesture of assent, and she retired to an adjoining apartment. From this she reached the stairs and informed the police, who came and secured the maniac.

"Sam, you are getting pretty well along in years," said an Austin lawyer to an aged darkey; "don't you feel afraid you will die some day?"

"No, boss, I isn't a bit afraid of death. It's how to scrub along and get a libbin' in dis worl' what's boderin' me, heah, heah!"

"Don't you think you will kinder wince when old man Death knocks at the door and says, 'Come along, Sam, we have got use for you in the other world?'"

"Not a bit, boss, not a bit. I'll tell yer about dat. Did you ebber go to der cirkus?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Did, hay? Well, after de show was all ober an' yer was streamin' out of de front door of de canvass, didn't yer nebber feel sober-like, an' as though yer'd spent yer 50 cents fer nuffin?"

"Well, Sam, that about illustrates it."

"Yes. Well, when de icy han' ob death is laid on yer pulse, dat's jes' about how yer will feel. Yer'll feel as if yer wanted ter go hum an' see de ole folks an' de chums what's gone afore, an' yer'll jist feel tired an' out of sorts, an' all yer'll want is ter rest, jist rest. Dat's my theology, boss, an' I done got through carin' what de preachers say."—Texas Siftings.

Unjust Discrimination.

A man may go into the country in a cheviot shirt and armed with a $50 fish-pole, and every paper in the country will tell of the trout he caught—or said he caught, which amounts to the same thing—whereas the soiled small boy, whose whole outfit, including hat, shirt and trowsers would sell for $5, may go no farther from home than the nearest wharf, and, though he returns home at night with a string of flounders weighing more than himself, no newspaper heralds the glad intelligence to the four corners of the earth. Why this discrimination? Is it justice? Is it right?—[Boston Transcript.

A Stupid Maid.

Miss Clara—Horrors! What in the world are you doing?

Maid—Pilin' up these books, ma'am.

Miss Clara—Oh, you stupid, stupid thing! You are not fit to be in a respectable family. Those are my novels.

Maid—Yes'm.

Miss Clara—Oh, how could you? You're enough to drive any one wild. Don't you know that some of them I've read and some of them I haven't?

Maid—Yes'm.

Miss Clara—And here you've mixed them all up, so I can't never separate them.—[New York Weekly.

Doing His Duty.

Large Rubies.

Three rubies of unusual size were sold at auction in London recently. They were the property of the Burmah Ruby Mine Company, Limited. The first, weighing, 1,185 carats, irregular in form and deep red in color, sold for £400. The second, yellowish red in color, weighed 302 carats, and sold for £65. The third weighed 281 carats, was dull red in color, and brought £33 12s.

Artistic Advertising.

Undoubtedly the Ivory Soap people deserve credit for the best grade of illustrations now being used for advertising purposes. The series of full page drawings which have been appearing on the last page of the Century represent some of the most capable book and magazine artists in the country. The series must have cost no small figure. As yet the "way-up" artists do not sign the work they do for advertisers, but I apprehend that it shall not be long ere we shall see in the advertising columns such names as George Wharton Edwards, E. W. Kemble, etc. Such men as these bring to their work, besides mere mechanical skill, a trained imagination and an artistic conception of things. These qualities, when used in connection with advertisements, command scarcely less interest than when used in the ordinary literary way.—[Printers' Ink, Aug. 19, 1891.

Ravages of Time.

Stephen Day was very fond of making high-sounding speeches, sometimes with laughable results.

While calling one day upon a neighbor, he was shown a scratched and battered stone pestle which had lately been found in the garden. As it was passed from one to another, some facetious remarks were made in regard to its defaced appearance.

One person ventured to suggest that probably the dogs had chewed it. "Uncle" Stephen looked stern; such language applied to this venerable relic seemed to him almost an offense.

Patting the pestle reverently with his big right hand, he said, solemnly:

"Sir, those are the ravages of the tooth of time."

PASTOR KOENIG'S TRADE MARK NERVE TONIC

The Best Remedy III in this world,, says J. Hoffherr, of Syracuse, N. Y., is Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic, because my son, who was partially paralyzed three years ago and attacked by fits, has not had any symptoms of them since he took one bottle of the remedy. I most heartily thank for it.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Oct. 17, 1890.

Some time ago a sunstroke so affected my nerves that at times they were beyond control; eyes were dull and without expression, and a twitching of the muscles of the face and almost continual movement of the hands and arms, especially the left side. There was impediment of speech, and at times would be so overcome with dizziness as to be unable to stand. Heard of Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic; tried one bottle, and noticed a great change; tried another, and now can say that I am enjoying perfect health, steady nerves and a good appetite, which I had lost entirely before using your medicine.

Sudden Deaths.

Heart disease is by far the most frequent cause of sudden death, which in three out of four cases is unsuspected. The symptoms are not generally understood. These are: a habit of lying on the right side, short breath, pain or distress in side, back or shoulder, irregular pulse, asthma, weak and hungry spells, wind in stomach, swelling of ankles or dropsy, oppression, dry cough and smothering. Dr. Miles' illustrated book on heart disease, free at F. E. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Miss Ollie Lehman went last Saturday to Fort Wayne on account of the dangerous illness of her sister, Mrs. Dr. Martz. Harry Lehman, who has been in Fort Wayne for many months has returned and will remain at home if he can find employment here or hereabouts.

An immense amount of fruit is being put up this season. The demand for cans has been beyond the supply and every kind of bottle, jar or jug has been utilized. Saturday, Sinclair Bros. received an immense stock, but early Monday morning all were sold. Fort Wayne also is short of cans.

Saturday evening the DePauw quartet gave a concert at the M. E. church at this place for the benefit of the Epworth League. The house was comfortably filled by an attentive and appreciative audience. Some of the pieces sung and the music, also, were of a high order, and some were as funny as could be; people laughed till they were tired. The members of the quartet seemed able to do anything they chose with their voices, and one with himself as well.

The card in the Press last week, in which the ministers of this place expressed, at the departure of Rev. Mr. Loudy, their love for him, the satisfaction and comfort enjoyed as co-laborers together, and praying God for his richest blessings to rest upon him, shows the right feeling; and the writer prays it may continue and grow. When the pastors of the churches put away sectarianism and bigotry, work and pray together, their labors MUST be blessed in the bringing forth of much fruit.

BUTLER.

A number of our people talk of attending the Angola fair this week.

A large number of the P. I's. attended their picnic at Auburn last Saturday.

Rev. Mr. Tedrow, of the U. B church preached his first sermon at this place last Sunday.

The experiment made by the town to test the water works matter proved very satisfactory as water bed of some twenty feet of coarse gravel have been found, so the supply will be practically inexhaustible.

The item last week refering to the commission of murder by John Leonard at some point in Michigan proved an error in every particular, and the story told upon our streets about the same started from an article in a Chicago paper, that gave the facts about a shooting by one John Leonard, at or near Lincoln, Ill. For the sake of his parents here, who are above reproach, we are glad to say that a letter to them from the sheriff at Lincoln, Ill., describes the man in custody there as an entirely different man, who is a resident of that county and has been for fifteen years. The letter refered to is in the Record office at this place.

CONCORD.

Willie Scott was able to call on his best girl Sunday.

Bill Baker has been getting out ties for the B. & O., which are being put in.

A large delegation of Alliance people from the lodge at Kinderhook attended the picnic at Auburn Saturday, and most of them pronounced it a glowing success. The St. Joe band and the boys' martial band from this place accompanied them.

Uncle John Wastler left here Monday and took the train at St. Joe Tuesday morning for Stark county, Ohio, expecting to make an extended visit in that and other counties. Stark county is where he was born and brought up, and where many of his relatives reside. He no doubt will receive a hearty welcome.

Some of our citizens object to letting the band boys practice their martial music so near their homes and disturbe their sleep, especially where there are sick folks, and indeed it is too bad to be kept awake half the night by their drumming. There are plenty of places where they could practice without disturbing any one.

Mr. and Mrs. John Timmerman have gone to housekeeping, and when John moved his things from Wyatt's where he has been boarding, he carried off Jim Wyatt's pocket book. Jim had hid it in one of John's mackinaw socks, and as John did not know of this carried off his sock, pocket and all. Jim was away from home at the time, but when he returned and found his money gone, he lost no time in hunting it up.

JACOB CUPP.

Mr. Jacob Cupp was born on a farm in Summerset county, Pennsylvania, Jan. 19, 1808 and livedwith his parents until his seventeenth year when he migrated to Ohio and labored at farm work in Stark county until 4842.

In 1835, he married Miss Elizabeth Hoover, by whom he had three children, namely: Mathias, Ethalinda and Hiram, all of whom are living.

Desirous of locating a home for himself, he came in October, 1842 with his family to DeKalb county and entered eighty acres of land in Union township, where he lived till 1863, when he sold and bought a farm of larger size in Concord township where he lived till 1867. His children having grown up and left home, he again sold out and bought a small farm in what is now Keyser township, where in comfort and reasonable health he passed the remaining years of his life.

Mr. Cupp lost his wife in 1843 and in 1860, married Mrs. Barbara Smith, by whom he had one child. These both survive and mourn his departure.

Age began to tell on him and his health declined about a year ago, and he died Sept. 19, 1891, aged 83 years and 8 months.

Mr. Cupp was a christian and from his early years had been a consistent church member, formerly of the M. E. church and for the last sixteen years of the Dunkard church. He died as he had lived in unquestioning faith of another life and the change was as when one's work has been done and he was weary and laid down to rest, satisfied with life and ready to go.

He was a hard working man and was a veteran pioneer in the heavy labor required in clearing up land. He was widely known in the county for his cheerful readiness to assist others. In the single month of April 1858, he gave 21 days to aiding his neighbors in getting up their buildings. He was in some degree an authority on farm work and his opinions were valued by those less experienced. In his death, the community has lost a good neighbor, the church, an exemplary member and society a venerable pioneer. In humbler life, familiar with field and the love of home, he has left a memory to revere, an example to imitate. The funeral was at the residence, where he had lived so long, two miles west of Auburn, on Monday, Sept. 21, at 2 p. m., Elder James Barton officiating, and he was laid to rest in the Evergreen cemetery at Auburn.

A BIG MEETING.

We mean the Alliance and P. I. gathering of Saturday. Had not the ever-present COURIER reporter got hold of it and published a notice, our people would have been surprised to see the long processions with flags, banners and bands, come marching through town and out to the fair ground, where the meeting was to be held. There were a number of separate delegations that went through town from the north, but the monster of all, was made up of delegations from the south and west, and the marshals got them together on West Main street, and from there they went through east, making a grand parade of 167 teams, some of them containing great loads of people or children, some with bands, and many gaily decorated. The banners were lovely, the music good, and the procession was marked by the best of order and quiet dignity. The only unpleasant feature was the half dozen wild boys, some from town and some from the country, who stood near the Kiblinger corner and shouted "right this way for the fair ground." It may have been thoughtless on their part, but it was a peice of ill-manners which marshal Pfefferl stopped as soon as his attention was called to it. Great delegations also came from the east without coming through town. Out on the grounds, a Mr. Moore, of Michigan, made a good speech, and then came several thousand bounteous dinners under the shade of the trees. Then came another speech by Jesse Harper, of Illinois, once a law partner of Lincoln. His speech was very good, but could not be heard by many, as he spoke in a low tone part of the time, and a majority of the crowd spoke in a high tone—same as other out-door crowds. People from all over the county were there. The weather was warm, but there was plenty of shade, good wells, and everything was a success.

The Other Side.*

We have refrained from saying much in regard to the recent contest as to paying the deputies of the county surveyor. There is a well grounded doubt as to the intention of the law. Certain work is put on the surveyor to do. It is more than one man can do. The law speaks of his getting deputies to do a part of the work, but does not say who shall pay them. Certainly the surveyor cannot do this out of his own salary of $3 a day. At the trial last week, as we noted at the time, the commissioners decided to pay the deputies, for they had done the work in good faith. The surveyor had always had deputies to assist him, and the county had paid them, and no one had objected. Under these circumstances it was natural that the surveyor should hire deputies, and the deputies do the work, and look to the county for pay as they had always done. But this suit caused all work to stop. The deputies had not been paid, and could not work without pay. The surveyor could not do the work demanded of him alone. Work on the ditches stopped, land owners suffered in their crops and in the delay in completing these improvements. They became impatient. Not a day passed but one or more interested parties came in to see why work was not attended to. They were disappointed and went home complaining. Under such circumstances, the commissioners have thought adviseable to allow the bills for the payment of the deputies to help the surveyor out with needed work, that public and private interests are demanding, and which he cannot possibly do alone. This is the substance of the matter in brief, and we believe the people of the county, and the farmers in particular will agree that the commissioners have done their duty. They have besides this, done, what no board of commissioners ever did before; they have taken control of the matter of hiring deputies and of the price to be paid. This should have been done years ago, but it was all left to the surveyor. Many of the bills made for ditch work, were for years paid by bills drawn by the auditor and not submitted to the commissioners. This was not the proper way, and it will not be done so hereafter, for the auditor does not believe it right. He will insist that all such bills be fully submitted to the commissioners, and they will be so submitted. So, at least two reforms, never before put in practice have grown out of this contest. We do not believe as the Dispatch appears to, that these officers are dishonest or incompetent. They are neither. But the board and the surveyor find themselves confronted by a difficult question. The people demand that ditch work be done; the good of the county at large demands it. Every day that the work stops is a damage and a financial loss. Ditches partly dug or partly cleaned out, and the expense so far incurred is lost, crops suffer, reclaimed lands again go to waste, and the evil of a swampy country again start in on us. The county has almost 600 ditches great and small, some in good shape, some not. The people or at least a majority of them, were the cause of having these ditches made, and are willing to pay for them. They want the system kept up and in good condition. The commissioners believe they should take that course to do the greatest good to the greatest number of the people over whom they are by law directed to exercise the governing power. So they they expect to permit the surveyor to go on with the work, secure a few deputies, just enough to do the pressing work, and not a man more. This is, we believe the whole matter in a nutshell, and we submit it to the people all over the county, for there is not a school district in the county that does not read the COURIER. We have not tried to prejudice our readers in any direction, but to state what we believe to be the facts. We had lately a conversation with one of the best posted and most intelligent farmers of the county, one who can remember the old quinine and ague seasons, and one who now knows the financial as well as the sanitary benefit a of our extensive and therefore expensive system of drainage, and he insists that the conditions we state above are correct. The farmers, he says, in general, desire the work to go on and are willing to shoulder the expense.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1854.

It is an old and familiar saying that the poor we always have with us, but in 1854 the proverb was strictly true, for paupers were kept by parties in the townships and recompensed under certificate of the trustees.

At the March session of the commissioners various allowances were made for boarding poor persons and thus far, the expense of their keeping had been light and no steps had been taken to buy ground and build an asylum.

Life at a county asylum among the idiotic, foolish, senile and helpless is unpleasant and pessimistic at the best, but humanitarians have done what they could to better the condition of society's unfortunates, and in comparison with other counties, the poor farm of DeKalb county superintended by C. P. Glazier, ranks among the better class, although restricted for room, and far from secure against fire.

According to the records, it seems that public arms to which the county was entitled, had been procured at a cost in freight of about fourteen dollars, and later Isaac Brandt had been appointed agent for their care and safe keeping. It would be of interest to know what became of those arms, whether brought into use for drill of militia or serving a more practical use, as arms of the home-guard during the civil war.

At this time the flint lock had given way to the muzzle loader and percussion cap, just as these have been superseded by the metallic cartridge breech-loader of to-day.

The board of equalization at the June session was composed, besides the county commissioners, of the assessors of the townships and this large number contained the familiar names of George Ensley, John G. Dancer, John N. Miller, Charles R. Wanamaker, Wm. Mathews, Daniel Altenburg, W. N. Whetzel, Henry Ernest, Hiram Freeman, Andrew Baxter and A. Stearns.

The report of the county auditor, now a brief comprehensive paper, was grown voluminous in detail and was classified under seven heads.

Receipts exceeded $20,000 and expenditures were in excess of this some $1300. Comparison of prices paid for similar services to-day do not indicate extravigance, and the cost of taking an insane person to the lunatic asylum was but $7.50, where of later years it was upwards of $40.

Meanwhile Auburn was keeping the even tenor of her humble way. S. B. Ward had become principal owner of a steam sawmill built by a stock company some time previously. This mill stood on ground eastward of the present woolen mill in the northern part of town. Woodbury and Watkins built this mill and on Sept 9, 1853 sold ⅗ interest to W. and H. C. Griswold for $1000. Later A. O. Parsons and J. W. Case were interested parties and Ward purchased a part of their interest. In 1856, the mill burned and John McKay, now of South Dakota, has reason to remember the fact since he was then an employe of Mr. Ward, slept at the mill and came perilously near being burned with it.

As indicative of log values of black walnut, poplar and white oak at that time, it may be said that Mr. Ward offered to pay for a log 12 feet 4 inches long and 2 feet through at the top end, this being his standard, $1.30 for black walnut, $1.25 for poplar and $1. for oak. Walnut commanded cash, the others half cash, half goods.

On inquiry, the price for such a log of walnut to day would be $15, and for poplar and white oak, each $6.

Although no fair was held in DeKalb county this year nor previously, an agricultural society had been formed by leading and enterprising men and the annual meeting was held on Jan. 2, 1855 at the court house at the request of J. P. Widney, secretary. It is probable that at this meeting arrangements were perfected looking to holding a fair.

The jeweler of Auburn in the spring of 1854 was Robert Reyer, who had a supply of clocks, watches, jewelry and notions for sale, and in this connection, repairing on the same line, but none to-day probably recollect his sojourn in our town.

Wesley Park for nearly twenty years had been the accredited land agent of DeKalb county and to this now extensive and lucrative business, which included town as well as farm property, he had added the paying of taxes to some extent, probably for non-resident speculative holders.

It is presumed that at his busiest times, he never dreamed of the coming in after years of a firm like that of Messrs Rickel & Sprott with their hundreds of bargains in real estate offered to wise and safe investors for profit and for homes.

The lawyers of Auburn in 1854, were John Morris, rich in years of experience, well and favorably known and to be found in his office on the south side of the public square. T. B. Dickinson, who residing on the corner of Main and Eleventh streets had the postoffice and combined practice of law with the handling of the small amounts of mail matter which three times a week arrived from Coldwater, Michigan, Defiance, Ohio and Perry and Flint Indiana, the three routes existing.

Mr. Dickinson found it necessary to instruct the patrons of his office that "positively letters for the north and Flint mails must be in the office the night before departure and the Defiance and south mails one half hour before departure to insure their departure by that mail."

The postoffice has grown with Auburn and G. W. Gordon, now postmaster has the salary of $1,700 a year and he earns it in caring for the heavy business which centers in this place.

By way of constrast and information, Mr. Gordon presents at our solicitation the following statistics of his office: Call boxes 608; lock boxes and drawers, 213; general delivery and miscellaneous boxes, 288; total, 1109.

No. of mails dispatched and received daily are 10, and one Star route is received and dispatched twice per week.

The average number of pieces of mail dispatched and received per week with weight of same follows: No. pieces dispatched all classes, 6775, weight 725 lbs. No. of pieces received and delivered per week 7850, weight 650 lbs. Total pieces handled per week 14625; weight 1375 lbs. The average income of the office per quarter is $1257.50. G. W. Gordon, P. M.

E. B. Mott and J. B. Brinkerhoff were attorneys and counsellors at law and had their offices, the former with J. E. Hendricks, county treasurer, the later with M. Waterman, still county auditor.

Among the physicians and surgeons of the time were J. Shirler, T. B. Kimsey and J. N. Chamberlain.

Dr. Kimsey had his office with Wesley Park and Dr. Chamberlain in S. W. Ralston's store. The last named for many years and at present a citizen of Waterloo has grown old in the practice of his profession. He deserves and commands the confidence of the sick or disabled and the respect of the people of this part of our state.

The traveling community found a home like entertainment with S. D. Long at the Auburn house then, recently refitted and enlarged, and J. Patrick & Son had leased the Baldock house for a term of years and were accommodating permanent as well as transient boarders with such conveniences as made their sojourn pleasant.

The Baldock House is the building now known as the Auburn House, kept by John R. Moody on the southeast corner of Main and Fifth streets.

The Auburn House to which we refer stood on the northeast corner of Main and Sixth streets, where stands the brick residence and office of Drs. Swartz. The building was moved to the northwest corner of Sixth and Cedar streets, where it now stands and is occupied as a private residence.

Remembered The Pastor.

Last Thursday evening about 8 o'clock as the pastor and wife of the Lutheran church were enjoying a visit with brothers Walborn and Bower's folks, we were interrupted by a soft rap at the door. Immediate attention was given to the rap, and on opening the door we beheld to our surprise the smiling faces of a host of young friends of the Lutheran congregation. The happy young friends were invited into the house and to our greater surprise they brought with them a handsome donation, which made glad the hearts of the pastor and wife. From all appearance all were enjoying themselves. The things brought were just what we needed most. What made our hearts most glad was the interest manifested by the young people in behalf of their pastor, in so short an acquaintance with them. The young friends have our sincerest thanks, both for the visit and useful donation. There are many pleasant and unpleasant things in the ministerial life, but this is one of the pleasant things because this always gladdens the hearts of pastor and wife. Again we extend our hearty thanks to the young friends, and may God bless and keep them. We invite you all to come again and stay longer.

The Ferris Inquest.

The Coroner's verdict in the case of Ferris, who was killed on the railroad track at Waterloo, a short time ago, is as follows:

The Coroner's Court of DeKalb county convened at the office of John F. Shuman, at Waterloo, Sept 12, 1891, and continued in session from day to day until all material witnesses were heard.

State of Indiana }
DeKalb, County } Verdict.

I, LaFayette D. Miser, Coroner, after having heard the evidence of witnesses in the inquest held over the dead body of David Ferris deceased, do find as follows; First, that said David Ferris died on the morning of Sept. 13, as a direct result of being run against by a west bound freight train, 1st Sec. No. 49, on the L. S. & M. S. Ry., on the night of Sept. 12, 1891, at the Wayne street crossing in the town of Waterloo, DeKalb county, Ind. I further find, that said point where the said railroad crosses Wayne street and where said David Ferris was struck or run against, is a dangerous crossing—a death trap left open by said railroad company with no guard whatever to protect human lives or prevent accidents, to person and property. That the railroad employes in charge of said train were running it at a high and dangerous rate of speed, and failed to give proper signals for said crossing, that because of their reckless manner of running said train, and their failure to to give signals for said crossing, said David Ferris came to his death. That the engineer, Fred. Schuler, in charge of said train or engine was guilty of gross if not criminal negligence in failing to give proper alarms, and for willfully running his said engine at a high and dangerous rate of speed in total disregard of human life also for refusing to stop his said engine, after having discovered the fact of the accident and that he was dragging a badly wounded man on the pilot of his engine, which he wilfully did for a distance of 15 or 16 miles.

Unprofessional.

A certain member of the bar was once asked to insert his card in the "professional" column of a leading newspaper, whereupon the man of legal lore replied: "I don't believe a notice of that kind will do a bit of good. It is unprofessional and incurs a great deal of expense. It is all right for a business man to advertise his trade, but for lawyers and doctors it is unprofessional." Now this legal friend puts us a good deal in mind of the old, fashioned farmer, who persisted in planting his corn with a hoe, when he could have planted four times as much in the same length of time with a "planter." But you see the planter would have cost him seventy-five cents and he could not see that the time he was spending with the old hoe would more than pay for the machine in a single week's work. His ideas of progression are too ancient. If it is proper, profitable and professional for the merchant, grocer, and other business men to employ printer's ink in bringing their business to the public notice, it is no less proper or professional for an attorney, or for a member of any other profession to do the same. Many a man's success in a professional as well as in a business career, dates back to the time when he threw off the mantle of prejudice and made a liberal use of printer's ink.

Tacoma Letter.

We publish the following interesting letter from Mr. Penfield, which was written, as will be seen, to L. J. Miller, of this place, and we think it too good to keep from our readers:

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 18, 1891.

Brother Miller:—

I told you I would write, and after my arrival here, I will take the the opportunity to make my promise good.

This town has undergone a great apparent change during the last year. Then all was life and hustle—now all is apparently quiet and reminds one of Kansas City, after the collapse of the boom. They say that business is on a sounder basis, but there have been a good many failures all over the Pugent Sound region and if times are not hard here, then I am mistaken in my present observations. There is certainly a great contrast between the condition of things here and in Indiana. When everybody is prospering everything is cheap that a man wants to buy. Here fresh eggs are are 35 cents per dozen, live chickens from 50 to 75 cents, butter all the way from 25 to 40 cents per pound. A man must make a good deal of money here to have anything to show or a balance at the end of the year.

Unless I find things on further investigation much different from what they appear to my observation now, a few days will find me at work again in my office at Auburn.

I am glad I came here on the ground and saw for myself,—without taking anybody's word for things here, for I find things very different from what I had been led to suppose. I judge that this town is ten years ahead of its normal growth, at least. I saw a carpenter to-day who has been here three years and he says that during the last year he has had but one month's work. I am very thankful for the advice you gave me the last talk we had and I am very glad that I did not pack a book or a box of goods.

I shall take further time to investigate the condition of affairs generally, but I know that a lawyer can not prosper in his business where other business is suffering generally; and when you consider the cost of living, everything is cheaper in Indiana, except rain. The rain poured to-day in torrents. Still I do not find it disagreeable; but I do find it disagreeable to pay 2 or 3 times as much for a pear or peach as we pay at Auburn. Potatoes here are 60 cents a bushel. Stove wood costs about $2 to $2.50 per cord—soft, green wood at that.

You see that I am not at all infatuated by the condition of things as they appear here now, and I am glad that I came, because it may satisfy me that I could not do better here than I am doing there.

But I must close. Yours truly,
W. L. Penfield.

Auburn's Literary and Musical Institute.

We don't know as this is the name adopted by the founders and managers of this school or not, but it would be very appropriate. We allude to the school for teaching music, voice culture, elocution, etc., established recently by Mabel Hartman and Flora Hoffman. As we have before noted, they have fitted up the second story of the building in which the Cowan Sisters are located, have finished and decorated it nicely, put in a piano, blackboard, Indian clubs, dumb bells, and such other articles as would be used in such a school, and have here established themselves and been some time at work. Last Wednesday evening a few friends of their pupils were invited to see the class work or at least a part of such work as they are doing. There is a class in voice culture, and elocution, Metta Prosser, Inez and May Rose, and a part of that work that evening, was reading extracts from Shakespeare, especially the literary gems that so abound in "Julius Cæsar." Their work was nicely done and showed study and drill. The music class is made up we believe of Lydia Teeters, Anna Ramsey, Lena Zimmerman, Helen Ralston, Mrs. Dr. Bachtel and possibly others. They also gave specimens of their skill, in a variety of pieces of piano exercises, all of which was satisfactory to their audience, and must have been gratifying to their teacher. The most numerous class is made up of younger pupils, whose work is largely of an elocutionary nature, or rather it is preparatory to a course of this kind. The members are: Dottie Gibson, Dollie Husselman, Pearl Kelley, Mettie Cullers, Clara Somers, Rowena Tefft and Ollie Elson. These meet Saturday afternoons, and after school hours, for lessons and drill. Among the work they gave that evening was a display of their advancement in the Delsarte excercises which was all very gracefully done. Several of them also read or recited. Pearl Kelley recited a piece as did Rowena Tefft, and Metta Prosser of the other division, read a selection, all doing themselves and their teacher credit. They show in fact, a talent for this kind of work. There was much else, that we cannot now recall, but we feel sure a good work is being done at this modest but hardworking institute and we hope these two young ladies may be encouraged, and their institute or training school, receive abundant support from our citizens.

GUATAMALA RIOTS.

Over Five Hundred People Killed in Three Days—Barillas Declares Himself Dictator.

City of Mexico special: A revolution has been precipitated in the Republic of Guatamala. A gentleman who left the city of Guatamala on the morning of the 14th inst., and who reached this city on horseback from the Mexican port of Acapulco, brings information that an outbreak occurred in Guatamala City on the 13th inst., and was still in progress when he left. It appears that the people were celebrating the anniversary of their national holiday and President Barillas had personally appointed the orators of the day. To this the masses took exception, and when the orators took the rostrum it was a storm of stones which set them to flight, they being chased across the big plaza by a howling mob, shouting: "Down with the Government!" "Down with despotism and tyranny!" "Die Barillas!" An exciting scene followed, and every known Liberal or Barillas partisan was driven from the plaza, being soundly stoned at every step. The news of the riot spread rapidly, and soon Barillas threw a battalion of infantry into the large square for the purpose of dispersing the mob. They, with fixed bayonets, attempted to carry the plaza by assault. They were met with a shower of stones and bullets from revolvers. This unexpected action of the mob put them to ignominious flight, leaving many dead and wounded in the plaza. The uproar was something to be long remembered. Members of the mob shouted: "Let's storm the National Palace, kill Barillas, and restore a Republican form of government. Guatamala should not be ruled by a dictator," and "plundering of the National Treasury must cease." Barillas then ordered artillery into the plaza and infantry and two cannon to guard his residence. When the guns were turned on the mob there was a general dispersing of them, though they discharged their revolvers at the artillerymen. They left the plaza, but fought in the side streets; in fact they practically, during the night of the 13th, held full control of the city. The reports of revolution troubles were to be heard all night, and at the hour the gentleman giving this information left for San Jose d' Guatamala to embark for Acapulco, fighting was still in progress. It is his conception that this will cause a general revolution throughout the entire Republic of Guatamala and engender war in all other Central American States. A strict censorship is maintained over all press dispatches, and the mails are also trifled with to prevent the leaking out of any information. Barillas has declared himself Dictator.

A Lake Disappears.

Seventeen miles southeast of Waverly, Ill., lies a small stream called Panther Creek. On its banks are several large caves. During the recent earthquake crash after crash was heard from the larger cave, and on being investigated it was found that numbers of large fisures in the rocks had appeared. Masses of stone fell from the ceiling and a subterranean lake, covering almost half an acre, has entirely disappeared. In the bottom of the former lake are a large number of fisures. A strong smell of burning sulphur pervades the cave. It is being visited by throngs of people.

After Indiana Money.

Gov. Hovey, of Indiana, has gone to Washington, D. C., in the interest of the claims of the State of Indiana against the general Government in relation to the direct tax refunder. "I am going to try to get the money which is rightfully due the State," the Governor said. "I hope for success, for the money belongs to us and ought to have been paid before. I presume Secretary Foster wants to make as big a showing for the United States Treasury as possible, but we ought not to be kept out of our money for that reason."

Persecutions of the Press.

Advices from the City of Mexico say that persecutions against the press have commenced again, and that several journalists have been thrown in the dungeons of Belena, and that more, probably, will follow. The assertion of Mr. Rabasa to several papers in the United States that the State of Chiapas is in a revolutionary condition, and that there is a bad fix generally, are wholly untrue.

Two Men Killed by a Cave-in.

While at work in a sewer at Newark, Ohio, Wilson McCleary and Tim Murphy were killed by a cave-in. Two men who were working alongside of them were badly injured but not fatally.

After a Scoundrel.

Four hundred men, armed with rifles and shotguns, are pursuing Frank and James Jarvis, highway robbers, and an unknown fiend who assaulted a 13-year-old girl at Augusta, Ill.

The 5-year-old child of Dayton Lewis, who lives near Exin, Ind., while playing around the stove, caught its clothes on fire and was so severely burned that death soon followed.

Police Station Blown Up by Dynamite.

The Jeffersonville (Ind.) police station was blown up by dynamite. The doors and windows were blown to pieces and the stone walls cracked. It is thought to have been the result of a plot to kill certain of the police who have been prosecuting with great vigor of late the criminals. The explosion occurred at the time when the night officers lunch at the station. There was no one in the building at the time, three officers having left five minutes previous. No clue has been found to the perpetrators.

Drink Drives a Southern Lawyer to Blackwell's Island and Death.

New York special: James E. Goddin, 62 years old, at one time a wealthy lawyer of Richmond, Va., died in poverty in the work-house on Blackwell's Island. Goddin has been an inmate of city institutions for some time, but was released last week. He immediately proceeded to get drunk, and while in that condition fell on the sidewalk in Chambers street. He was taken to the station house and the next morning was resentenced to the island for ten days. There he became ill and was removed to the hospital, where it was found he had fractured his skull. He is said to have a son at Winston, N. C., who is employed in Dun's Commercial Agency.

NONE SPARED.

A Whole Family Ground Beneath the Wheels of an Express Train.

One of the most appalling accidents that ever occurred in Wayne County, Ind., took place at Harvey's Station, a little hamlet on the P., C., C. & St. L. Railroad, twelve miles west of Richmond, and resulted in the loss of three lives and the fatal injury of another. Joseph Black, one of the most influential and best-known farmers of the county, with his wife and two daughters, aged 15 and 17 years, were driving in a surrey to Cambridge City, four miles distant, to attend the races. Train No. 21, the fast New York and St. Louis express, left Richmond nearly a half hour behind time, and was running at terrific speed. At the station above named the railroad crosses the pike, and at that point the carriage containing the Black family drove upon the track, directly in front of the swiftly approaching train. The engine struck the vehicle squarely, completely demolishing it, killing both horses and cutting one in twain. Three of the occupants were instantly killed—father, mother and oldest daughter. Mr. Black was caught by the cow-catcher of the engine and carried nearly one hundred yards before the train could come to a stop, and his body was mutilated beyond recognition. The bodies of both Mrs. Black and oldest daughter, Florence, were found horribly mangled some fifty feet from the track, while the young daughter, Sadie, lay beside the track with an arm cut off and otherwise injured, but not dead. Her injuries are fatal, and she cannot possibly live. The bodies of the dead were taken to Cambridge City.

CHINA GETTING READY.

The Flowery Kingdom Anticipating Measures of Retaliation by the Combined Powers.

London special: Advices from Shanghai to the London and China Telegraph, of this city, state that the highest officials at Pekin and at Nankin expect the European Governments to combine in a demand for redress for the outrages perpetrated upon foreigners in China. The same paper adds that the secret society men are also expecting such action upon the part of the powers, and that they are preparing to act when the right moment arrives. The paper says it is certain that a very prominent person has been asked to supply war material and drill instructors for use in the lower Yang-Tse-Kiang districts. Many young men of the best Chinese families are connected with these secret societies. A prominent foreign resident of Shanghai, the same paper states, has been asked to send estimates to Nankin for organizing a brigade of troops to be disciplined and armed according to the English system and to be commanded by foreign officers. The same resident, it is also said, has been asked to state the terms upon which he can supply three fast steam cruisers fully equipped for war and to be delivered in three months' time.

A RASH DRIVER

Rushes a Coupe Into the Chicago River.

Chicago special: A few minutes before 9 o'clock the other night the bridge tender at Washington street bridge rang his warning bell and turned the bridge to allow a vessel to pass. As the bridge turned a coupe driven by Rufus Terry and containing Miss Carrie Green and Isaac Shelton came rattling over the viaduct. The driver did not observe that the bridge was open and eye-witnesses say that he was lashing his horses to a run. A number of persons standing near shouted to the driver to stop, but he did not heed. Shelton and his companion saw that the bridge was open, but before they could escape from the carriage the horse had plunged over the abutment dragging the carriage after him into the river. Terry, the driver, and Miss Green were drowned. Shelton was pulled out of the water by the crew of the tug Chicago, and taken to his home and with the exception of a few bruises he was uninjured. Both Shelton and Miss Green are mulattoes. A few minutes after the accident occurred Terry came to the surface. He was alive when taken out but died a few minutes later. Miss Green's body was recovered an hour after the accident happened.

DETROIT SHAKEN

By the Explosion of Ten Drums of Carbonic Acid.

Detroit special: A terrific explosion shook the earth at the foot of Griswold street, where the Star Line dock is located. The explosion was caused by leaving ten drums filed with carbonic acid in an exposed position on the wharf awaiting shipment by steamer to Toledo. Several of the drums must have gone off together, for the whole southern wall of the warehouse was erected, about 3,000 pounds of tobacco in bales torn to ribbons, the tin sheathing of the warehouse ripped off and scattered in all directions, and all the windows in the neighborhood shattered. One of the unexploded drums was hurled through the brick wall of the adjoining building on the east side. Charles W. McCorkle, who was standing about twenty feet from the drum at the time of the explosion, received a serious fracture of the skull, which may prove fatal.

Burned to Death.

George W. Johnson and his son, who lived near Beaver Creek, N. D., were burned to death by the great Emmons County prairie fires. They had gone ahead to put the fire out, when the huge flames leaping high as the house tops, swept over them, leaving their burned and disfigured corpses. Mr. Taber, an elderly gentleman living near Williamsport, is seriously burned and will probably die. No further news can be learned from the Holland settlement, thirty-five miles south of Williamsport. Three men are known to have perished in that vicinity. The total damage done in the Holland settlement can not be learned, but it is said it will not be far from $50,000.

Warring Irish Factions.

The confederated Irish societies of Chicago have issued an address warning the Irish promoters of the coming convention of the Irish National League. The objects of the promoters, the address says, are as dishonest as their methods. The gathering represents nothing but the desperate needs of a gang of unscrupulous, political tricksters, its chief aim being to force Alexander Sullivan back into prominence and to place his confederate, Michael Davitt, at the head of the movement in Ireland as a recompense for his "coming to the rescue of the murderers of Dr. Cronin by a base and cowardly attack on the character of the murdered man."

Gov. Hovey Going to Mexico.

Indianapolis special: Gov. Hovey and United States Minister Ryan, this country's representative at the City of Mexico, are old-time friends, and this friendship has led to an invitation from Minister Ryan to Gov. Hovey to visit the City of Mexico with a party of friends. In pursuance of this the Governor has mapped out a plan of campaign that promises much pleasure. He has invited Senator D. W. Voorhees, Gen. Lew Wallace, Gen. Thomas H. Nelson and the members of his (the Governor's) staff to accompany him, and the party will leave Indianapolis aboard a private Pullman car, November 1.

Two Men Perish in a Prairie Fire.

Hinckley, (Minn.) special: Dan Sullivan and Tom Johnson, of Eau Claire, were burned to death in the forest fire. A party of six men started from one of the Brennan Lumber Company camps to go to another about two miles away. Dan Sullivan, his brother Mora, and Tom Johnson, of Eua Claire, were of this party. After going a short ways they got in front of the fire and Dan Sullivan, missing his brother, went back with Johnson to look for him. That was the last seen of them till their remains were found by John Brodie. Sullivan was burned to a crisp, but Johnson's body was only badly scorched.

Chinese Contrabands.

Grand Forks (N. D.) special: Papers found on three Chinamen arrested here by W. S. Day, of the Treasury Department, prove they were smuggled from the Dominion. They left Winnipeg the other night, making the entire journey by cart. Papers of permission to leave were found secreted in their clothing. Detective Day has been in this vicinity since last July and charges Lee Kee, a laundryman here, with being extensively engaged in the contraband business. As he expected another load of Celestials to leave Winnipeg soon every Chinaman in town was arrested to prevent possible communication.

Eating Infants.

London special: The horrible story of cannibalism among the Russian peasantry is more than confirmed, for in some of the afflicted provinces, it is said the starving families, giving up all hope of rescue, are prolonging life by devouring their helpless infants. The local authorities find themselves unable to cope with the terrible calamity, which, in its horrors, reminds one of the description in Josephus of the sufferings of the Jews during the siege of Jerusalem. In several of the provinces the peasantry had started to emigrate, and, overtaken by weakness, many have perished miserably by the roadside.

May Compromise.

Salem (Mass.) special: It is rumored that the hearings in the Searles will case may not be resumed and that negotiations for a settlement will be reopened before Oct. 14. The contestants have learned through papers brought out in the hearings that even if they should win eventually, the legal intrenchments of the other side are so many that the litigation would be very long, extending possibly over a generation and eating seriously into the estate. After breaking the will there would be many other suits to fight and this makes it probable that a settlement will be sought.

Homeless and Penniless.

J. A. Westley, Government Surveyor, has just arrived at St. Paul, from the Upper Mississippi by way of the Duluth road, and reports terrible devastation along the line. He says hundreds of cattle are burned and many homesteads destroyed. The train on which he came down stopped at one place and took on fourteen men, women and children, settlers, who barely escaped with their lives. Unless heavy rains fall at once all the little villages and the homesteads south of Duluth for forty miles will certainly be burned. There is no doubt, he says, that many human lives are lost, and expensive logging outfits burned.

Killed a Fellow Convict.

A case of homicide is the latest sensation in the Massachusetts State prison. Two convicts, John Phipps and James E. Shepard, got into a quarrel over the manner in which the former was doing his work. A fight ensued in which Shepard was knocked down and had his skull fractured by striking the pavement. He died in a few hours. Shepard is said to have been the aggressor.

Poisoned by an Enemy.

Near Scottville, Ky., the family of County Assessor J. G. Pulliam was poisoned at dinner. Pulliam, his wife and Dr. L. Q. Sanders, his father-in-law, were all affected. Pulliam had a hard time to recover. Mrs. Pulliam will probably die. It is thought that the milk used at the table was poisoned by some enemy.

Three Boatmen Drowned.

Three men were drowned just off Madelaine Island in Chequamegu Bay, Ashland, Wis. The small boat, in which there were four occupants, capsized, and only one escaped, John Peterson. He swam nearly a quarter of a mile to shore. Andrew Anderson, Martin Nelson and a Norweigian were the drowned.

Captured and Confessed.

A special from Durango, Col., says that Ralph Ray, suspected of murdering his mother at Durango a few days since, has been captured and that he has confessed his guilt.

Maj. Tillman Indicted.

Maj. William Tillman, the defaulting cashier of the defunct Falls City Bank, Louisville, was indicted for stealing $27,000 from the bank.

A $100,000 Wreck.

A collision at Waterford, Pa., on the Fort Wayne road, destroyed railroad property aggregating $100,000. None of the crews were injured.

FREE WOOL IN ENGLAND

HOW FREE WOOL HAS MADE ENGLAND GREAT.

England's Wool Duty Removed in 1828—Increased Production and Higher Prices for the Farmer—Free Wool Has Given England the World's Wool Clip—Who Pays the Rail Tax.

Made England Great.

We are told that a removal of the duty on wool would result in destroying our sheep-growing industry, but the experience of England with the wool tax does not bear out this claim. In 1800 England had a wool duty of 12 cents a pound, and in that year produced 92,544,000 pounds of wool. This tariff was continued till 1828, when the product amounted to 111,623,729 pounds, a gain of only 19,079,727 pounds in twenty-eight years.

Then came free wool, and already in 1850 the production of wool in England had risen to 275,000,000 pounds, or a gain of 163,376,271 pounds in only twenty-two years. Since that year this production of wool has declined, but it is still greater by 26,000,000 pounds than in 1828.

But the rapid increase did not cause a decline in prices. In 1828, under protection, the price of one of the standard grades of domestic wool, that known to the English trade as "Lincoln half-hog," was 32 cents a pound, and the average price from that year to 1850 was 24 cents. During the twenty years, 1857 to 1876, the same wool brought the English farmer an average of 40 cents. The price last year returned once more to 32 cents. So the British farmers are no worse off, in the matter of price, for free wool; and they had more to sell, too; but they had an enormous gain in the cheapening of woolen clothing.

But England raises sheep for mutton rather than for wool. Four-fifths of all lambs are slaughtered for market; and for twenty years the number of sheep has kept pretty closely to 30,000,000, sometimes a few millions above or below. Wool is little more there than an incidental product of the mutton-grower.

Free wool has made England the great wool market of the world. In 1850 that country imported only 77,000,000 pounds of wool, but importations had risen in 1889 to 721,000,000 pounds, of which about half was exported and resold in other countries, thus making an enormous trade for English ships and English merchants. In the meantime England's consumption of foreign wool has increased enormously. In 1844 it was 1,942,000 pounds; in 1889 it was 363,435,000.

It is our tariff, and it alone, that keeps us from rivaling England as a great wool-trading and wool-manufacturing nation. England could never have reached her present position in the control of the world's wool supply if she had adhered to the policy of protecting a few country squires who wanted to breed sheep at public expense; and if she had persisted in her attempt to shut out foreign wool our own manufacturers would never have needed to besiege Congress so long and so invariably with their tale of ruinous competition from English competition. As it is, the bulk of the world's supply of wool goes to London, and English manufacturers, as a general thing, get the pick of the clip from all lands. Free wool would give the American manufacturer an equal chance; it would not necessarily hurt the American wool-grower.

DIVIDING OUT TARIFF SPOILS.

Steel Rail Manufacturers Meet to Make "Allotments."

The Steel Rail Association, otherwise known as the steel rail trust, has recently held a meeting and appointed a committee of two, representing Eastern and Western mills, to report on a new "allotment" of percentages. A large new rail mill has been started near Baltimore, and it is necessary for the trust to give it an "allotment" in order to avoid "ruinous competition."

Under the present arrangement all orders for rails are divided up among the trust's mills upon the following basis: The Pennsylvania Company, 9 per cent.; the Lackawanna, 18; the Bethlehem and the Columbia, 8 each; Andrew Carnegie's Company and the Illinois Steel Company, 57 per cent jointly.

This little coterie of rail manufacturers can safely make their "allotments" and divide up among them the spoils which the tariff puts into their coffers. The duty is $13.44 a ton, which is equal to 65 per cent of the price of rails in England to-day.

At the beginning of this year the rail trust met and put up prices, and these have been firmly adhered to ever since. The price at Chicago is $31.50 a ton in large lots, or $32.50 in small quantities. The price now quoted at Middlesboro, England, is £4 5s, equal to $20.64 per ton.

This is a big tariff difference. But oh, says the high-tariff wiseacre, don't you know the foreigner pays the steel-rail tax?

Let us see: We imported during the year ended June 30, 1891, just 134 tons of steel rails, valued at $1,479, the duty on which, at $13.44 a ton, would amount to $1,800.96.

On the other hand, our rail mills turned out during the calendar year 1890 about 2,200,000 tons of rails. This quantity at the present Chicago price would cost $69,300,000; at the English price $45,518,000, a difference of $23,782,000.

Do the English manufacturers pay our steel-rail tax, or do our railroads pay it?

labor at living wages. What if the whole heavens are to be turned loose upon the irrigators with copious showers of pauper rain? Will it not ruin an American industry, wipe out American capital, and deprive many a faithful American ditch-digger of his employment?

This "curse of cheapness" is leading us to sacrifice the interests of the poor hark-working ditch-digger in a most unpatriotic, most un American way. And all to save labor for the farmer and make his wheat and corn grow!

HIGH-TARIFF ABSURDITIES.

A Muddle-Headed Protection Editor Whom a Low Tariff Will Hurt.

It is impossible for the high-tariffites to escape the absurdities of their position. How often, for example, have they assured us that protection cheapens commodities? Only put on a high protective tariff, they say, and we shall very soon be buying the very same article of better quality and at a lower price; and the higher the tariff, some even claim, the lower you will make prices.

A very pretty fable, only the high-tariffites are not able to believe it themselves. If they do, why these pictures of the ruin and desolation that will follow if the tariff is removed or even reduced to 40 per cent?

Here, for example, is the Boston Commercial Bulletin, which is reputed to be one of the ablest of high-tariff organs. This journal, in trying to break the force of the argument that since sugar has been so greatly cheapened by the removal of the duty a similar result would follow in the case of goods imported from Great Britain, Germany and other European countries, says: "Their manufacturers have the advantage of cheaper labor, and can undersell us on that account. To throw down the protective barriers, which alone keep out these competitive goods, would simply result in depriving our people of occupation or compel them to labor for reduced compensation."

Yet the blessed tariff, as all orthodox protection organs assure us, cheapens the things made by our manufacturers and does not guarantee them artificial profits.

But this specimen protection organ commits another specimen absurdity. After painting the universal misery which would follow a reduction or abolition of the tariff, it assures the consumer that he would get little or no advantage. "A small reduction at first hands would in many cases mean nothing but additional profit for the retailer, and where a concession was vouchsafed the consumer it would be too insignificant to figure in the total expense of a family's support."

Confusion worse confounded! The consumer will not get lower prices, and yet he will go off and buy foreign goods and ruin the domestic manufacturers!

How could the home market for home goods be ruined unless the consumer himself could buy foreign goods cheaper? A market for goods is not made by accident or caprice; it depends upon the intelligent choice of the consumer in seeking for the best goods at the lowest price. Unless he can get this in Europe our American manufacturers have nothing to fear from the freest competition; and if he can get it, then our manufacturers are now enjoying the benefit of an artificial price made possible by the restrictive tariff.

But our manufacturers are afraid, very much afraid, of such competition; and this fact is conclusive proof that they are squeezing tariff prices out of the domestic consumer!

Two Effects of the McKinley Law.

Another triumph for the McKinley bill is recorded in the price of linseed oil. A merchant in this city bought in Chicago last week at 42 cents per gallon. The quotation of the city oil here has not declined so far as yet, though the market is demoralized by largely increased Western production and Western sales. But at the current quotation, 47 cents per gallon, the fall since October has been 15 cents, for the quotation was then and for months had been 62 cents for city oil in this market.—New York Tribune, in July.

The New England Homestead estimates that about $3,000,000 will be paid to the farmers of the Connecticut and Housatonic valleys for this year's crop of tobacco. It is stated that this is double the amount which they received in 1889, and that it is due to the exclusion of Sumatra wrappers by the provisions of the new tariff. Whoever looks at the statement of imports will observe that there has been a great decrease in this kind of importation, and it appears that the farmers of Connecticut are getting part of the benefit. Nor are they alone. Farmers in Central New York in large number, and in many other Northern States, share the advantages which the new tariff has justly given them with respect to the production of tobacco for wrappers.—New York Tribune, in August.

Beating Pauper Labor.

Our high tariff cranks are quite sure that the American labor cannot compete with the "pauper labor" of the old world. The "fellahs of Egypt" and the "ryots of India" are to their minds the most formidable competitors in the whole world because the most poorly paid. But our farmers do compete with the fellahs and the ryots and beat them in a free market.

In 1890 our cotton growers sold England 4,480,203 bales of cotton, weighing 400 pounds each, against only 1,086,376 bales sold there from Egypt and India together.

This was done last year, and the present year will make a still better showing; and all this in the face of what cle Jerry Rusk calls "a well-nigh nous competition with the labor of * * the miserable fellah of Egypt l of the unfortunate, half-starved In- n ryot, working for pauper wages, glecting all the amenities of life in or- that women and children as well as n may work in the fields."

et it is against this labor that our thern cotton-growers compete suc- sfully without any help and with m alone from our glorious system of otection for American labor." If y do it, why cannot some other people?

"Legitimate Fruit."

he American wool clip this year is 0,000 pounds less than it was last r. The New York Tribune has e the impudent claim that the rmous crops of wheat and corn ed by our farmers this year are in t to be credited to the McKinley ff law, since "the principal object of new tariff was to afford better pro- ion to agriculture." The large crops ear to this blind leader of blind pro- ionists as "the legitimate fruit of a ff intended for that purpose;" for farmers, thus encouraged, increased r production in every direction.

ill the Tribune tell us whether that 0,000 pounds shortage in the wool is another "legitimate fruit of a ff intended for that purpose?"

HE protectionists in their public ut- nces profess to hold that the policy buying in the cheapest market" is free-trade delusion; but the cheap, axed sugar, that they are now making merry over, is cheap for the simple son that it was bought in the cheap- market in the world, in Cuba, Ger- ny, and the Sandwich Islands. Buying in the cheapest market," and ing no tariff tax works beautifully h sugar, as every protectionist is now ming.

EARTH IN A TREMBLE.

THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY BADLY DISTURBED.

Buildings Tottered at St. Louis and the Inhabitants of Cities of Indiana and Illinois Fled from Their Houses Through Fear—The Shock in Many States.

Shaken by a Quake.

Three almost continuous vibrations of an earthquake, oscillating from east to west, were felt one night recently in parts of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, and Kentucky. At St. Louis the shock was quite severe, and buildings were shaken violently. People were aroused by the disturbance and rushed in terror, half-clad, to the street. It is said by many that the shock felt there was similar to that experienced on the night of the memorable Charleston disaster. The shock lasted two minutes. Considerable crockery and glassware was demolished, and some wooden stables on the outskirts of the city toppled over. Buildings facing the north and south were visibly affected by the shock.

The shock was distinctly felt at Indianapolis, and while reports as to its duration differ the best information says it lasted at least eight seconds.

Louisville, Ky., had a good shaking, and, although no serious damage was done, it caused considerable excitement all over the city. The bell in the City Hall tower was rung by the vibrations of the building, and the watchman in the tower thought his last hour had come. At the Galt House and other hotels the bells were rung, water-pitchers were overturned in the upper stories, and guests came hurrying down-stairs in a panic, it requiring much persuasion to induce the more timid to return to their quarters. Several drug stores suffered a slight loss from broken bottles and prematurely mixed drugs.

In the residence part of the city the shock caused much alarm, the people rushing into the street, and when the shock subsided formed long ranks of excited groups anxiously discussing the probabilities of a recurrence of the quake. No casualties occurred anywhere in the city, and no damage of consequence was suffered by buildings. The vibrations were from east to west, and lasted only a few seconds.

Three separate shocks were plainly felt at Keokuk, Iowa. They followed closely upon each other, and the vibration lasted fully one minute in each case. The direction appeared to be from southeast to northwest, and suspended electric lights swayed sharply. No damage was done. The shock appears to have been general throughout Southeastern Iowa.

At Evansville, Ind., one prolonged shock was felt. No damage was done, but general fright ensued.

BROUGHT DOWN A NICE RAIN.

Rain-Makers Bag a Heavy Shower in Texas with but Three Shots.

The rain-makers have made their first experiment at Corpus Christi, Tex., and it was a complete success. Broken, cumulus clouds had been floating overhead all the morning, and at 6 p. m. Messrs. Ellis, Castor, and Fairchild entered a carriage and drove out of town, accompanied by County Engineer Gunter, who represented the citizens' committee. The party carried two boxes in the carriage, containing two mortars and a dozen twenty-one pound bombs. When the outskirts of the town were reached the mortars were unpacked and set upon a small hill. Three rounds were fired, four shells being exploded at each volley, while broken clouds were passing overhead. No rain was falling anywhere in the vicinity when the firing was begun, but after every report a sharp shower fell, and as the clouds passed away to the southwest the rain was seen to be falling in torrents over a limited area. By the time the last shot was fired the party were drenched and returned to the hotel. The rain could be seen spreading off to the southwest, and in forty minutes a heavy rain was falling, which was general over the entire city and continued for half an hour.

DEATH IN FLAMES.

Father and Son Perish in a Prairie Fire.

George W. Johnson and his son, who lived near Beaver Creek, N. D., were burned to death by the great Emmons County prairie fires. They had gone to put a head fire out, when the huge flames, leaping high as the house tops, swept over them, leaving burned and disfigured corpses. Mr. Tabor, an elderly gentleman living near Williamsport, is seriously burned and will probably die. No further news can be learned from the Holland settlement, thirty-five miles south of Williamsport. Three men are known to have perished in that vicinity. The amount of damage done in the Holland settlement cannot be learned, but it is safe to say it will not be far from $50,000. One man at Winona, twenty miles from Williamsport, a Mr. Pratt, lost forty-five steers, which were overtaken by the fire and burned to death. Another fire ranged on South Prairie and burned out Messrs. Fosburg, Mahoney, Hesholy, Houstain, and Parker.

COLLIDED WITH AN OIL CAR.

Two Railroad Men Meet a Horrible Death—Another Fearfully Burned.

At Fargo, N. D., an oil car standing on a sidetrack was set in motion by a switching train and started on a down grade. The oil car dashed on and collided with the engine of an incoming stock train with terrific force. In an instant the oil was ablaze, and the engine plowed through the flaming mass. Engineer, J. J. Curtis, Fireman Dodge, and Brakeman Benton were instantly enveloped in flames. They all three jumped and tried to smother the flames in the grass. Dodge was literally roasted to death on the spot, while Curtis died shortly afterward. Benton lost both eyes and was otherwise badly burned.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

OR

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XIX.

JOB PARALYZES THE LAWYER.

I must go back to the morning of the day on which Dick's triumph ended so unfortunately in the ring.

Ike Jenks, alias Pratty, passed up the street on which Monsieur Dufaur's Academy was located, at the time Joe had said she was to be seen at the window. He saluted her and strode on, turning neither to the right nor the left.

Shortly afterwards—a few minutes later—as Joe looked out on the street she saw Job Wonder staring at her. How long he had been there she did not know. It could not have been long. He seemed to have "took root," to use his own homely language.

The moment he saw he was observed, he walked away quickly in the direction opposite to that Mr. Pratty had taken.

Ten minutes later the precious lawyer's clerk and farmer met.

"Well—you saw her."

"Yes—but great pancakes! Who'd a know'd her! Why, if I'd run agin her plum face to face on the street, I'd never said it 'twas Joe."

"You say it is her now?"

"Her. I reckon I ought to know."

"That's the important point. Sure there's no mistake."

"Look here young man. Is it likely my sight's failed since I left home? I hain't drunk a drop—ne'er a drop. I've not gone and had my old roots grubbed out o' my mouth like Bijah Harkins, 'n' took gas, an' gone clean crazy. I've been hyer long enough to get used to the air; ate wholesome victuals—the butter might be a little better—but I've took precious good care of myself—and if I don't know that gal from all other gals, then you'd better 'pint commissioners, and put Job Wonder in a lunatic asylum."

"All right. When will you go back to my uncle's office?"

Arrived at Jeremiah Jenks' office, that individual took the farmer in hand in a professional manner that was the essence of cheek.

"Well, Mr. Wonder, you are satisfied you have seen the person we are both interested in. What do you propose?"

"Me?"

"Yes."

Jeremiah Jenks was biting his finger-nails.

Job Wonder's suspicions were aroused.

"Why, I'm going to ask that gal to go home with me right off, I'd done it on the spot—but your nephew made me promise I was only to look at her to make sure 'twas her—and more'n that—I wasn't to do nothin' till we'd talked it over. 'N' now I'm just bilin' over with things to say, if you'll let me say 'em."

"To begin, with, Mr. Wonder, do you think she would go with you if you should promise everything you can think of?"

"Lord! Why won't she?"

"Why did she run away?"

"Oh! that was all a mistake. I'll make that all right. Just as soon as she knows Samanthy and my wife's sorry, and glad to get her back."

"Stay. Do you think she isn't pretty comfortable where she is? Isn't she well dressed? Isn't she looking better than she ever did?"

"By gum! I'd never know'd her! she's slicked up that wonderful."

"What could you offer her that would compare with the life she is living now?"

"Eh?"

Job Wonder rose and stared at the lawyer. He had never looked at it in that light before.

"See hyer, Squire. You lawyers be squires, I reckon. I took that gal Joe out'n a county poorhouse. I signed papers for her. They meant I wasn't to let her be a burden on the county. An' in Acorn County we allays live right up to what we sign—right up to the handle every time."

"Well?"

The farmer wished he would quit biting his nails, but he went on.

"Why—that's the sum total on't. It's my duty to take care of that there gal to bring her up till she's of age—or till such time as I'm satisfied somebody else'll take good care of her."

"Well?"

"That's enough, ain't it? Can't I take her? Who'se any better right, I'd like to know?"

"Is that all? Are you through?"

"Yes, I be. Now fire ahead—spit it right out, and I'll sample your say."

The lawyer smiled.

"We don't do things in this State in that way. If that girl says she was not treated right, you can't get any officer in New York to sign a paper authorizing you to touch her—not one."

"I can't!"

"No! On the contrary, if anybody will come forward and give a statement supporting her statement of the cruelties practiced, she would be protected from the authorities of Acorn County!"

"Great thunder!"

"That is the fact."

Jeremiah Jenks' nail was bitten pretty close now. Job Wonder's face expressed disgust and dismay.

"I'm not concerned! I'm no poorhouse—nor no commissioner, nor overseer, either."

"No."

The manner in which the lawyer spoke angered Job Wonder.

"What makes you say 'No' that way? You mean something."

"I do." The lawyer turned square around and faced the farmer.

"You have a motive in coming here—what is it?"

"I don't know whether you'd understand it—tain't likely you would—bein' a lawyer."

"I'll try."

"I come to New York jest because I took a liking to that girl. There's not a heuter agin me. I'd like to see any man said there is a heuter agin me."

"What do you mean by a heuter, Mr. Wonder?"

"Pshaw! I mean nothin' in reason—no sort of ground for any fault—just nothing at all."

"Oh!"

"See hyer, Mr. Jenks. Spit it out, an' done with it."

"Well, Mr. Wonder, I'll put a case."

"Go on. I'm listenin'. But don't use no law lingo. Just you break it up, so's I kin understand it."

"We'll say the girl has not been fairly treated."

"Who says so?"

"No matter. Possibly there are persons who heard you pity her, and say the Superintendent of Barnesville ought to be cowhided for whipping the girl."

"That's that dod-blasted Breen! He's a dirty sneak, an' all the world knows it."

"Suppose there was a friend of Joe's, or friends, who were disposed to look into the matter, and they found a bad state of affairs at the poorhouse?"

"Well?"

"And suppose they learned that you got her, and that the girl ran away from you because she was unjustly accused of stealing, when a cloud of witnesses can be brought to prove her innocence was clearly established——"

"Now I know it's that rascally, dirty, sneaking, cowardly Breen."

"There's more than Breen for witnesses," said the wily lawyer.

"Now then," said Job confronting Jeremiah Jenks angrily, while the color flushed over his face until it became purple, "I've got your measure. You think I'm scared. Well, I ain't—not a mite—not a mite! Now you thought you had a greenhorn. You think I'd pay somethin' rather than have my name mixed up, that I'd do most anything to keep my sister and wife's name out o' the dod-blasted newspapers. But you don't know your man. No! you don't by a jugfull. My sister's like me—we've both made mistakes—but I'd like to see the man that's got any better record than hers or mine, an' as for my wife's name—Lord! All Acorn County will stand right up for Maria Wonder! You thought I'd like to be shet of the hull business, bein' as how I'd took the girl home, 'n' she'd scooted, 'n' I'd made myself sort o' responsible. You got some hindsight plan workin'—but I've got just enough foresight to steer clear o' all your traps! You expected I'd plank down mebbe a hundred dollars or more just to get the girl to hold her tongue or help to get her away. I don't want her away. I don't keer where she is, as long as she's with respectable folks. But I'll tell you just what I will do. I'll introduce myself to the folks she's with. I'll have a square talk, and if she gets into any trouble, an' they'll let me know in time, why then I'll spend—well, you'll find out how much money I'll spend to find out what you've been up to, sendin' answers to honest men's advertisements, and holdin' of 'em in town, 'n springin' your forty little mosquito traps onto 'em! You mind! I'm goin' now. You'll mebbe wish you'd never seed Job Wonder before I get through with you."

And whirling out of the office, Job Wonder walked away, leaving Jeremiah Jenks almost white with rage.

The lawyer struck his desk with his clenched fist in his impotent wrath.

At the same time a low chuckle—a sly chuckle—sounded in the back room.

It was Ike—the hopeful Ike. He laid his head on one side, and said to himself:

"Oh, my! Ain't that just parylizing?"

CHAPTER XX.

JOE DISAPPEARS MYSTERIOUSLY.

Job Wonder was a man who never lost time once he made up his mind. He walked straight from Lawyer Jenks' office to Monsieur Dufaur's academy, and rung the bell.

"They can't do no more'n put me out," he said to himself, "an' I'll give 'em a chance, now my dander's up. I ain't goin' to stay hyer in New York all this time, 'n go home to Samanthy and Maria with my finger in my mouth."

The welcome Madame Dufaur gave him surprised him. Madam thought he was calling in relation to a pupil, probably.

"My name's Wonder—Job Wonder."

Madam bowed.

"I'm from Acorn County."

Madam bowed and smiled.

"You have a gal hyer—they call her Joe."

"Eh, sir!"

Madam's face was severe now. She said to herself, "This man wants to take her back to that cross sister of his."

"Why, I called to see Joe, but ef you've any objection, I've nothin' more to say, 'cept I'm down right glad to see her in a nice place, 'n lookin', Lord! I never did think she could look like she does."

"Well, sir, I am listenin'."

"Yes, I see you be, but you don't take much stock in me. You don't say so, but I can tell, generally. Howsomever, bein' as how I come hyer in answer to that pesky lawyer's letter, an' spent my time an' money, why, I thought I'd drap in 'n give you to understand that, if anythin' happens to Joe, I'd like you to let me know. I'll spend money on findin' out anybody that meddles with her. She's in a fine place with you—a beautiful place—'n I don't—I wouldn't interfere for anything, missis—that's all I called to say."

"Pray keep your seat, sir. You speak of danger. Why do you think anybody would trouble Joe?"

"I don't think they will. I just thought if anybody should, you know."

"This is strange."

"Yes, 'tis kinder silly—but that's all, ma'am. Not another thing as I know of."

"Well, you are as kind as Joe says you are."

"Did she say that?"

"She always speaks kindly of you, Mr. Wonder."

"There now! Who'd a thought it? Well, I thought mebbe she wouldn't bear spite agin me. I took a fancy to that little mite—but Lord! how you've been improvin' of her. I bet my wife and Samanthy wouldn't know her if they'd meet her. That's all, ma'am. I was going to ask her to go home with me if I found she wasn't fixed to her own mind. I'm obleeged t'ye, ma'am, I'm sure. Give Joe my respects."

"You can speak to her if you wish, Mr. Wonder."

"Well, now—if you'll obleege me, ma'm."

Madame Dufaur went out and returned with Joe—who ran to the farmer and extended her hand.

"O! Mr. Wonder—you don't want me to go back to the poorhouse!"

"Why, bless your heart—I wouldn't let you go back to Zeke Caper, not for five hundred dollars."

"Then I'm so glad to see you, because you were so kind to me."

"Pshaw, now—how you talk."

"It's true, Mr. Wonder. You are the first one that ever gave me a kind look or word."

"Poor gal—I reckon that's true."

"Are you going home right away?"

"Soon as I can make a train, miss."

"Don't call me miss, Mr. Wonder—call me Joe."

"Well, I will. You ain't spoiled if you do wear fine clothes."

"We try not to spoil people," said Madame Dufaur, who was much amused with his manner and language.

"Well—if you'd come down to Acorn County, I'll guarantee you a job that'll last you all the year round, if you can improve folks as you have improved Joe, hyer."

Joe blushed vividly as he looked at her.

"You've got kinder toned down like—but there's a lot o' devilment in them eyes yet. Well—I'll tell Samanthy and Maria how I found you—and nobody 'll be gladder 'n just Samanthy." She's took on mightily ever sence you ran away—she's dead sorry it happened."

"Tell your sister I never give it a thought now."

"You may be sure I'll carry home that message. It'll sorter ease her to know it. Well, I'll be goin' now. Good-by, Joe—good-by, ma'am—and mind what I've said. Good-by, ma'am." And Job walked out, bowing and swinging his hat as politely as if he was talking to a parson.

"If I had thought of it," said Madame Dufaur, "he could have gone with you and Miss Murray to the circus; now I must go with you. I dare not trust you alone."

That was the little speech Madame Dufaur smiled at. She dare not trust two young ladies alone—but she did not want to see the circus. Such an idea was absurd!

So, the same evening, Madame accompanied the two misses to the circus. What happened there has already been told.

I have been thus particular in relating these details in the order in which the events happened, in order that the reader will realize the bearing they had upon subsequent events.

When Joe beheld Dick on Firefly she started and trembled so that Madame Dufaur thought she shivered with the draft of air, and bade her draw her wrap closer about her.

Joe was spell-bound. She had never beheld anything like a circus. It was a new, wonderful, charming. She was delighted with everything. When the white mare was led around the ring she fixed her gaze on the rider, in whom she beheld a strong resemblance to Dick. She did not dream it was Dick; such a thought never entered her mind. But there was a something—Joe could not define the feeling—that suddenly recalled poor Dick, whom she at that moment thought was in Barnesville Poor-Pouse.

When Dick fell from the mare, and lay at her side stunned, she was the first to lift the girl's head (as she and all the spectators thought), while Madame Dufaur fanned Dick. There was a sharp, drawn look in Dick's face that thrilled her—it was so like poor, dear Dick who had fought her battles and braved Zeke Caper, that Joe shed tears.

And now, to think, after all that happened to her, that Dick had his adventures to relate. How charming it would be to listen to his account of his experiences. The world was beginning to be a bright, beautiful world to Joe. She was like a bird the remainder of the day. She sang and danced through the rooms; Madame Dufaur smiled, and nodded quietly to her husband, who eyed Joe in his turn curiously.

Joe thought Dick would surely return in the evening with the clown's wife or clown; but evening came, passed, and there was no sign of either. Then Madame Dufaur consoled her by telling her they would come in after the evening's performance.

"In the meantime," said Madame, "I want you to do an errand for me."

Joe was only too glad of the opportunity to go out. She felt the four walls rather irksome that evening. She got her things, and receiving her instructions left the house humming a new song she had heard Madame Dufaur singing.

It was not until she was gone that Madame Dufaur recalled Job Wonder's words that seemed to convey a warning. Then she laughed.

"Nonsese! what could happen a child like that," and Madame Dufaur smiled. But she pondered deeply when half an hour passed and Joe did not return.

At the end of an hour Madame Dufaur was in a fever of apprehension.

"Something has happend to Joe," she said to her husband.

"Eh—what is it?"

Madame told him her forebodings—related the farmer's strange warning.

"It is not possible!" exclaimed Monsieur Dufaur—"but I will see! I will soon see!"

And Monsieur Dufaur darted off to the police authorities. He found little encouragement there—however, he did all that presence of mind and discretion could suggest.

When he returned home, hoping to find Joe there, his grave face betrayed the truth to Madame Dufaur.

"Ah! Poor child! Something terrible has has happened to her."

Monsieur Dufaur turned his face away and looked out of the window at the people passing. But he said never a word.

Lung Gymnastics.

A Swiss doctor says that many persons who extend their mental work well into the night, who during the evening follow attentively the programme of a theater or concert, or who engage evenings in the proceedings of societies or clubs, are awakened in the morning or in the night with a headache. He is particular to say that he does not refer to that headache which our Teutonic brethren designate "katzenjammer" that follows certain convivial indulgences. This headache affects many persons who are quite well otherwise, and it is due in part to the previous excessive work of the brain, whereby an abnormal flow of blood to that organ is caused, in part to other causes; for example, too great heat of rooms, contamination of the air with carbolic acid, exhalations from human bodies, and tobacco smoke. For a long while the doctor was himself a sufferer from headache of this kind, but of late years has wholly protected himself from it by simple means. When he is obliged to continue his brain work in the evening, or to be out late nights in rooms not well ventilated, instead of going directly to bed he takes a brisk walk for half an hour or an hour. While taking this tramp he stops now and then and practices lung gymnastics by breathing in and out deeply a few times. When he then goes to bed he sleeps soundly. Notwithstanding the shortening of the hours of sleep, he awakes with no trace of headache. There exists a clear and well-known physiological reason why this treatment should be effective.

Philosophy of Boiling an Egg.

The white of an egg is albumen, and the yelk also, but containing a peculiar oil, says Dr. A. S. Heath, in the American Agriculturist. It is the albumen that, heated at 160 deg. F., coagulates and renders the egg delicious, tender and digestible. But if the temperature is raised beyond the perfectly coagulating point, the albumen will dry, shrink and become leathery and indigestible. Large eggs placed in boiling water will not properly "jellify," or coagulate the albumen of either the white or of the yelk in three and a half minutes. Then, to secure the desirable degree of cooking or coagulating of the albumen of the egg or of a steak, the temperature should be just sufficient when longer continued to perfectly cook, and not sear and hornify the nutritive element of food, until cooking impairs digestibility rather than, as it should, promote it. A meal presupposes preparation, calculation and forethought. Then why not as well apply these to uniform, certain and perfect cooking of eggs. Ten minutes before the meal hour put the eggs into a vessel into which boiling water has previously been poured, cover and set aside, and when the meal is ready to be served the eggs will be perfectly cooked. If some of the family desire their eggs harder, two or three minutes longer will be perfectly digestible. Too much fuel is wasted in spoiling food that should be made delicious and digestible, but which too often is innutritious, indigestible and tasteless.

ONE of the latest additions to the British navy is the Blenheim, a protected cruiser of 9,000 tons displacement. Of this weight 4,000 tons are for the protecting plates, armament, equipment and coal. She is 372 feet long, 65 feet beam, 20,000 horse power, and 22 knots speed. She is considered to be the largest, fastest and most powerful war ship in the world.

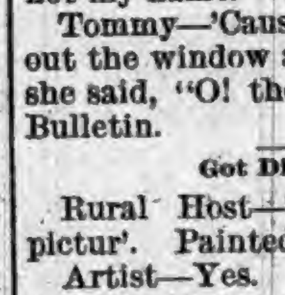
Two Miles a Minute on a Wheel.



VICTOR BELANGER.

Victor Belanger, of Worcester, Mass., is the inventor of a one-wheel cycle for which is claimed a speed capacity of two miles a minute. The inventor claims that to propel his machine requires from seven to ten times less power than is required on the ordinary bicycle. Indeed, the difficulty he seems to fear most is a vast excess of power, which will make the machine unmanageable to the ordinary person through its terrible speed. According to Mr. Belanger, thirty pushes a minute on the pedals equal about forty miles an hour.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

AND

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon; if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Saxony has made drunkenness a crime. This has been done on the advice of the best physicians in the land, who scout the idea of dipsomania, and declare that men get drunk not because they are crazy but because they are vicious and should be restrained.

Best Farm Wagon.

We allude to Shaffer & Berg's wagons made right here in Auburn. They stand by their work and can prove it the best. No shoddy work about a wagon of their make. It pays to buy of home manufacturers, for you know what you are getting. Their work has stood the test for years. All parts are made on honor. Get new wagons there, or bring in your repair work to their shops on South Main St., Auburn.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

THURSDAY.......OCTOBER 1, 1891.

HAMILTON, O., celebrated its centennial Friday, Sept. 18.

THE average increase in assessment over last year, take the state over is about 30 per cent on realty and 20 on personal.

BIG rush last week for the newly opened lands in the Cherokee Strip, near Oklahoma. There may be some trouble with the negroes there.

SEVERAL millions of duties must be paid back to importers who have been over charged, says Secretary Foster. If as republicans claim, the foreigner pays the duty, why not pay this money back to the foreigner? Why need American importers complain of a higher duty than the law directs? Besides, these importers have already sold these goods, the people have bought them and paid back these excessive duties with added profits, to these same importers. Now, why should government pay them back these millions, for which the people have already paid them more than that? Let the government stop overcharging, for the future. That will make it all right and harm no one any more. But for the present claim, that is all past and the people have patiently paid it. But the people can't get their money back.

Song of The Fair.

"Where are you going my pretty maid?"
"I am going to Waterloo," she said,
"We'll hitch up the team and go to the fair,
For all our neighbors are going there,
There'll be piles of lovely things to see
For everything is entered feee.
There'll be great trotting and races run,
And hosts of people to see the fun.
From Tuesday to Friday the crowds will go,
All centering there to see the show.
Not one of us will stay at home.
We're waiting for next week to come.

Goods are being put into the new store of the Schaab Furniture Co. The rooms are large, and the establishment will be a big one. We predict for them an extensive business.

H. Luce brought in a very lengthy pumpkin Saturday, just two feet long in fact, and of a healthy size otherwise. We're going to have it manufactured into a two-foot long pumpkin pie.

Fannie Casebeer and her friend Miss Boone of Chicago, came here Monday on a flying trip. Fannie and her grandmother, Mrs. Smith, expect to return here soon and occupy their old home.

Miss Anna Teeters was home last week, the schools at Wabash having a week's vacation as the county fair was being held there. She brings word that Mrs. Harrison who has been sick so long, is now able to be out again. Mr. Harrison himself has been sick, but is now at his post as usual.

The Rebekah Lodge in this place will hold a social in the near future, and we trust our liberal hearted people who enjoy a few hours of social pleasure, such as we shall expect on this occasion will give them an ample patronage. The Rebekahs always make their gatherings successful.

We were a little inaccurate last week in speaking of the accident that happened to W. B. Brown. That is, we tackled the wrong doctor. It was Dr. Nusbaum who dressed his wounds. Of course we all get careless now and then, and the item was correctly stated to us. It was simply a slip of the memory, or the pen.

John Relapp had a nice little dog up to last week and one by which he set great store. But his little favorite became mangy, and as this disease is known to be caused by small parasites that get into the dog's hide and make life a burden to the animal, some one thoughtlessly suggested to Mr R., that he could kill these parasites by applying spirits of turpentine. Not thinking of adding to the torments of the already half crazed animal he applied the turpentine. The dog became utterly crazy, in fact seemed to go mad so intense were its sufferings, and its master had to kill the poor beast to end its misery.

The executive committee, secretary and other workers of the Waterloo fair were over here Monday. They had been in the west part of the county, including Garrett, and and going home this way, billing and in other ways advertising the fair. They report the best outlook for all things they have ever had on the week before the fair begins. The races are filling rapidly, and they will have more horses in that department than they ever had before. The indications are that the speed stables will not accommodate them, and [illegible] this department will have to be extended elsewhere. This is a good sign and [illegible] to assure a good crowd and a paying fair. Next week is the time.

The famous DePauw Concert Company will be at the opera house Wednesday and Thursday evenings of next week at Waterloo. They will have full houses, for their ability is already known there, and that is fair week. Everybody should hear them.

We were pleased to make the acquaintance this week of Rev. J. D. Brosy, the new pastor of the Lutheran church. He is a young man of ability and withal very pleasant. We trust the relations between him and his people, may long remain as pleasant as he can possibly wish.

When the Aldine hotel in Ft. Wayne was crowded with guests attending the races, and just as the first table at noon was filled, and all waiting for something to eat, the dining room girls quit work. It took an hour to get the first guests waited on, and then it was by green hands.

The DePauw Quartet gave their second concert at the M. E. church Saturday evening. A good audience greeted them, and all are agreed that the entertainment was even better than on the first occasion. It was simply grand. They will never be at a loss to get a full house should they come again. Much praise should be given Mr. Merica for the ener- and business tact with which he pushed this enterprise.

GREEN MOUNTAIN SALVE: Is unequalled as a cure for all rheumatic pains, weakness in the side, back or any other place, and is unexcelled for cuts, bruises, corns, etc. It is the uncompromising enemy of pain in whatever form, or wherever manifested, and has never been known to fail in a contest with this dreaded foe of human happiness. If you would live a peaceful and painless life, try this great remedy and you will never regret it.

Coop Ralston and Mr. Anderson are in the hay baling business. When the new machine and engine came they started out for work, going five or six miles into the country. They started the engine in good shape, as they supposed, but it wouldn't work right. At the point of hard pressure it would stop. It then for the first time dawned on them that they had no balance wheel. The parties at Niles, Mich., who made the machine had forgotten to send it. They sent. And when it comes they can bale hay with any man.

Cook Ford tells a good story about W. K Straight of whom our old settler's column had several anecdotes last week. Straight is now living in Iowa, and though about 78 is still a strong man. Not long ago a gang of Irishmen were working on a railroad there and one of them a big burly fellow would get drunk frequently and bully the whole town till all were thoroughly afraid of him. Straight had an old time favorite hunting dog that went with him in his walks about town, and one day as Straight was on the streets as usual, this dog happened to meet the drunken Irishman, when the latter gave the dog a vicious kick that sent him sprawling out into the street. Straight arose and went across to where the bully stood. The latter realized what was up, and squared himself for a fight. Straight warded off his first blow, and then grabbed the fellow and threw him to the sidewak as if he had been a child and gave him most a terrible thrashing. Then, without a word let him go. The man never got drunk again while the gang staid in that town, several months.

Changed Hands.

We mentioned in a local way last week that our popular baker, Fin. Gibson, located at No. 36 south Main street, sold his establishment and business to Charles H. Ling, of this place. We regret very much to lose Mr. Gibson as a business man, but believe he has consigned his profitable enterprise into competent hands, as Mr. Ling is a young man possessing good business qualities, who has been a citizen of our town for about four years. We have no hesitancy in saying that we believe the business at the old stand, under the new management, will be conducted properly and for the best interests of patrons. We hope our people will give this gentleman the hearty support he justly deserves. He wishes to extend a hearty greeting to all the old patrons and cordially welcomes all new ones, who may come to his establishment for the "staff of life," a full and complete supply of which will be kept on hands at all times. Let us patronize the young man and thus give him a boost up the royal ladder of success in business life.

The Swing washer is a closed washer, and therefore better than an open one, for you are out of the steam, which is a great comfort; the heat is kept longer, which is a great saving. Buy a Swing washer of W. L. Meese, the inventor and maker. 39 41

T. W. Gray of Corunna, is ahead on subscription to the COURIER, in point of time, for he paid last week away ahead, to July 21, 1893. He has no debts to worry him, and his reading is paid far ahead. Such a man will live all the longer, and he deserves to.

The Angola fair last week was a great success. For about the first time in the history of the society they had an entire week of fine weather. There were not so many from Auburn to attend as there would have been but for the races at Ft. Wayne at the same time, but those who did go had a grand time as they always do up there.

Our old farmer friend, John Pepple brought us in a couple of peaches last Thursday, that beat anything we have seen since the days that Indiana was a peach growing country. They were southern peaches brought from Texas by his son John. Mr. Pepple planted the seed, and when the trees were one year old set them out. There they grew two years more, so that the trees from which this fruit came, were but three years old. He has but two of the trees, and one had twenty-seven peaches, the other ninety nine. They are large and and of fine color and flavor, altogether better and larger, than the average seen about here or imported. One of them measured 10½ inches around and several, 10 inches. Mr. Pepple is saving the seed, and hopes to raise a good number of trees. It will pay our farmers, we think, to try a few peach trees once more especially such good kinds as appear to be hardy.

The St. Joe News has a highly complimentary article on the way Trustee Woodcox has improved the school property there, both inside and out. This is where the trustee "squandered the money" we suppose. We would like to see all our public money put to as good a purpose,

E. T. DeLapp agent of the Lake Shore road, has been laid up for a month or more with some form of rheumatism, that don't seem to give way to treatment as readily as one could wish. He is able to get down town once in a while. We certainly hope he may soon give his complaint the go by.

The biggest vegetables of the kind, we ever saw, were some handed us last Friday by G. A. Mead. They were turnips, tomatoes, potatoes and sweet potatoes, and were not only large, but exceedingly fine quality. The turnips were grown from seed raised this season, quite an idea to those who never stopped to think of it.

The Western Renovator Co. have established a plant on South Main street, where is to be found facilities for renovating all the feathers in this part of the country. The men who are carrying on the new enterprise seem to be gentlemen in every respect, who are here to do business from a purely business standpoint. They are now ready to clean up your feathers.

L. S. Stoner is the possessor of one of the ancient lard lamps used by some of our fathers in the days long ago. He had it last week, hung up in Ralston's grocery. It made but a small twinkle by the side of the electric lights and looked dim enough. It was made with a spike to stick into the walks of the log houses, where it could hang at any convenient place. Or it could be suspended by a string from some point above.

NOW OPEN.

As announced sometime ago we this day open our Hardware Store and are now ready for business and in this formal way bespeak for ourselves a liberal share of the patronage of the public generally. We have no special pledges to make at this time, as the old firm is so well known in its dealings that we deem it unnecessary to say what we shall do in the future, farther than that we will still be in the agricultural business and have added hardware that we may be better able to administer to your wants, and you will better know what we can do by giving us a trial. We shall sell as low as first-class goods can be sold for and shall at all times endeavor to be fair with our patrons, our competitors and ourselves. We shall always keep on hand a full line of agricultural implements and repairs, hardware, stoves and tinware. We invite you all to come and see us. We will make you welcome and deem it a pleasure to show you our goods and quote prices. Very Respectfully,

The fair young flowers,

Mrs. Frank Lawrence is having some additions and changes made in her Seventh street property. Even the ladies keep pace with the spirit of improvement that seems to pervade our town. Ed. Webb is doing the work.

The itinerant and one-out-of-five hustlers for the COURIER attempted the peculiarly exhiliarating task of riding a bicycle this week. The many very uncertain and unsteady gyrations were in no wise attractive or conducive to much pleasure on his part.

Mrs. H. A. Shull in the country, went to start the windmill at their well, or to change the gearing, last Friday and in some way caught her finger in the machinery, tearing off the point by the nail, making a very sore finger, though not a necessarily a dangerous hurt.

Henry A. Shull, who resides northwest of town will sell his farm tools, stock and other personal property, at public auction on Tuesday of next week, Oct. 6. This will be a large sale, and everybody should be there. Mike Frederick of Hudson, wields the auctioneer's hammer.

David Heckathorn at Hudson, will sell a large amount of valuable personal property, at his home at Hudson, on Thursday, Oct 15, including good horses, cattle, fat hogs, stock hogs, corn, hay, wheat in the ground, lumber, pulleys, shafting, jack screws, rope, tackle, etc. It will be an extensive sale.

J. D. McAnally of Waterloo, was here Tuesday. He brought down a lot of his patent name tug fasteners for Mr. Shefer, who is now using them in making harness. He and Mr. Dennison have received a lot of these and it will pay anyone who uses a harness, to call on them and see what a great improvement it is. He has also just received a patent for a plug cutting machine, for buggy box plugging. With his fruit tree sprayer, which is becoming so popular, and his many other inventions, he seems to be up to his ears in the patent business.

On Wednesday evening, Sept. 23, a large number of the friends and acquaintances of J. N. Grover, assembled at his boarding place on East Third St., to assist him in the celebration of his twenty-eighth anniversary. After engaging in the usual amusements on such occasions until a reasonable hour, refreshments were served. Young people were present from Bryan, O., and other towns near by. All retired from the scenes of pleasure with light-hearted anticipation of the coming years when the might again be called to enjoy another season of surprise-party pleasure in memory of Mr. Grover.

FOURTEEN Kansas babes have been named for Jerry Simpson so far. They were all born without socks.

CHICAGO is certain to pass New York in population, and the poor old town ought not to get so mad about it. It is as impotent to stop the growth of that great city as it is to build its monument to Grant.

THE French fictions about Emperor William are getting too wild to be believable. It would be a comfort, however, to think that the Parisian novelists had turned from the production of erotic fiction to the concoction of political lies.

TAKE down the tea cup as an emblem of gossip, and put the street corner in its place. Half the bad talk you hear originates on the street corners among the loafers. Women may afterward whisper it over their tea cups, but they do not originate it.

BLIND people rarely smoke. They say they cannot taste the smoke unless they see it. This almost proves the theory that if you blindfold a man in a room full of smoke, and put a lighted and an unlighted cigar in his mouth alternately he cannot tell the difference.

NO ONE will believe that your work is greater than your time. Your best friend is of the private opinion that you have all the time that is needed, and that it is your lack of ability that is to blame. If you must give an excuse, don't give that of having no time. No one will believe it.

THE light-weight champion among the powers of the earth is Switzerland, and she has just celebrated the 600th anniversary of her organization and capture of the belt. Long live the bantam, and long may the war cocks of France, Italy, and Germany keep their spurs from her plumage.

THE report that Ben Butler had dropped dead on his yacht was quickly contracted. He is hale and hearty at his home in Lowell. The rumor, however, will make an excellent advertisement for General Butler's memoirs, soon to be published. It beats the "farewell appearance" all hollow.

THE Shah of Persia, who for some months past has been supposed to be dying, has waked up sufficiently to kill off one of his peculating governors, Abdullah Khan, by putting him alive into hot water and boiling him until he was dead. May we respectfully inquire if this might properly be called "boilocution?"

THE Navy Department hurried cruisers to China to protect the American missionaries there. The missionaries might have done equally good work for the cause of humanity and saved a good deal of bother by going into the slums of almost any American city. However, there'd have been no romance in that.

IT now appears that the Russian heir-apparent either ran away or fainted, or both, when attacked by the little Japanese policeman at Tokio. The dispatches about his heroism were heroically doctored at Yokohama. This man will be a noble successor to the long line of fearless monarchs founded by the boyer Romanoff.

EDISON prophesies that in thirty years houses will be both heated and lighted by electricity at a cost of less than $30 a year. If Mr. Edison would discontinue prophesying good things for the distant future and reduce somewhat the present cost of some little devices in daily use from which he is drawing large royalties he would be better appreciated.

PAVEL ZISKA is the rather odd name of a great man. Pavel has done a great deed for his sex. He has broken the ice in the matter of breach-of-promise litigation by suing Mary Augustine for $5,000 for her refusal to keep her troth with him. Pavel should be honored and blessed wherever down-trodden man is maltreated and deceived by woman.

THE scarcity of circuses in the land has been a great and grievous deprivation to the father and mother and uncles and aunts and dozens of neighbors who have, with generous self-abnegation, stood ready ever since the first blush of spring to take the baby to the show and see that nothing happened to the poor little darling while he enjoyed the entertainment.

THE cables are being worked to inform the American public that Patti's voice is still good and that she uses it with less effort than ever. As Patti is 52 years old, and her voice could not in the course of nature be as good as when she was younger, the cabled statements bear the impress of shrewd advertising for the next "farewell" tour.

THE World's Fair directors will do well to remember that many months must still intervene before the opening of the exposition, and that the value of privileges and concessions will be greatly enhanced between now and this time next year. Therefore no rights or privileges should as yet be contracted for. Let there be no jobbery or speculation in these concessions.

THE Empress of Austria, the Czarina, Queen Marguerite of Italy, the Queen Regent of Spain, Queen Natalie of Servia, the Queen of Roumania, the Comtesse de Paris, and the Queen of Portugal are said to be inveterate cigarette smokers. Hereafter it will be remembered of the American dude that he had one distinguishing characteristic in common with really notable people.

WE dread hard times because they bring numerous raffles of watches and shotguns. Every man who is a little hard up, who owns a watch or a shotgun, gets up a raffle, and if you don't patronize him, he will hate you forever. A ten dollar watch is usually raffled at fifty. Some of the fiercest hatreds in this country are due to the fact that some bold man refused to buy a ticket in a raffle.

SO THE old warship, or rather hulk, Pensacola, is to be permanently established at Honolulu to prevent the British party from gaining control of that island. If the Pensacola doesn't fall to pieces or sink with all hands she may be formidable enough in appearance to exercise a wholesome influence, but in case of trouble it would be more dangerous to be behind her guns than in front of them.

TOO MANY people talk shop when they are away from their places of business. It is a good plan to lock your prices and schemes up in the office when you close the office door at night. Your friends will enjoy your company better if you will let them forget that you are a lawyer, or that mackerel is advancing in price. You might as well wear a placard on your breast telling what your occupation is, as to be forever talking of it.

THERE is evidently some mistake in the dispatch to the effect that the Samoans are on the verge of war. Extinction must have been meant, for how can any people who only paid their kings about seventy-five cents a day support four sets of functionaries—English, American, German and Swedish—at an expense of many thousands of dollars a year? In a small way the occupation of Samoa is the partition of Poland over again.

YOU can often hear sensational news if you only go far enough from home. Guatemala newspapers are publishing the statement that the family of Gen. Burrundia have won their suits against the United States Government and will receive an indemnity of $800,000. This sounds like a big item, and it would be if any part of it were true. There is no prospect that the Barrundias will receive any sum whatever from the American Government.

A NEW JERSEY man who had caught a boatload of fish a day or two ago was just ready to pull for the shore when he fell overboard and was drowned. The boat remained right side up and the fish were saved to his family. So it goes. Let a man really catch a lot of fish and begin congratulating himself that he won't have to lie about it, and something is pretty sure to happen to him. These sad lessons ought to teach us not to strive against natural laws.

THE dress-reformers at Chautauqua have narrowed the needs of woman down to two lone garments and gravely announce that "it means nothing less than that the beauty line from the armpit to the ankle must be appreciated and insisted upon." Dear! Dear! This is decidedly risque—and from Chautauqua, too! Ladies exhibiting the "beauty line from the armpit to the ankle" may perhaps be permitted to veil their faces, a la Turque—that is, if they are ugly.

ACCORDING to a summer novel, the hero "stood with the moon shining on his face. The white glare made him look more like a creature of antique granite than ever—hewn with a lost art. But the calm curves of his mouth were pulsing with the red torrents of youth, and under his lids the unmeasurable darkness of his eyes seemed crossed with flame." We didn't read any further, but we will bet a red banana that in another minute or two he took out a package of cigarettes and lit one. That is to say, if the novel is at all true to real life.

A LEARNED doctor in New York treated a patient who had a couple of pieces of bullet in his brain. It was proved the brain had been seriously lacerated, and according to the code recognized by the "regular" school this patient must die. But the doctor fixed him all right, and he is now about his usual occupations, apparently none the worse for the extra lead in his system. But, inasmuch as he did not die according to the code, that same instrument now steps in and prevents the doctor explaining to the world how he accomplished his task. The code is a big thing. If it can not kill it can at least minimize the doctor's skill.

Weavers of Human Destinies.

What do you think the beautiful word "wife" comes from? It is the great word in which the English and Latin languages conquered the French and Greek. I hope the French will some day get a word for it instead of that of femme. But what do you think it came from? The great value of the Saxon words is that they mean something. Wife means "weaver," You must either be housewives or house-moths—remember that. In the deep sense you must either weave men's fortunes and embroider them, or feed upon and bring them to decay. Wherever a true wife comes, home is always around her. The stars may be over her head, the glowworm in the night's cold grass be the fire at her feet, but home is where she is, and for a noble woman it stretches far around her, better than houses celled with cedar or painted with vermilion, shedding the quiet light for those who else are homeless. This, I believe, is the woman's true place and power.—Ruskin.

NO man knows how desperate a woman can look until he has seen her undertake to ride a bicycle.

A NEW SKY SEARCHER.

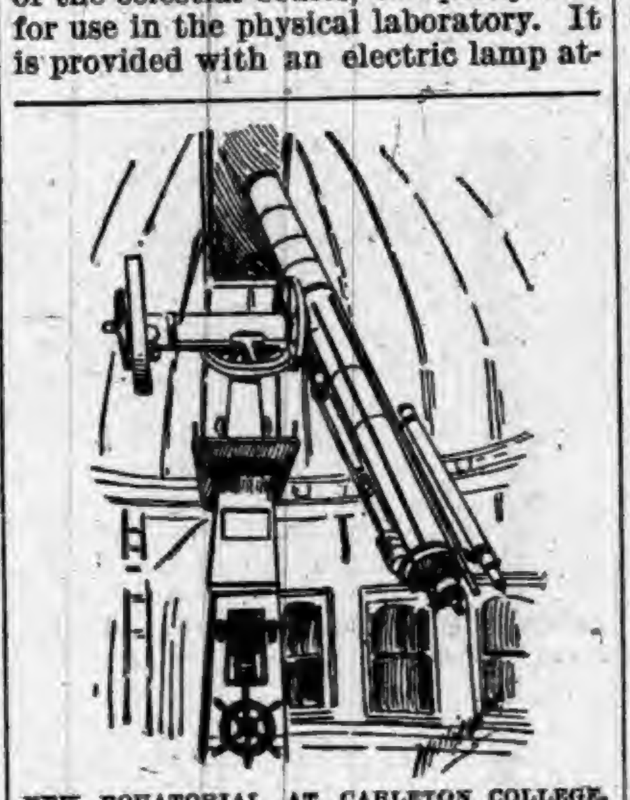
Carleton College Owns One of the Finest Telescopes in the Land.

Carleton College, at Northfield, Minn., is to be congratulated upon possessing in its new telescope the most accurate of its size in the United States. It is so styled by experts, and it places Goodsell Observatory among the best-equipped observatories in the country.

In size the telescope ranks sixth and in power fifth in the country. The clear aperture of its object glass is 16.2 inches, its focal length is 22 feet, and its working powers range between 136 and 1,600 diameters. Under a power of 1,600 it gives beautiful images and easily reaches and separates surprisingly close double stars.

The computations for the objective were made on a new plan by Dr. S. C. Hastings, of Yale, and crown glass from Paris, and flint glass from Germany, were used. The telescope is modelled after the great Lick telescope, but has several improvements. The driving clock is provided with an electrical attachment to control the movement at the will of the observer. The right ascension clock, electric lamps, glasses and other conveniences for setting the telescope are all that could be desired, and the arrangements for slow motion are the best yet devised. The total weight of the instrument, including the pedestal, is 12,700 pounds.

The new universal spectroscope, devised by Mr. Brashear, is arranged to be attached to the telescope for the study of the physical characteristics of the celestial bodies, or equally well for use in the physical laboratory. It is provided with an electric lamp attachment for comparison, spectral and measurements, photographic apparatus, prism and grating.



NEW EQUATORIAL AT CARLETON COLLEGE.

Invention.

If one were asked, says Lock and Bell, to tell the reason why the present age, when compared with all past ages, is so conspicuously an inventive age, he might have difficulty in finding a reason that would be satisfactory, even to his own judgment.

Down to the beginning of the last century men had invented but very little. They had necessarily contrived a great deal. They had learned to make boats so far back in the legendary ages that history could only find a place for beginning after men had been taught to navigate the sea. But then, the boat is only an evolution of the log floating on the water, and it came into form by such easy gradations through the raft that it is hardly to be called an invention. So with most of the household implements, and even of the tools of mechanics that have long been in use. They grew by such slow processes from the crudest beginnings that no man could be called their inventor. As we look back beyond the beginning of the last century, we discover barely more than a half-dozen new devices that could justly be called inventions. The art of printing is the most conspicuous of these few; but even this invention was so simple that one cannot help feeling that the old monks who copied manuscripts for centuries must have been exceedingly stupid or they would have created the art at a much earlier date.

But the inventive activity of the present age is a source of continual wonder, and it is difficult to explain the impulse that leads to its indulgence. Much is attributed, and much, doubtless, is due to the patent right system; but this will not explain everything. A few fortunes have been made by inventors; but it is notoriously true that the authors of new inventions rarely realize much for their happy thoughts, and few men would ever think of turning their attention to invention as a profession. Vastly the larger number of inventions are the work of men who have merely conceived a good idea, and then proceeded to put it in mechanical form because their idea has made them enthsiastic. In such cases they may have been stimulated somewhat by hope of pecuniary reward; but it was not this hope that gave the impulse to their labor.

Neither can it be justly said that the intellectual activity of the current age is greater than that of any preceding period in the world's history. In some departments of human endeavor we are less active than the men of the renaissance period and the years immediately following the renaissance. We are producing no Shakspeares, Dantes, Tassos, Miltons, Michael Angelos, and Raphaels at the present time, and considering the models from which those men were forced to draw their instruction, they were so immeasurably superior to their successors in corresponding fields that no comparison is possible. Herschel, Galileo, and Newton, estimated according to their opportunities, were greater than the men of scientific research to-day. The present generation has reached its high ground more largely through the labors of past generations than through its own endeavor, and we cannot say that men have become more inventive because their brains are more active.

Is it not more reasonable to say that invention, which is largely science applied, is a characteristic of the highest civilization? It is the last manifestation of human activity following after all the fine and industrial arts and literature have reached their highest degree of perfection. Great writers, great painters and great actors are all imitators. However great they may be, they are only doing what men have done before, and they think themselves most happy when they can trace some sort of resemblance between their own works and the works of their exemplars. But the inventor comes nearer to the production of something absolutely original than the worker in any other field of intellectual activity, and we take it that the search after the new is a pursuit most congenial to the most advanced society. Men have got tired of learning. Some of them tire too early in life, but we are all growing tired of accomplished facts and want novelty.

Always Placid.

The receiving clerks behind the desks at the telegraph offices are cool, placid fellows. They take your message of life and death with perfect indifference, mechanically count the words, and look a bit bored as they reply:

"It will be sixty-five cents, please."

I had my eye on a certain chap for several weeks, says a correspondent of the Free Press, before I humbled his pride. He insulted me. He insulted me by softly whispering to himself as he counted the words in the following message:

"Grandmother died last night very suddenly. How many of you can attend funeral?"

When I handed in that message I expected him to exhibit a little emotion. While he could not have been personally acquainted with my grandmother, he must have suspected that she was a nice old lady, and that her sudden death had greatly overcome me. Why didn't he look up with a bit of sympathy in his eye and say:

"Too bad! I know just how you feel, and I'm sorry for you."

But no. He whistled and counted, made a scratch or two with his pen, and remarked:

"Three words over—seventy cents."

And as he made change, he told one of the boys behind the counter that he be—— if he wasn't going to the dog fight that night. Then he picked up my dead grandmother dispatch and banged it on a hook, shoved me over some change, and turned away to resume the perusal of a sporting paper.

The next week I went in with a dispatch announcing that my grandmother's will had been opened and that I came in for $25,000. That man must have seen by my face that I was highly elated. Hang him, he never had the fifth of that sum, and his salary had just been cut down $10 per month, but when he had read the dispatch he calmly announced:

"Forty cents, and you forgot to date it."

And then he began talking to one of his fellow clerks about a slugging match, and how he won $3 by betting on the right man. I don't say he ought to have swung his hat and cheered over my good fortune, but why couldn't he have extended his hand and said:

"Eh, old boy? In luck, ain't you? Well, I'm glad on it. Send around the cigars and we'll smoke to your good health."

I made up my mind when I went out that I would upset that man's equanimity or lose a leg. I'd tumble him off that pedestal of placidity if it cost a thousand dollars. I'd upset, unbalance, and unhinge him or die trying. I gave him two weeks to repent. It isn't right to rush a telegraph man out of the world on a day's notice. I went back one evening, and I felt a bit sorry for him as he glanced up and then let his eyes return to his Police Gazette. I knew that his wife and child were in Ohio on a visit, and I stepped to the desk and wrote:

DETROIT, June 6, 1885.

J. H. SMITH, COLUMBUS, O.:

Please telegraph us full particulars of the accident by which Mrs. George Taylor and daughter of this city were instantly killed this afternoon. S. P.

I felt a bit sorry as I handed it in, not knowing but the man might faint dead away as he read the terrible news. Still, I had vowed revenge, and I would not forego it. He received the dispatch, whistled softly as was his wont, clattered the point of his pen along the words as he counted, and then he drawled out:

"A dollar and twenty cents, and where shall I send the answer?"

"Did you read that dispatch?" I asked, after looking at him for half a minute.

"Yes."

"Do you know the parties?"

"Yes, sir."

"Isn't your name George Taylor?"

"Aren't the parties your wife and daughter?"

"No, sir. They returned home this morning. Here's your change!"

Population of Germany.

The statistics of the German census taken recently have been published, and Germany regards the outcome with general satisfaction, for, with the exception of Russia, it has grown faster than any other European country. The total population last December was 49,420,800, as against 46,885,704 in 1885, showing a gain of 2,565,096 in the five years, and the largest gain in any five years since the establishment of the empire. In 1871 the population was 41,085,792. In the next five years it increased 1,668,568. From 1875 to 1880 the gain was 2,506,701, but from 1880 to 1885 it decreased 1,621,643—a period during which emigration to this country was very heavy. As to the character of the increase, the same rule holds good as in this country. The bulk of it was in the cities. Ten per cent. of it was in Berlin and more than one-half of it in the ten largest cities of the empire. As compared with other European countries, Germany in the last ten years has grown about 4,200,000, Austria less than 3,000,000, the British Islands, it is estimated, about 3,600,000, Italy about 2,750,000, and France less than 1,000,000—probably much less. The huge Empire of Russia shows a gain during the same period of 15,000,000, which can be accounted for in part by the comparatively small outflow of emigrants. Thus, with the exception of the latter country, Germany heads the list.

GOOD FORM IN ENGLAND.

Numerous Ways in Which British Customs Differ from American Ones.

To adequately indicate the divergences between the ways of English society and our own would require a volume, says the New York Ledger, but some striking examples may be given in a few paragraphs. To begin with the names applied to servants. In England there is no such thing as a "dining-room girl." She is called a "parlor-maid." What we term an "up-stairs girl" is a "housemaid." There are no "chambermaids" or "waiters" in an English private house. They are found only in hotels and restaurants. To speak of a coachman as a "driver" would be very "bad form." Coachmen, butlers, housekeepers, and ladies' maids are called by their surnames only, never by their Christian names.

Americans who ape English usages almost always blunder in the use of crests. In England only men put crests on their paper, silver, clothing, carriages, etc. For a lady, and especially a young lady, to put a crest on anything would be considered bad form. To speak to a man of his wife as "your wife" would not be tolerated; you must say "Mrs. So-and-so." The use of "sir" in conversation between equals would be thought very bad form. The railway terms in England differ markedly from ours. The "track" is a "line"; a "depot" is a "station" a "ticket-office" is a "booking-office"; a "conductor" is a "guard"; the "engineer" is the "driver"; the "car" is a "carriage"; "baggage" is "luggage," and a "baggage-car" is a "van." In English theaters, what we call "orchestra seats" are "stalls," and the "parquet" is termed the "pit." English newspapers you do not "subscribe for," but "take in." An "editorial" is always a "leader."

It is not good form for a young lady to go to school. She must be educated at home. We may also note that the abbreviation used for "bachelor of arts" and "master of arts" are "B. A." and "M. A.," whereas in this country they are "A. B." and "A. M." What we call "public schools" are termed "national schools" in England. An English "public school" corresponds to such American institutions as the Phillips Academies at Exeter and Andover. At Oxford and Cambridge the term "graduate" is not used as a verb to express the taking of a university degree. Glancing at games, we may remark that in England billiards is always played on a pocket table. You do not, however, say that you "pocket" a ball; you "hole" it. A "carrom" is a "cannon;" a "scratch" is a "fluke;" a "run" is a "break;" and a "shot" is a "stroke." Croquet, which once was popular, is no longer regarded as good form.

In England shooting is never called "gunning" or "hunting." The latter term is applied exclusively to fox hunting. A horse good at jumping is called a good "fence." All jumps except ditches and "water" (brooks) are called "fences." On the other hand, what we call "fences" are termed "timber." All "races" in England are running races. There are no trotting races. All English races are run, not upon a dirt track, but upon grass; hence the expression, the "turf."

A word about the etiquette of calls and cards. In England it would be the worst possible form for a gentleman to call on an unmarried lady and ask the servant if she is at home. He must always ask for the mother only. A gentleman is never asked to "call again soon," but he is told: "I hope we shall see a good deal of you."

In England cards are left only when the person called on is out. They are never sent in before the caller if the person called on is at home. For husband and wife to have both names on one card, as "Mr. and Mrs. Jones," is very bad form. So it is for unmarried ladies to have separate visiting cards of their own. Their names should be engraved under the name of their mother or of some other married female relation. In England one's address should always be on one's card, in smaller letters, in the right-lower corner.

We might enumerate a thousand other peculiarities, but we have cited enough to show that an American citizen could not easily acquire what in England is called "good form" without an expenditure of time that could be put to better purpose.

A Kind-Hearted Hunter.

I trust that I may not be considered hard-hearted in recounting such shots in detail and their results; I do so in the scientific interest of rifle practice, to produce examples of the actual, practical effects of certain weapons used against particular animals, writes Sir Samuel Baker in Wild Beasts and Their Ways. Had I been as I was in my younger days, without a life's experience, I could have shot thirty or forty of these splendid animals with ease; but from the moment of this example I determined to kill no more, but only to admire. In accordance with this determination I took great pains upon many occasions to obtain a shot, and after long stalks, having obtained a magnificent position, I raised my rifle, took a most deadly aim, and touched the trigger, having carefully kept the rifle upon half-cock. Away went the buffalo, to live for another day, instead of being slaughtered uselessly to rot upon the plains or to be devoured by wolves or buried in the soil by bears. This sort of stalking afforded me much pleasure, but it did not suit my American attendant. "Well, if you came all the way from the old country to shoot, and won't shoot when you've got the chance, you'd have done better to stop at home." This was the consolation I received for my self-denial when sparing buffaloes.

He Got One.

And old colored man went into one of our leading jewelry stores and pulled out an immense silver watch.

"I wanter pouch, sah," he said to the clerk, "I'se done scratch dis yeah watch mos' tew deth 'thout one."

"But, uncle," explained the clerk, "gentlemen don't carry their watches in pouches. It isn't good form."

"Hey? Ain't good for 'em? I'se know better'n dat, I reckon. Hit saves a lot of wear an' tear of de silber, an' I'se done gwine to wear it in a pouch."

SPECIMEN TESTIMONIAL.

Gentlemen:— WHEELING, Feb. 10, 1891.
Early last fall I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I coughed dreadfully and lost flesh rapidly until advised to try Sangole, which I did with the most gratifying result.
After taking three bottles my cough ceased and I found that I had gained six pounds in weight. I most heartily recommend it to sufferers of loss of flesh from any cause.
Respectfully,

The Barnyard, an Indispensable Division of the Average Farm—The Post Puller—General Farm Notes—The Dairy, Poultry-Yard and Household.

The Barnyard.

There is not a more indispensable division of the average farm than the barnyard, and yet all will agree that there is hardly a spot on those farms which suffers more from neglect than it does. Fully one-third of the year the stock seldom go beyond this enclosure, and very often find no shelter except what is afforded by the straw stack and the sides of buildings. It may be impracticable to make a barnyard what it should be without roofing it, nevertheless it can be greatly improved.

The barnyard should not be a basin to collect the water which falls upon the outbuildings. Unless the water from these buildings is needed for filling cisterns, it should be carried away in drains. Such drains are very important in a level location for drying the ground about the premises, and into these the water from the roofs should be conducted. These are much better than open drains because they do not become obstructed. In this way the barnyard will be kept from drawing water into it which falls beyond its boundary.

The watering trough is usually located in one corner of the barnyard, and during the winter the mud will become so deep around it that stock cannot have access to it without difficulty, unless this is prevented by the use of stone and gravel. The best way is to pave the ground with small boulders. These should be from four to six inches in length, and should be placed on their ends and very closely together. After this a layer of smaller stones should be spread over it, and above this a coat of gravel. If gravel is not available a few loads of surface clay will make a substitute. Perhaps it would be advisable to construct a passage of the same material from the stable door to the trough, but make it higher than the surrounding level. It is a luxury to be able to lead a horse from his stall to water in all kinds of weather without getting one's boots muddy.

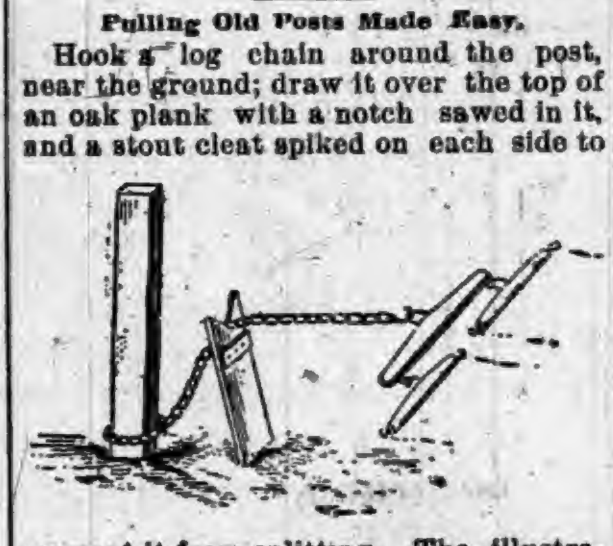
The barnyard should be surrounded by a wind-break of evergreens on the side toward the prevailing winds. Such a protection is more necessary for open regions, but there is scarcely a yard where stock must stand during the day that will not be much more comfortable if such a break is provided. Less than a dozen Norway spruces will effect this purpose, if planted in the right place, and they will be ornamental as well as useful.

The fences around the barnyard should be built of posts and planks, and should not be less than four and one half feet in height, and a greater height would be still better. This requires large posts, which should be deeply set. If the fence is made high in this way a barb wire can be stretched above the top plank with safety, and this will prevent the animals from gnawing it and also check their propensity to push over it. This will prevent rubbing against the fence, which in time is sure to push it from a perpendicular line.

A lump of rock salt should be kept in a trough in the barnyard, unless the animals are freely salted in their stables.

Pulling Old Posts Made Easy.

Hook a log chain around the post, near the ground; draw it over the top of an oak plank with a notch sawed in it, and a stout cleat spiked on each side to prevent it from splitting. The illustration explains it all. Hitch your team on and you will never forget the "Short Cuts" post puller. This can also be used to pull underbrush, etc.—[Practical Farmer.



General Farm Topics.

Keep the chickens dry.

Keep your farm tools clean.

He who lies in a small way will cheat in a large one.

The best cultivator gets the most out of a poor soil.

The largest profit usually comes from what you do yourself.

Cultivate no more land than you can attend to thoroughly.

Have a tool house and keep your tools in it when they are not in use.

Never worry over trouble. The trouble itself is misery enough, when it comes.

It is cheaper to educate the child than to maintain the future man as a cirminal or a pauper.

The butter and milk product, from all breeds of cows may be increased by judicious feeding.

Every farmer should take good care of the young swine now on hand and provide for a liberal increase the coming year.

A practical cattleman is as necessary to succeed in breeding as a practical grocer is to conducting his line of business.

It is estimated that it requires fifteen million cows to supply the demand for milk and its products in the United States.

To obtain the best results from work you must have wisdom, system, and method. The wise man systematically plans his work and methodically executes it.

"Providence makes nothing to go to waste." Whenever there is a temporary excess or lack of needed products, things were soon evened up by short crops or increased yields.

The American Analyst says that there are $2,000,500,000 invested in the dairy business in this country. The amount is almost double the money invested in banking and commercial industries.

It is a commendable idea to give to the boys an interest in the colts, and in this way get them to spend their spare time in looking after the welfare of all the horses on the farm instead of trying to loaf at the corner grocery.

The dairy farmer should always reckon the value of the manure produced upon the profit side of his account. Well fed dairy cows will yield a manure rich in fertilizing elements, and this should be employed in the production of such crop as will, with liberal fertilizing, give large money returns.

It is not to be expected that the milk of the native cow will be as rich as that of the Jersey, but her yield can be made greater, and with more profit by allowing her generous rations. The breed is important, and should perhaps, in most cases, rank first, but the feed is a good second.

In the exchange of commodities a man must have something in hand to get something he needs with. Money is generally acceptable to all classes in this exchange. To get the money the man must produce something or have something. When he has that he can usually find some one ready to gve him money for it.

Strawberries, a comparatively easy product of the soil, are, in their season, considered a luxury, and yet how few farmers' families are in the full enjoyment of them. If there is one blessing which the farmer's family should enjoy above all others it is the full and perfect enjoyment of all possible products of the soil.

Give horses water before feeding. In France some worthless horses were killed for dissection on purpose to determine the effect of giving water immediately after eating, and some of the grain was found undigested in the intestines, twenty feet beyond the stomach, and it had caused inflammation of the mucous membrane.

There is much in inheritance. Generations of improved blood lines, in which the milk or fattening trait has been the point in view, can but count to the credit of pedigree cattle, as a rule. On the other hand, neglected common cattle whose breeding has been at random cannot be depended upon for prepotency. Consequently a sire of the future cattle should be a thoroughbred, eligible to registry.

The welfare, the health, the temperament, to say nothing of the happiness of the horse, are largely dependent on surroundings. He needs no bric-a-brac to amuse or entertain him, he cares nothing for ornamentation. But he does appreciate comfort and comfort does him good. And what does him good will in the end be for the good of his master.

Inferior products, injudicious marketing, the tendency to rush from one line of production to another, are all important factors in fixing the price of farm products. The man who goes into hogs or another line when prices are up and drops out when they are low, is to be pitied, for he is always overweighted, running a race in which he is bound to be the loser.

No one should accept the absurd idea that a farmer needs no education to make a good farmer. I know that some people look down on farmers as being an over-worked, illiterate and dishonorable class of men. This is largely due to misrepresentation and misunderstanding. A well-to-do farmer, says the way to avoid this is to educate ourselves so universally and scientifically that public opinion will be compelled to acknowledge our worth.

The colt will learn more easily when 6 months old than when a year old. It can also be controlled more easily. Hence it is wise to handle the colt early. Its early training should not stop with breaking the halter. It should be handled until any part of its limbs can be rubbed; until it is acoustomed to the bridle, and until it will drive as well as lead. To teach it all this and to keep it from forgetting what it has learned is a little trouble, but if the colt is of good stock the trouble is well paid for.

THE DAIRY.

For Milkmen.

Milkmen may increase their profits by the sale of lime water. Fifty cents worth of lime will make a product that will sell for at least $5. "But," says somebody, "what is it good for?" A knowledge of its usefulness is not widespread. It ought to be, and milkmen are the ones who should naturally disseminate it. The use of lime water will have a tendency to increase the value of milk. How often we hear it said, "I like milk, in fact I am very fond of it, but I can't use it. It doesn't agree with me. It rises on my stomach or sours there so I taste it," or "Milk distresses me after I have taken it." Such persons should mix with the milk a tablespoonful of lime water to each glass of the lacteal fluid and they will have no more trouble, while they may indulge their full desires for the delicious food. It will sell at 10c per quart readily, to make it requires but a moment, it is as easily bottled as milk, and will keep indefinitely. In four quarts of pure, soft water place a piece of unslaked stone lime the size of a small hen's egg. Cover the liquid to keep out dust and let it stand for twelve hours. Then draw off the clear, sparkling water after skimming from its surface any scum that has risen and fill neat half-pint and quart bottles, corking them immediately. The lime in the bottom of the large vessel should not be disturbed. Such bottles cost but little by the gross and may be collected and filled the second or third time.—[Farm and Home.

Some Figures to Think About.

Last year the country exported 9,000,000 pounds of butter and we received 17½c per pound for it and then had to pay the freight and all other expenses out of that. Denmark sent 200,000,000 pounds to the same markets and was paid 26½c per pound for it. We used 300,000 pounds of butter for soap greese in this country because it was too poor to be eaten. New York State alone used up $800,000 worth of hay in feeding cows to warm barnyards during the daytime. As much more good hay was as good as wasted in feeding dry cows that should have been making 30c butter. The loss of alternate freezing and thawing, drying and soaking of cows in the winter time to make them hardy and strong connot be estimated. Now is it not about time that this foolishness of our grandfathers was stopped and that we accept the new gospel and follow dairying with common sense. The new principles and advanced thoughts in dairying are to be accepted and practiced by all, and that is what they were studied out for. The dairyman must dairy it the year round and stop going into winter quarters to eat up what was made in the summer.—[Col. F. D. Curtis, Before the New York Dairyman's Association.

THE POULTRY YARD.

Poultry Profits.

Give a hen proper care and a good market for her products and the possibilities of her increased usefulness will be marvelously surprising to those who have scarcely credited her with earning her food and shelter. In a flock selected and cared for so as to produce 160 eggs per year, one-half of these during the cold season, setting the average winter price at 20 cents and summer price at 12½ cents, the income ought to be about $2 per hen per year. To secure winter eggs hens must be carefully sheltered, which reliable authority states can be done at an expense of $1 per hen. The interest on this will be about 6 cents per hen for the first year. If we are generous and allow $1 per year for feed, interest on shelter, wear and tear and risk, we still have $1 per year net profit per hen. This certainly ought to satisfy any one for the necessary trouble of looking after a flock of fifty to 100, and addition of this amount to the annual income would add many comforts to the home and ought not to be neglected.

Egg Laying Type.

And now we have the egg-laying type of hens. We have had a full discussion of the milk and type of cows, the trotting and draft type of horses and different types of other animals. The long and short of the whole thing is that an animal taking after a given type is supposed to be better adapted for the purpose which that type is supposed to represent. J. D. Tompkins, a well-known breeder of Silver Wyandots, tells in the Fanciers' Journal what he thinks should be the shape of the ideal laying hen. He says to avoid long necks and legs, for they are not as good for laying or for the table as those having shorter necks and legs. The ideal hen should have a broad, deep, round body of moderate length, but should not be too chunky. The thoroughbred poultry industry is beginning to receive a good deal of merited attention and in a few years American poultry will be sought for the same as are American trotting horses. If breeders will select a type and stick to it, they will greatly improve the breed and get a class of birds that will bring $10 to $25 where they now sell for $2 a mongrel thoroughbred of unknown breeding.

Feed for Eggs.

An egg is largely nitrogenous. The white is albumen, the yolk contains phosphoric acid and mineral substance and the shell is composed mostly of lime. The hen is a small animal. Eggs are not a miraculous dispensation, as they come from the food a hen gets and converts into egg, the same as any animal converts its food into products. Corn alone is not a suitable food for the production of eggs, as it does not possess enough of the constituents to make eggs. Hens fed on such food will get fat. Hens, like every other animal, must have coarse food to distend the stomach and bowels and for this purpose cut clover hay and cabbage are largely fed by many. These also contain material to make eggs. Skimmilk is also just the thing for an egg food. To get eggs, feed hens to produce eggs.—[Col. F. D. Curtis, Kirby Homestead, N. Y.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

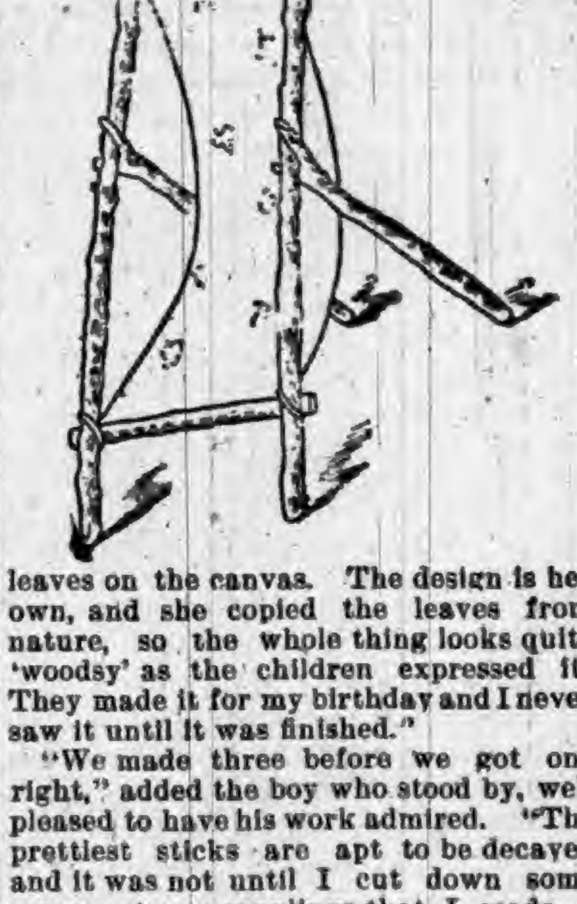
Ironing Collars and Shirts.

We suppose that clothes have been properly washed and starched—which is not always true, we are sorry to note. Take one article at a time and lay it on a clean white ironing board. See that your hands are immaculate and your irons clean; rub the latter on brown paper and a bit of beeswax, then on a clean rag. If your polisher is at the right heat it will only take a few firm rubs up and down on each side to make you feel proud of your collars and cuffs.

The shirt-bosoms are drawn out smoothly on a bosom board, after ironing the sleeves and tail, also the neck and wristbands. Now grasp the neck with your left hand and slide, as it were, your iron up the middle, sending all the wrinkles to the sides instead of to the top or bottom. Press firmly, curve around the neckband so that it will stand, put a pin in to preserve its shape, fold and your work is done. Don't be discouraged by your first failure; the results are worth the trials, and you will soon find yourself able to accomplish satisfactory success. You will find that your husband, father or brother will soon stop taking part of each week's wash to John Chinaman or the steam laundry and will take pride in their linen, as white as snow and as stiff as ivory—the result of your handiwork.—[M.

A Home-Made Rustic Chair.

"What a pretty chair!" exclaimed a visitor, as she noticed on Mrs. M——'s veranda a rustic seat that had been fashioned with considerable skill. "Is it not?" said her hostess, "and I am very proud of it, for my little boy of 11 made the frame quite alone, and his small sister embroidered those falling leaves on the canvas. The design is her own, and she copied the leaves from nature, so the whole thing looks quite 'woodsy' as the children expressed it. They made it for my birthday and I never saw it until it was finished."



"We made three before we got one right," added the boy who stood by, well pleased to have his work admired. "The prettiest sticks are apt to be decayed and it was not until I cut down some young, strong sapplings that I made a seat strong enough to bear any one's weight."—[Farm and Home.

Household Hints.

Whites of eggs may be beaten to a stiff froth by an open window when it would be impossible in a steamy kitchen.

Powdered flint glass ground to an impalpable powder and mixed with the white of an egg makes one of the strongest cements known.

Half a lemon dipped in salt will do all the work of oxalic acid in cleaning copper boilers, brass teakettles and other copper or brass utensils.

Roasts that should be juicy come to the table as dry as pasteboard because the oven was not hot enough at first to instantly harden the outer surface and prevent the escape of its juices.

To temper earthenware which is to be used for baking, put the dishes in cold water over the fire, then bring them gradually to the boiling point. When the water boils around them remove from the fire and let them remain in the water till it becomes cold.

After a bottle or keg of olives has been opened the mold will soon form. A little horseradish or a few nasturtiums placed therein will prevent this to a certain extent. The better way is to buy them in small bottles, so that the bottle may be used before they have a chance to mold.

The very best lounge one can have, all things considered, is a frame supporting a good spring bed, with a regular hair mattress of suitable size over it, the whole kept in place by an inexpensive Bagdad rug, as you prefer. Repeat half a dozen of the tones of color in the rug in the covering of the down pillows, of which you can hardly have too many. If you cannot afford the expense of eider down for sofa pillows, use the best of feathers rather than the cheap down generally sold in the stores. Many people like a hair pillow better than any other, and a hammock pillow covered with blue denim will often be a welcome addition to the lounge.

A Michigan girl has been asleep since the Fourth of July, and long naps of a week's duration are nothing to her. She will make a good wife for a man who is in the habit of coming home late.

Ventilation and Gas Stoves.

All stoves for burning gas, oil or naphtha, whether employed for heating or cooking purposes, should be provided with means for carrying the products of combustion into the outside air. We should no more allow the products of combustion to pass out into the atmosphere of our rooms than we would allow a coal fire to burn in our dwellings without a chimney. It was well enough to hear of stoves which consumed their own smoke or condensed all their own products, but in any ordinary method of combustion such things were next to impossible. Wherever there was gas burned there must be good ventilation to carry away the products, and when he had seen small bath-rooms and kitchens heated by gas, with gas for cooking, and also water-heaters in use in confined places without chimneys, he had never marveled at the complaints of headaches from the occupants, but he had wondered that the so-called "accidents" had not been more frequent. Every gas stove, whether for heating or cooking, should be connected with a chimney, or the outside air, in order to carry away the sulphurous and carbonic acids. No stove should be allowed in any dwelling house except under these conditions. It should be universally known that the chief product of the combustion of gas is carbonic acid, a non-supporter of combustion or life; and when present in very small quantities in the air we breathe had a decided effect upon the living organism. It was essential, then, that this gas be eliminated from our rooms as fast as it is formed. The other impurity arose from the presence of sulphur compounds in the gas, which could easily be removed at a moderate cost. The sulphur compounds burned into sulphuric acid, commonly called oil of vitriol, and as such found their way into the articles of furniture, binding of books, brasswork, etc.—Chicago Times.

In the Georgia Gold Mine.

There seems to be very little confidence among the native whites in these mines. It may be said that they lack knowledge of the business, but I suspect they know that the gold that is, or was, readily available has been exhausted. Few native Georgians engage in gold-mining unless paid daily wages. But all of them are eager to sell mineral lands.

Wages here are exceedingly low, the regular rate being from 80 cents to $1 per day. The men board themselves. These rates are for white men. Georgia white labor is exceedingly difficult to handle. All the men own what they fondly imagine to be farms, and they cheerfully throw their tools into the ditch and quit work at any moment they think they have been imposed on, or that their crops need attention. These men are unlike the Carolina sandhillers. They are fighters. They are mountain men. They were stanch Union men during the war, and very generally refused to serve in the Confederate ranks. They are sure to get drunk on corn whisky if they get the chance. If the liquor has been made by moonshiners, it is thought to be sweeter. They are ignorant and wretchedly poor; but there is good stuff in them.—New York Sun.

Vapor Poison and Its Antidote.

The morning and evening mists that pervade the atmosphere of malarious localities cannot be breathed with impunity. A safeguard is needed to render harmless the dangerous miasmata with which they are impregnated. The surest, safest defense is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It is an antidote to the poison which has already been inhaled and borne fruit, an adequate preventive of its harmful effects. No preparative for breathers of miasma-tainted air or drinkers of malaria-poisoned water like the Bitters. It completely neutralizes the otherwise irresistible onset of the aerial foe. Settlers on newly cleared land, excavators of canal routes (notably that on the Isthmus of Panama), Western pioneers and emigrants—in short, all subjected to malarial influences in air or water—find in it a benign remedy, an effectual safeguard. Disorders of the stomach, liver, and bowels, "la grippe," rheumatism, and kidney complaints are remedied by the Bitters.

Hygiene Items.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes gives this as an infallible prescription to insure long life: "Let half a dozen doctors thump you and knead you and test you in every possible way, and render their verdict that you have an internal complaint; they don't know exactly what it is, but it will kill you certainly by and by. Then bid farewell to the world and shut yourself up for an invalid. If you are three-score years old when you commence this mode of life you probably may last twenty-seven years, and there you are, an octogenarian."

How It Acts.

Water extinguishes fire, not as the common talk is, by virtue of any incompatibility between the two elements, but partly by the effect of the lowering of the temperature caused by its evaporation, and partly by acting as a mechanical extinguisher. Enveloping the parts of the body upon which it is thrown, it separates the combustible matter from the atmosphere, and cuts off the supply of oxygen, the life of the fire.

Nearly Settled.

The Evening Sun tells of a parson who had had a call from a little country parish to a large and wealthy one in a big city. He asked time for prayer and consideration. He did not feel sure of his light. A month passed. Finally, some one met his youngest son on the street. "How is it, Josiah," said the neighbor, "is your father going to B——?" "Well," answered the youngster, judicially, "Paw is still prayin' for light, but most of the things is packed."

Impure blood is the primary cause of the majority of diseases to which the human family is subject. "August Flower"

For two years I suffered terribly with stomach trouble, and was for all that time under treatment by a physician. He finally, after trying everything, said stomach was about worn out, and that I would have to cease eating solid food for a time at least. I was so weak that I could not work. Finally on the recommendation of a friend who had used your preparations with beneficial results, I procured a bottle of August Flower, and commenced using it. It seemed to do me good at once. I gained in strength and flesh rapidly; my appetite became good, and I suffered no bad effects from what I ate. I feel now like a new man, and consider that August Flower has entirely cured me of Dyspepsia in its worst form. JAMES E. DEDERICK, Saugerties, New York.

The Auburn Windmill Ahead.

We have frequently mentioned the Auborn Wind Mill in these columns and have always been enabled to speak the truth as far as we knew. The company manufacturing this very popular mill, is composed of gentlemen of a very desirable type and we join hands with those who wish for the realization of their most sanguine expectations. On this line we would mention the fact that this company received the only diploma of excellence ahat was awarded on Wind mills by the Hicksville fair this year, which fact proves conclusively that this mill posesses some rare merits not found in other mills. We would not disparage the efforts of manufacturers in bringing their goods before the public, nor would we even presume that any mill made in Auburn was not a good one. But we believe it is perfectly proper, when we see a thing of exceptionally good qualities to make a note of it. This mill of which we speak in particular, has made for itself an enviable reputation, which fact its competitors will not attempt to deny. Its manufacturers are hustlers who are fast bringing it into use, as the numerons orders found on the records at the factory will testify. Five mills were sold on competition at the above named fair.

He Paints.

Most everybody in Auburn knows Thomas J. Ray, or "Tom" as he is commonly called. Well, we want to say that Tom has made a break from the disparaging kinks which have kept him from doing business for himself, or venturing upon a life of usefulness. He has been following the profession of a painter for some years and now announces to the public that he has gained by hard work, earnest study and personal attention that degree of proficiency in the art "most beautiful," which enables him to strike out in the artistic field alone to enter the field with his competitors. For our part we deem him a very deserving young man and admire very much the steps he is taking to secure a competency for himself.

The Church of God Eldership.

The annual convention of the Indiana Eldership of the Church of God began at Auburn, Ind., on Saturday, Sept, 26, 1891. Delegations came in from various parts of northeastern Indiana and western Ohio. Our people displayed their open-handed generosity by opening wide the doors of their homes, and cordially inviting the brethren and sisters to partake of the proffered hospitality. The people of other churches nobly entertained many who had no particular places appointed them.

No work was done during the day, except to assign delegates, ministers and brethren, their quarters. In the evening, Elder Miller delivered a very able discourse to a large and deeply interested audience at the church on south Jackson street. It may be said of him, that his gesture alone speaks with a more powerful eloquence than the best language of most men.

On Sunday morning, Elder Fuller, of the Zanesville Circuit preached very earnestly upon the "Seven Utterances of Christ upon the Cross." He is an able worker and success has crowned his efforts in the ministry.

The Lutheran people observing that the house on Jackson street was too small to accommodate the large congregations assembling there, exhibited a greatly appreciated and christain-like spirit of kindness, by tendering the use of their spacious church, where I. W. Markley, of Columbia City, preached a highly interesting discourse, Sunday evening.

Monday morning, at nine o'clock the meeting opened with devotional exercises, conducted by Elder McColley, of Roann, after which, some time was devoted to the appointment of committees and making all preliminary arrangements for doing the work of that august body. Much of the forenoon was spent in preparation, adjourning at eleven o'clock for refreshments. In the afternoon, the reports of ministers were received and their licenses renewed. A great amount of business was transacted during the day. In the evening, at the Lutheran church, Elder Joseph Neal, of Monpelier, O., preached an able sermon to the ministers. It was a forcible and well directed effort toward the elimination of that adopted principle which permits gospel ministers to withhold a part of the truth because their hearers object to listening to it.

Tuesday forenoon was devoted more or less to discussions of an ordinary character. Many committee reports were brought in and acted upon. The afternoon session was one of great interest. The reports of ministers who were not ready on Monday, were called. At four o'clock, after a very interesting session, the Eldership adjourned till 7 p. m. In the evening, Elder Kimmel addressed the people very ably at the Luthern church, while the business session was being held in the Church of God. The business of the day was of a very important nature, and at about 9:30 the meeting adjourned till 8 o'clock Wednesday morning.

Wednesday morning, the session began with devotional exercises conducted by Elder G. F. Kimmel, of Columbia City. Journal of previous day was then read. Committees concluded reports. The W. M. S., submitted a report, which spoke encouragingly of the work accomplished by that body. Mrs. Josephine Woods, of Syracuse, was chosen as organizer if this Eldership.

It was decided the next annual meeting would be held at Roann, Ind., beginning the last Saturday in September, 1892.

The Stationing Committtee having held a consultation session, submitted their report, which fixed the next year's work of the active Elders in the various parts of territory governed by the Indiana Eldership. Their deliberations concluded the work here, after which the Eldership adjourned to meet in one year.

It is hardly necessary to say that this meeting was an important one. It is a noticeable fact, however, that people generally, enjoyed the coming together of God's people and the prevailing social spirit among our people. Many persons who came here utter strangers last Saturday, reluctantly bade our charming little city adieu on their departure at the close of the meeting. The ladies of the church feel very grateful toward the ladies of the Presbytarian church for allowing them to use the spacious basement as an eating room.

Thus began and closed one of the most important conventions Auburn has entertained this year.

To Whom It May Concern.

At the recent Fair held at Auburn there was some controversy and dissatisfaction in regard to the exhibition and awards in the windmill exhibition and it grew out of a misunderstanding in making the entries, only one factory (the Auburn Mill) having made entries and the Monitor and Monarch having asked me to make the entries and I explained to them that there being no premiums, and that there would not be any but our home manufactories in competition I deemed it advisable to not make any entries, but in the hurry of the last day or two for making entries one of the clerks made the entry for the Auburn Mill and the judge in this department passed on this mill without my knowledge and gave them first award without the Monitor or Monorch being in competition, as their entries had not been made by my request. I regret very much to learn that the manufacturers of the Auburn mill have taken advantage of this circumstance and are representing that their mill was awarded first premium at the Auburn District Fair when the facts are as stated above, the other mills not being in competition. I make this statement in justice to the manufacturers of other mills, as it is unjust on the part of the Auburn Mill to claim this superiority when the other mills were not in competition.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1854—Continued.

Every time has its popular medicine upon which the fortunate proprietor has grown wealthy. The public is familiar with Townsend's Saraparilla, Helmbold's extract of Buchu and Warners' Safe Kidney Cure and the curative properties of Black Draught and Wine of Cardui are being conspicuously advertised in the COURIER, but in 1854 Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry and Dr. Guysott's improved extract of yellow dock and sarsaparilla were medicinal preparations in general demand and were for sale by S. W. Ralston, of Auburn, N. L. Thomas, of Newville, John Butt, of Fairfield, L. Griffith, of Uniontown, and Norris & Smith, of Norristown, now Butler, to the people of DeKalb county.

It is not unlikely that many of the early settlers still have faith in those same remedies and it is certain that where recourse to medicine became necessary, those old-time preparations rarely failed to give relief.

V. Weaver's was headquarters for drugs sold wholesale and retail; extracts of burdock, dandelion, boneset and many another were on his shelves and among prices charged for his groceries which readers may compare with those of our present popular grocers, were good sugar 16 lbs for $1, best coffee at 14 cents a pound, molasses 37 cents a gallon and tobacco from 10 to 75cts a pound.

Wesley Park, Stiefel & Wolf, Baker & Co. and S. W. Ralston were carrying on dry good stores. Lewis Bowers ran a grocery and provision store, Babcock & Ford, successors to Espy and Bro., carried on a saddle and harness manufactory, and J. and R. Ettinger and Grove & Stuart dealt in furniture, J. W. Rickel was proprietor of a boot and shoe store and Isaac Braudt of a railroad boot and shoe store. With all these professional and business men who were known to the people in 1854, time has been busy, and how many others have succeeded them, many to fail, very few to prosper. The lesson teaches seriously the fickle fortune of mercantile adventure and the brevity of career of the most conservative.

Turning from the store and the office we find activity in the proceedings of the town board and progress in the line of educational interest.

S. W. Dickinson resigned the office of town clerk in the spring of 1854, and later Dancer gave up his position as assessor and O. C. Houghton having given bond in the sum of $100, in each case, was appointed to hold both offices.

The records show that his oath of office to "faithfully discharge the duties of clerk to the best of his ability" was conscientiously observed and public approval was attested when at the general May election, he was chosen to continue in the offices to which he had been appointed.

There was paid for repairs and for rent for the Houghton building about $50 and it was hired for the next year for school use for $24.00

On April 17, the spring term of school began and continued thirteen weeks, five days to the week or sixty-five days. George R. Baker, committeeman appointed for the purpose, engaged Abigail Wilson to teach in No 1 and Mary H. Burr, in No. 2. The compensation of each was $48 for the term.

The March dividend of school fund amounting to $128 was paid to S. B. Ward, treasurer.

The present town board in the line of economy have fixed their compensation at $2 a session and their meetings are said to be protracted till late hours, but in contrast to previous salaries of $80, and $70, for recent years, that of the trustees in 1854 were nominal. Trustees Case and Baker received $5 each and Brinkerhoff but $1, while the clerk was allowed $21.39 and the treasurer but $2.

Town election was no basis to estimate population since but 46 votes were cast electing Trustees Case, I. Brandt, Waterman, Berry and Spangler and for treasurer John Ralston, for assessor A. O. Espy.

By request of the board Messrs Case and Waterman prepared a new ordinance respecting drunken and disorderly persons. This ordinance was published in the Democratic Messenger and the law of 1853 was repealed.

The authorities were authorized by the county commissioners to use the county jail as town calaboose and the marshal was made collector of corporation taxes with 15 per cent commission on collections.

The school levy was placed at 40cts on $100, and it was decided that a three month winter term of school should be taught and that three schools should be carried on by as many teachers.

Mrs. Ring, who had been conducting a select school in the room used for this purpose in the court house, sold her outfit consisting of a stove, pipe, triangle, large and small blackboard, one short and three long desks, to the town for $20, and this additional school was to be known as No. 3.

James W. Case and Isaac Brandt, the committee appointed to hire teachers, employed James Colgrove at $33 per month to teach in the court house, Mrs. F. E. Ring at $18 in No. 2 and Miss E. P. Ketchum at $16 in No. 1 and they to board themselves.

Schools began Dec. 4th. The state by a committee had at great pains selected text books which they hoped to have adopted by all the schools for the great objects of securing uniformity and saving money to parents. In this respect we find history repeating itself in the legislative enactment that competitive bids be made by publishers of text books for the supply of our schools.

Great sums of money had been taken from the pockets of the people from 1854 till 1889 by firms which had obtained a monopoly in furnishing school books at far too high prices; every weapon they could wield was employed to prevent the success of the state but in vain, and a saving of a vast sum has been effected.

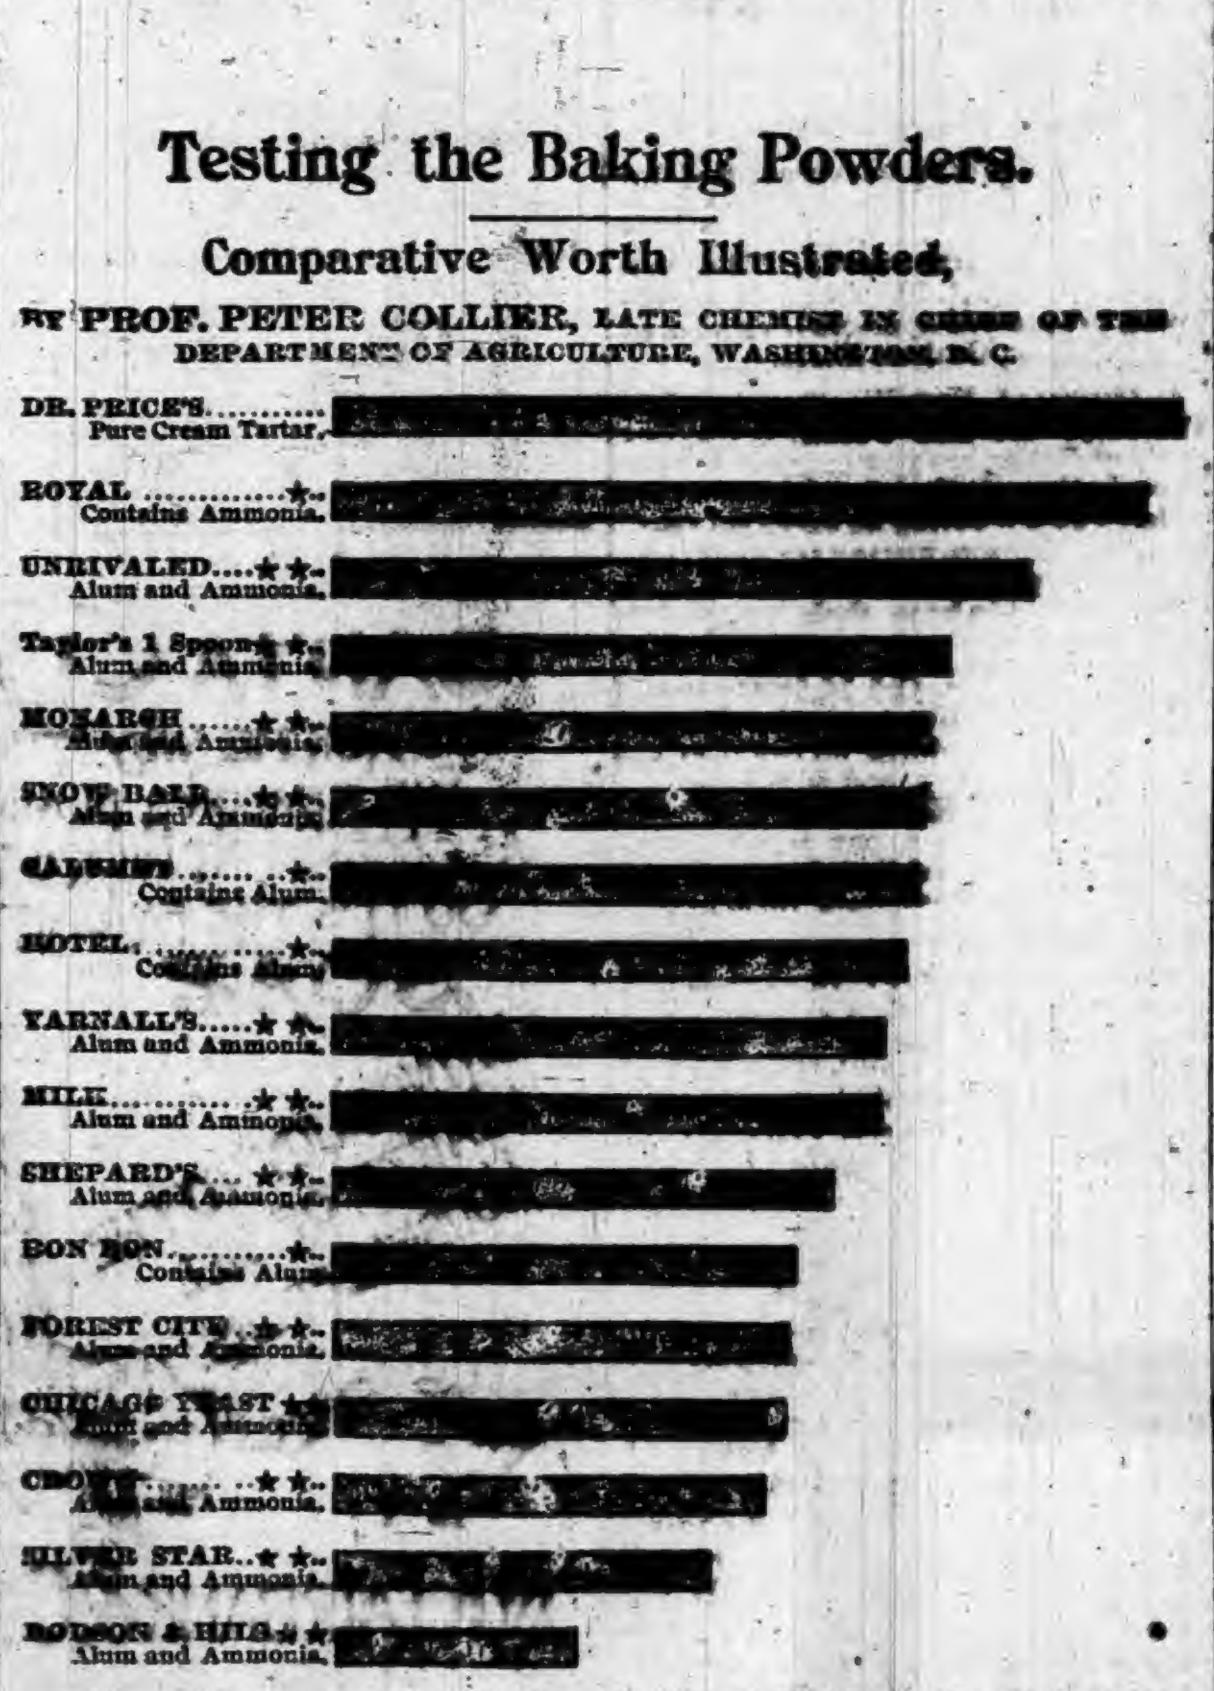
Testing the Baking Powders.

Comparative Worth Illustrated,

BY PROF. PETER COLLIER, LATE CHEMIST IN CHIEF OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WASHINGTON, D. C.



Above diagram was drawn and verified in all its details, by Prof. Peter Collier, who is pre-eminent as a Chemist, and Scientist. The illustration is made in accordance with his chemical tests of each brand enumerated.

The Carbonic acid gas was calculated to get the leavening strength and the quantative analysis to ascertain the comparative wholesomeness, purity, and general usefulness of the leading Powders. The result of Prof. Collier's examination and test, reveals the fact, that, with but one exception, every brand tested contained either Ammonia or Alum, and a number both.

Not one woman in ten thousand would use an Ammonia or Alum Baking Powder if she knew it. Such Powders not only undermine the health, but ammonia imparts a sallow or blotched complexion.

NOTE.—Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, as shown by Prof. Collier's examinations, is the only pure Cream Tartar Powder found free from adulteration and the highest in strength. All authorities report Dr. Price's free from Ammonia, Alum, Lime, or any other adulterant. The purity of this ideal Powder has never been questioned.

★ Indicates the Powder containing either Ammonia or Alum.

★★ Indicates the Powder containing both Ammonia and Alum.

While the diagram shows some of these Ammonia or Alum Powders to be of higher strength than others classed below them, it must not be taken that they possess any value. All Ammonia or Alum powders should be avoided as dangerous, no matter how high their strength.

Graham Earle.

The excellent character actor Graham Earle will appear at the Opera House for one night only, Monday eve Oct. 12, in a new comedy "The Man in Black." Mr. Earle has joined hands with the eminent comedian Robt. F. Parkinson, and these two surrounded by an excellent company of farce players should please one of the largest audiences ever in the Opera House. Secure seats early.

Starts in Business for Himself.

Our young and highly esteemed friend U. S. Weaver, who has been here for a number of years, went to Garrett, the fore part of this week, where he will establish himself in the blacksmithing business. He was employed in the Kiblinger Carriage Works for a long time, but thinks there are possibilities for him to rise higher on the great ladder of success and has thus started on the broad road in business life. He is young, competent and reliable, and we wish for him the realization of his most sanguine expectations.

A Handy Device.

The Eagle Iron Works have about the neatest and most effective device in the line of a skimmer that our attention has been called to for some time. It is an attachment to their boiler, which by some mysterious means, peculiar to itself, gathers all the dirt and lime in the water to one point, where it is blown out without any inconvenience to the fireman or loss of time. It entirely does away with the old way pulling the fire, blowing out all the water and crawling into the boiler and spending a half day in cleaning it. It is a labor saver and a profitable invention.

McKinley's Tin Fraud.

We have received from our enthusiastic republican friend, Dr. A. N. Coates of this place, one of the so-called tin medals, that McKinley is now using to humbug the people of Ohio into voting for him and endorsing his scheme for higher and useless taxation. Let us see why McKinley uses this little piece of metal, as if it were a meritorious thing to do, or as if the production of tin is such a wonderful and valuable thing, or as if he was its inventor, or its originator, or as if without him and his plan of increased import taxes on tin, all these blessings would have failed. In the first place, it is probable the medal is not tin, but covered with a mixture of tin and lead, making what is called "terne," And again it is not likely that what little tin it contains is American tin, for it has now been explained that the "making of American tin" at Piqua, Ohio, a week or so ago was a fraud, on even McKinley. He was invited to come and see the tin made, and went. He saw small thin plates of steel or iron rolled out, but this has been done in this country for many years. Then he saw these thin plates dipped into a large kettle that they told him was melted American tin. They have since acknowledged it was not. So that all the fuss made about this political tin comes to naught, but a very thin humbug, that humbugged even the chief humbugger himself. But suppose for present purposes, that this were real American tin. Then what of it? Why is it important? Why is such a fuss made over so very small a matter? The medal says, "McKinley's Tin Bill will Keep Yearly $30,000,000 in America and Employ 20,000 more people." Of course it will not, for it is not made that way. But suppose again, that this pompous statement is right. Then what of it? Who would be benefited? And if no one is benefited, why should McKinley have credit? He only claims that 20,000 more people would employed. But they are employed now, and have never probably been forced to remain idle. They have been earning at other work, just as much as they would get making tin. So why should McKinley be called a benefactor? But suppose they have heretofore had nothing to do, and we now employ them in making tin. By McKinley's own figures, the value of our tin in 1889, was twenty-one millions, and on which we paid over seven and a quarter millions in duties, making a total cost of twenty-eight and a quarter millions. His bill more than doubles the duty on tin plates, raising the rate from 1 cent to 2 and two-tenths cents a pound. This would raise the sum total of the duty to about 16 millions, by adding 9 millions to the previous tax. And this increase he says he put into the bill to enable us to employ these "20,000 more people." Now we ask our readers, if this is a benefit to the people and one for which its author should receive praise. To employ these 20,000 he admits must cost us 9 millions. With this money, which McKinley's bill forces from the people, we can pay these 20,000 more money than they will get in wages and permit them besides to be idle, while we could buy our tin abroad, just as we will have to do a large part of it. For this shall we rise up and call McKinley blessed, or bow down to his little, tin god? And this is all that McKinley has done for us in tin. The metal tin, has always been on the free list, and as we have for years been making the thin sheet iron, there has never been anything more to hinder us from making the tin plates than now, for McKinley's bill has not changed any of these conditions in the least. The only change his bill has made, was in raising the duty, as we have stated, on tin plates or goods made of tin plates from 1 cent to 2.2 cents on a pound, thus raising the cost of this material, which we shall still either be obliged to import, as before, or to pay this increased price to have it made here at home. Hence, we repeat, what great thing has McKinley done except to lay an additional burden on us? And for this shall we praise and admire him? Hardly. Has McKinley caused tin to form in our mines? Has he given to Americans a skill they never before possessed? Has he given employment to one man, who was not employed before? Has he made a tin cup even, any cheaper than before? Certainly not. As we have shown, the only thing he has done, the only thing that he claimed to do in his bill, was to more than double the duty on tin plates, and wring from the people nine millions more of money. And for this, are men believed to be such fools as to fall down and worship him, or to kiss the hem of his tinned garment? And for such a blessing shall we wear on our garments, a little tin bauble that is a fraud in construction and carries a falsehood on its face? Shall we kiss a hand that is digging the vitals from our pocketbooks?

Loitering in Kansas.

We left Butler on the afternoon of Sept. 29, over the Wabash with the Harvest excursion, and reached Peru without incident, except that our little train was crowded to excess, but each assured the other that we would soon reach Peru, where a special limited express with splendid day coaches and reclining chair cars awaited to carry us across the then green fields of Indiana and Illinois to the shady plains of Missouri. Well, we got there all right to find a crowded platform and no train in sight, but

> "Hope springs eternal in the human breast,
> Man never is, but always to be blest."

So we jostled each other about the platform and awaited the limited, which soon showed up. It proved to be a long train of coaches all filled to the roof with excursionists bound for the different points in the west. We crowded in and by good fortune secured a seat in a chair car. Not so our fat friend who so jovially planned a a good nights rest on a reclining chair—all that was left her was a box in a corner. A large proportion of the passengers were making their maiden trip to the west, and their remarks were often amusing. One gravely informed another that the descent to the bridge spanning the Mississippi was so steep that there was danger of falling out of the end of the car, as it descended. The conductor satisfied them that there was no danger. The number on the train was increased by a mess of "fresh fish" at nearly every station so that standing room soon rose to a premium, and complaints bitter and profane were freely indulged in. The number and weight of our coaches soon became apparent, by the wheezing of the engine and the loss of time in the trains schedule. We reached the Mississippi about 2 a. m., but the night being quite dark we could see but little of its magnificent beauty. A tedious delay at Hannibal and we are soon dashing over the scrubby plains of the old star state of Missouri. For quite a distance, the road skirts the Missouri river. The turbid tide and wide sandy bed, awakened quite an amount of admiration from the crowds that filled the coaches. We reached Kansas, City, about 9:30 a. m. and found its large union depot literaly packed with west and east bound passengers. The westerns roads sold cheap tickets east, as the eastern ones sold to the west, and Kansas City being about the middle, vast numbers of people met here going in opposite directions. We had intended to spend a day here but the crowded state of the city induced us to push on, so we took seats in the second section of a west bound Santa Fe train, and after a tedious delay, pulled out for Topeka. This road runs along the bank of the Kansas river nearly all the way and passes through the historic town of Lawrence, where Jim Lane and old John Brown won honored laurels in freedom causes long ago. We reached Topeka at 3 p. m., stopped for a few hours, saw its long delayed state house and noticed some of its over done progress. Made a pleasant call on Father Andrew Casebeer, and found them well and prospering. Left Topeka at midnight for Witchita which we reached without many delays about 10 o'clock on Thursday. Language can hardly describe the condision of this booming to death city. On approaching the city, the first unusual thing that attracts the attention is deserted houses with broken windows and open doors, with high weeds on all side. We soon reached the depot, a neat stone structure, and dropped off our train for a stroll about the ruins of the deserted city. The business center is fairly well occupied, but the hundreds of additions and manufacturing enterprises are nearly all going to decay piece meal. Great blocks of business houses three stories high, better than the best in our own town are lonely and without a tenant, grass filling up the walks, windows broken and doors ajar. Fine brick and stone residences that cost from $5000 to $10,000, or more are wholly without a tenant and are gradually being destroyed. I saw an immense pile of brick, stone and iron in a half finished building in a large lot seemingly used for a cow pasture, wide stone walks led to it. I approached and found a large slim building, twice as large as any in our own county, erected at an expense of not less than $250,000. I was confronted with a sign in large black letters "keep off." On inquiry, I learned that it was the "Garfield University," stranded after sinking two or three hundred thousand dollars. Two other similar ventures, "Witchita University," "Fairmount College," stand crumbling monuments of Witchita's failing greatness. Another large plant, the Witchita watch factory, on which $250,000 or $300,000 has been expended, stands still, and unoccupied away out on the prairie. I called on several of former Butler citizens, found only the better half of the family at home, the man being out of the city working. I was further informed that large numbers of the man were either in other towns employed in different kinds of work or down in the Territory trying to get a slice of Uncle Sam's cheap land. Thousands of dwellings, good and indifferent are unoccupied, and good houses are plenty that can be rented free of cost just for caring for them. Truly the city is in a deplorable condition. But I have written too much already, so will have to reserve the balance for a future letter.

A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

A FOLDING BED CLOSES ON ITS VICTIMS.

Cave-in Threatened at Carbondale, Pa.—King Karl I. Dead—Proposed Monument to Gov. Morton—Elevator Accident.

WITH A CRASH.

A Folding Bed Closes on Its Victims.

A strange accident is reported at Warsaw, Ind., in which, by the collapsing of a folding bed, Mrs. Nye had both arms broken, the one just below the elbow and the other just above the wrist. The lady was sitting by the bed, her daughter Bertha having already retired. Mrs. Nye was reclining with both arms lying across the side-board of the bed, when without a moment's warning the bed closed with a crash, shutting Miss Bertha inside, but coming down with such force as to break both the arms of Mrs. Nye, as stated above. For several moments the situation was terrible, for besides having both her arms broken, that portion of the bed that fell also struck Mrs. Nye near the temple, and she was therefore powerless to do anything to release Miss Bertha from her terrible position. Fortunately the screams of both the women brought assistance and relief.

Miss Nye is considerably bruised and scarred up from her terrific efforts to find a release from her horrible predicament, she having kicked out the foot of the bed.

It seems that the accident was caused by some one removing a pin in the daytime that operates to prevent just such an accident, but this was not known to either Mrs. or Miss Nye.

Shaky Quarters.

Carbondale (Pa.) special: Nearly 200 acres of ground in the northwest corner of this city, under which Coalbrook colliery of the Deleware and Hudson Company is tunnelled, are in a state of turbulence, and there is danger of one of the most extensive cave-ins in the history of the coal regions. The 200 mine workers have been ordered out and the company is awaiting results. The ground is heaving like a constant earthquake. From the inside the noise of the working, which at first was indistinct and did not presage any very serious trouble, has become loud and the sounds reverberate through the mines so that they are continuous and deafening.

A King's Death.

King Karl I. of Wurtemburg is dead. Charles Frederick Alexander, King of Wurtemburg, eldest son of late King William I., was born March 6, 1823, and succeeded to the throne June 25, 1864. He followed the policy of his father on the Schleswig-Holstien question, and formed one of the minor State's party in the diet. His Majesty, on July 13, 1846, married the Grand Duchess Olga Nicolajewna, daughter of Nicholas II., late Czar of Russia. The heir to the throne is Prince Wilhelm, who will be Wilhelm II. He is a nephew of the late King, being the son of his sister, Catherine, and his cousin, Frederick.

Buried in the Ruins.

While firemen were at work, at Indianapolis, in the Van Camp Building at a fire, the east wall was jarred by a passing train and fell, burying William Smith, William Mitchell, Richard Poland, David Bruter, and Walter Kerr, in the ruins. As Kerr struggled to his feet another train passed and he was struck again, inflicting fatal injuries. Mitchell and Poland are believed to be fatally hurt and Smith and Bruter are seriously bruised.

A Man Arrested for Attempted Train Wrecking.

A man named Slusser has been arrested at Alliance on the charge of attempting to wreck the Pennsylvania limited near Louisville, Ohio, last February. The detectives who are working on the case are satisfied they have secured the right person. An attempt was made to draw out a confession from Slusser without success. He was taken to the Canton, Ohio, jail.

Six Workmen Killed.

Berlin special: A number of workmen were engaged in repairing gas pipe at 2 Markgarden strasse when, owing to the careless handling of a light, a fearful explosion occurred and six of the workmen were killed. The explosion wrecked the house and also set it on fire and several persons were injured besides the workmen who were killed.

Elevator Accident.

The most horrible elevator accident ever known occurred in Cincinnati. Rev. Dr. Benedict, the most prominent Episcopal clergyman in Southern Ohio, and assistant bishop of the diocese, was caught in the elevator at the San Rafael apartment house and literally torn to pieces. His face was mashed out of all human semblance.

A Plain of Death.

Ellendale (N. D.) special: N. L. Shortman, who has just arrived there from Fort Yates, on the Missouri River, brings the news of an immense prairie fire west of Missouri. He says that a scope of country 800 miles long and 200 miles wide has been burned over, destroying farm-houses, stock-ranches, many herds of horses and cattle, and numerous quantities of hay. The fire is said to have been started by a bone-picker, who found his calling unremunerative owing to the heavy growth of grass this season. Seeing what an awful calamity he had been the author of, he fled at once, realizing how little his life would be worth if captured by the enraged ranchmen. The whole region is described as a plain of death and desolation. Many persons are believed to have perished in the flames.

IT'S TOO TRUE.

One Sailor Lives to Tell the Story of the Loss of the Schooner Frank Pere.

The report that the schooner Frank Pere had foundered off White Fish Point has been verified. A sail boat has arrived from the Persian Islands, bearing Charles Larabee, a sailor, the only survivor, and the bodies of Capt James A. Markee, of Bay city, Mich., first mate, name unknown, three sailors, Bob, Jack and Charlie, their sur names being unknown, and the cook, Mary Ann McKay, of West Bay City, Mich. Sailor Larabee's story is as follows: We left Sault Ste Marie on Sunday morning bound for Marquette, loaded with coal. During a terrific northwest gale Monday a heavy sea struck the Pere and stove her side in. The Captain called all hands to the yawl and we were not five minutes away from the schooner when she went down. The sea tossed us about in the yawl from 9 o'clock Monday morning until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. When we were about forty rods off the Persian Islands, a heavy wave struck the yawl and she capsized. The fight for life among us was terrible. One sailor caught me by the neck and I was forced to hit him to free myself. I finally reached the islands nearly dead, where I remained two days with only the dead bodies of my shipmates for company, and nothing to eat. I was finally rescued by Simon Johnson and his fishing crew, who accidentally came to the island, otherwise I would have starved to death. The fishing crew picked up the bodies one by one along the beach." Charles Larabee, the rescued sailor lives in Buffalo, N. Y. The schooner Frank Pere, 498 tons, net tonnage, was a three-master and owned by Pierson, of Cleveland, classed A 2 and valued at $12,000.

AUSTRIA EXCITED.

A Great Sensation Is Caused in the Supposed Attempt to Kill Francis Joseph.

Vienna special: Emperor Francis Joseph has arrived in safety at Reichenberg, near Prague, and with his advent the news of an attempt on the life of the imperial traveler spread all over Austria. The general opinion is the startling news circulating is either untrue or else exaggerated to a considerable extent, but it has caused a great sensation in spite of the doubts thrown upon the statement. The story in brief is about as follows: During the night, it appears, an attempt was made with a dynamite bomb to blow up the railroad bridge at Rosenthal, a suburb of Reichenburg. This outrage is said to have occurred shortly before the Emperor's train was to pass over the bridge. Some railroad watchmen, it is said, saw the men as they were on the point of attaching the bomb to the bridge and by appearing upon the scene frustrated their design. The railroad officials who have circulated the alarming story have not as yet explained whether the men supposed to have been engaged in this outrage intended to destroy the Rosenthal bridge as the Emperor's train was approaching it or whether it was the alleged assassin's desire to wait until the Emperor's train was upon the bridge.

The general feeling is one of indignation against those engaged in the conspiracy and the Emporer's loyal subjects are unanimous in expressing the hope that the bomb exploders may be caught and severely punished even if their act was only some kind of a "political demonstration."

The police are actively engaged in following up clues already obtained and further revelations and possible arrests are expected at any moment.

VICTIMS OF FIRE DAMP.

Fourteen Coal Miners Buried Beneath Tons of Debris.

A special from Mahoney City, Pa., dated the 6th inst., says: Fourteen miners were entombed in the Richardson Colliery this afternoon by an explosion of fire-damp. The men had finished their day's labor and were about to quit the gangway and be hoisted to the surface when in some unaccountable manner an explosion occurred with fatal results. The news spread like wildfire, and a large and excited crowd flocked to the mine, but were unable to gain any information as to the cause or who the victims were. The men were all imprisoned, and not until the rescuing party had worked for several hours were they enabled to reach the miners, who were cut off from the world by the running of a pillar which brought with it hundreds of tons of top rock. Eight of the victims were finally reached, two of whom had been buried under the debris, and life was extinct, while six others were badly burned by the explosion. There are still six men who are being searched for now, but it is not believed that they will be reached alive.

Conflicting and exaggerated rumors are afloat. It was at first stated that thirty-seven men had been killed, but this was soon exploded by the officials of the company, who posted bulletins that there are but six men now in the mines, and it is doubtful if they can be rescued alive. The colliery is only a few miles from here, but excitement runs so high that the officials are all hard at work and refuse to give any details.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT.

A Terrible Mishap in a Funeral Cortege.

A series of frightful accidents occurred in a funeral procession at Altoona, Iowa. The procession of forty carriages was going to the cemetery some distance out of town. While the cortege was winding down hill, a team in the rear frightened at a steam threshing machine, and started to run. The road was narrow, and the runaway horses ran into and upset a dozen carriages in front of them, breaking six into splinters and throwing out the occupants. A panic ensued as other teams ran away. Men and women jumped out out of the carriages, only to be trampled on by the frantic animals. When quiet was restored it was found that Edwin Dresdell, of Altoona, was killed; Joseph Perdue, telegraph operator from Grinnell; Mrs. Joe Mason and Mr. F. S. Sayre, fatally injured; Mrs. R. C. Lane, of Newton, was so badly frightened that it is believed there is no chance for recovery. Fully twenty others were more or less injured.

Storms and War.

The steamer Monowai has arrived at San Francisco from Australia and Samoa with advices that the island Tannas has been visited by a hurricane and devastated by a civil war. Fighting is going on and two villages have been wiped out of existence. In the midst of the fighting there came a hurricane. The German ship, "J. W. Gildemernsten," was wrecked in Dianirua Bay. The cutter "Hilda," was driven ashore and a canoe, containing nineteen natives, lost.

Organized Cattle Thieves.

Boone County (Ind.) farmers are suffering from an organized gang of cattle thieves. Four different bunches of stock have been stolen by colored men in that county and sold within the past few days. Webb Mitchell, the colored man captured in Frankfort, after he had disposed of a herd of eight, has made a partial confession at the jail, in which he implicated four other men as being in the business with him.

Must Come to Time.

Santiago (Chili) special: The Chilian Government has so far evinced no intention of abandoning its position that it has a perfect right to arrest persons as they enter or leave the American legation, but, while strenuously insisting upon possession of this abstract right, the Government is at present making no attempt to put it in practice. The partisans of Balmaceda, who took refuge under Minister Egan's roof are still there and no arrests have been made during the past few days. In accordance with instructions received from the State Department at Washington, Minister Egan has given the junta to understand by formal and official notice, that if the Chilian authorities continue to maintain their present attitude, the friendly relations between Chili and the United States would be interrupted.

Farmers Fight to the Death.

William Houser and Spencer Cameron two farmers living near Kenton, Ohio, engaged in a quarrel at the farm of the latter over some trifling matter, when Cameron went into the house and secured his shotgun, came out and shot Houser in the breast. Cameron then closed in on Houser and beat him over the head, knocked him down, jumped on him, and was hammering him, when Houser's son ran to his assistance and crushed Cameron's skull with the butt end of the gun. Cameron's son then ran out to avenge his father's murder, but assistance interfered. Houser is in a critical condition and cannot live.

Terrific Explosion.

Six boxes of giant powder exploded in the hoisting house of the Ground Squirrel mine, near Butte, Mont. About fifty houses were more or less injured. Though many were more or less hurt, no lives have been lost as far as learned. Mrs. Anna Politich and child are seriously injured by flying debris, the mother perhaps fatally. Mike Adams, who was walking thirty yards away, was knocked insensible with concussion of the brain. A miner at the bottom of the shaft of the Ground Squirrel was struck and fatally injured by the fall of a bucket. The concussion was felt over a mile from the scene of the explosion.

Bad Accident on the Big Four.

A Big Four working train, twelve carloads of gravel and a caboose, backed into a hand-car at Carrolton Station, six miles south of Dayton, Ohio. Conductor Samuel Morris, aged 24 years, who lived at Mechanicsburg, Ohio, was instantly killed, and all of the crew of seven men with him in the caboose were injured, several seriously. The section men were trying to get a hand-car out of the way when the caboose struck it, and shoving it along, the caboose was upended and the gravel cars crashing into it, killed Conductor Morris and injured all the others. The section men escaped. The wreck is a bad one.

Can't Cross the Canal.

Logansport (Ind.) special: Circuit Judge McConnell has rendered an opinion in the case of Shirk vs. Chicago and Indiana Natural Gas Company, sustaining the injunction and restraining the company from crossing the old Wabash and Erie Canal bed. The court held that it was apparent from the evidence that the purpose of the company was to take gas to Chicago, and inasmuch as the law only allowed them to condemn lands to supply the citizens of Indiana, they should not be permitted to make the condemnation. The gas company will appeal to the Supreme Court.

A Brave Woman.

A daring attempt at jail delivery was frustrated by a brave woman with a loaded rifle at Fort Worth, Texas. Ten negroes confined in the county jail made a break for liberty and overpowered the jailor. The jailor's wife grabbed a rifle and threatened to shoot the negroes if they did not return to their cells. The negroes sullenly entered their cells and were locked up.

A Missing Party Turns Up in Safety.

Winnipeg (Man.) special: Mr. White, a correspondent of Outing, who undertook to make a trip by canoe with his wife through the wilderness from Lake Superior by Rainy River to the Lake of the Woods, and who had been given up for lost, has been heard from. They have arrived at the settlements this side of the wilderness, and will soon arrive here.

Accidentally Killed His Baby.

John Hostetter, a well-to-do farmer residing near Lexington, Va., accidentally killed his 2-year-old baby. The child was asleep on the floor, covered with its fathers overcoat. The father, who had been lying on a bed near by, arose, and in doing so stumbled and fell upon the infant, his knees striking it in the abdomen, killing it instantly.

A Forger's Fate.

Edward Cantley, the Chicago forger recently arrested at Marion Ind., entered a plea of guilty and received a sentence of three years in State's prison. Cantley held policies in eight different accident insurance companies to the amount of over $30,000, and by forged papers secured from them an income of over $300 a week.

CENSUS-TAKER PORTER

REFUTES PORTER THE PROTECTIONIST SPOUTER.

Manufacturing States Growing Rich Four Times Faster than Farming States—Where Do the Farmers' Excessive Benefits from Protection Come In?

The Farmer Not In It.

Protection helps the farmer more than the manufacturer, say the high tariff cranks. Robert P. Porter, our protectionist Superintendent of the Census, for example, tells the farmer that "the direct benefits he receives from the protective tariff are far in excess of the benefits received by any other class."

If this astounding claim were true, Porter's census ought to prove it. A good protection census, made and manipulated in the house of its friends, ought certainly to illustrate the beauties of protection so clearly and in such large letters that the wayfaring farmer, though a fool, need not err in reading them. Our farmers have been voting for high protection for thirty years to build up a home market to consume their produce and thus benefit themselves.

Do Porter's figures show that the benefit has come? If the farmers get the great advantages out of protection that he claims, the census tables showing the growth of wealth ought to prove it. If we take a group of States in which manufacturing is the chief business, and other States which have an equal population and in which farming is the leading occupation, and make a comparison between the two groups to get at the rate at which the people in each are growing rich, we ought certainly to have the means to decide whether protection is helping the farmer more than the manufacturer.

One of these groups shall consist of the manufacturing States of Connecticus, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Vermont; the other of the great farming States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Ohio.

The population of the first group is given by Mr. Porter as follows:

Connecticut	764,278
Maine	661,086
Massachusetts	2,238,943
New Hampshire	376,530
New Jersey	1,444,933
Pennsylvania	5,258,014
Rhode Island	345,506
Vermont	332,422
Total	11,431,692

Mr. Porter has recently published figures showing how wealth increased in all the States from 1880 to 1890. In the eight States of the above group the increases are as follows:

Connecticut	$31,786,521
Maine	73,150,385
Massachusetts	569,377,824
New Hampshire	87,335,835
New Jersey	115,793,826
Pennsylvania	909,382,016
Rhode Island	69,227,810
Vermont	77,744,551
Total increase in ten years	$1,931,416,793

The figures for population and increase of wealth in the five farming States are as follows:

	Population in 1890	Increase in wealth, 1880 to 1890.
Illinois	3,826,351	$58,590,142
Indiana	2,192,404	55,666,995
Iowa	1,911,896	79,646,997
Wisconsin	1,686,880	153,918,968
Ohio	3,672,316	243,777,949
Total	13,289,847	$591,601,051

Let any farmer take out his pencil and divide the increase of wealth by the total population in each of these groups, and he will find that, while every man, woman, and child in the eight manufacturing States has $169 more money now than in 1880, the people in the great farming States average only $44 increase in wealth in ten years. The manufacturing States have been growing rich almost four times faster than the farming States.

These cold facts are proved by Porter's census. What then becomes of his nonsense about the farmer's excessive benefits derived from protection?

Porter the census-taker is doing a good service to the country in exploding the absurd claims of Porter the protectionist spouter.

Rich and Poor Under McKinleyism.

The figures of the Government show that the goods now coming in from Europe are, in many lines, high-priced goods, while the common and cheaper grades of goods are being excluded by the high tariff. For example, the carpet imported in the fiscal year 1890 came in at an average value of $1.16 a yard. The treasury report shows that the average value for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1891, was $2.08 a yard.

But the report gives a still more interesting insight into the workings of the McKinley duty. One part gives an extended comparison of the imports for the nine months from October 1890, to June 30, 1891, with those of the same months in the previous year. The McKinley tariff went into effect Oct. 6, last year, and the imports of carpets from Oct. 1 to June 30 were valued at $2.41 a yard.

The same thing is shown in cotton cloth. That which came in under nine months of the McKinley law was valued at 13½ cents a yard as against 11 2-5 cents for the corresponding nine months under the old law.

As the tariff is increased the poor are shut out from buying foreign goods; but the rich keep on buying them.

Buying Out Competitors.

Some years ago a prominent American manufacturer of screws made a contract with the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, of Manchester, England, to pay him the sum of $30,000 for keeping out of the American market. High prices in the protected home market were so important to this American firm that they were willing to pay hard cash to have this protection's precious market all to themselves.

This odd freak of protectionism has just been repeated in Germany. In that country there is a duty of $6.10 a ton on steel rails, and the manufacturers have a trust which keeps up prices quite after the American fashion. But one thing disturbed the high-tariff antics of the German rail trust. It was Belgian competition. But now peace reigns; the trust has paid the Belgian rail-makers $30,000 to keep out of Germany.

Protection manufacturers are a queer lot, always so miserably poor, always about to be ruined by foreign competition, and yet they can go deep into their pockets to buy off their rivals.

Who Is Paying the Tin Plate Tax?

McKinley's tin plate tax is getting in its work. A late number of the Iron Age, a prominent protection trade paper, gives the market quotations in New York and the cable report from London in the same time Bessemer steel plates, known to the trade as "IC coke finish," which is one of the most widely used grades, are quoted at $5.75 a box in New York and 13s. 6d. to 13s. 9d. in London. The English figures are equal to about $3.25. Thus the McKinley duty is keeping the price in New York $2.50 a box higher than in England. Of this difference $2.37 is the duty on a box of plates.

Meanwhile there is no immediate prospect that our much heralded political tin-plate mills are going to cause a decline in prices, as was promised so profusely. On the contrary, prices are tending upward. So the English will continue to buy tin-plates at $3.25 a box, while the American public will be compelled to pay $5.75 a box to amuse a few fellows who are experimenting in plates for use in Republican conventions and McKinley parades. What does the public think of it? Is it not rather costly fun? Roman candles, skyrockets and cannon crackers would be much cheaper.

WHY WOOL IS LOW.

The Rural New-Yorker on Wool Prices—The Curse of Shoddy.

The Rural New-Yorker, one of the most prominent agricultural papers in the United States, has undertaken to explain the low prices of wool, and it does so in such a way as to show that it has no sympathy with McKinley's humbug protection to wool-growers.

This journal attributes low prices here partly to the fact that prices are lower in the outside markets. But this can have nothing to do with the case, since, as pointed out by important trade journals, the kinds of Australian wool which our manufacturers have been buying in the London market have been fully as high this year as last. Owing to our high tariff our manufacturers can not afford to buy any foreign wool which contains much grease or dirt. They are shut up to the limited class of wools which shrink very little in washing and scouring, and this particular kind of wool has kept up in price in London. Landed here with the high r McKinley duty added it has actually cost our manufacturers more than last year. The lower price of wool abroad can, therefore, have no effect in reducing prices here.

The true explanation of the declining prices of wool is to be found in the following further remarks by the Rural New-Yorker:

"The great increase in the use of shoddy, the principal ingredient in which consists of woolen rags of all sorts from all parts of the world, has also had a depressing effect on the price of wool. While the new tariff raised the duty on shoddy fabrics to 300 per cent. for the benefit of the manufacturers, it left the duty on woolen rags unchanged—at 10 cents per pound.

"In 1870 there were imported 512,792 pounds of the refuse; in 1880, 1,388,233; in 1890, 8,622,209; and since the McKinley tariff went into effect the increase has been enormous. It is reasonably estimated that 41 per cent of the woolen fabrics now sold in the country consist of materials that are not wool, and the amount of adulteration is constantly increasing. Moreover, manufacturers insist that they must have a certain proportion of foreign wools to mix with domestic wools in order to manufacture fabrics to the best advantage.

"Consequently, when they pay heavy duties on imported wools, they are compelled either to reduce the wages of labor, to increase the price of their products, or to pay less for home-grown wool, in order to reimburse themselves for the tariff charges, and they say that they have always found it easier to lower the price of their raw material than to cut down the wages of their workmen or increase the price of their cloths. Hence the prices of domestic wools have gone down in spite of the increase of duties that was designed to put them up."

THAT TARIFF "SCOOP."

What It Costs to Make Glass Fruit Jars—Labor Gets Left.

The reading public has recently been interested in the story of how a New Jersey manufacturer of fruit jars made a clean gain of $200,000 through the action of the fruit jar trust in putting up prices to take advantage of the great fruit crop.

Gov. Campbell recently made some allusion to the great profits realized by the manufacturer of those jars, and his assertions were met by them with indignant protests. As the outside public naturally can know very little about the manufacture of fruit jars the manufacturers can put forth any kind of claims, and nobody unfamiliar with the glass industry can detect the imposition.

But the men who work in the glass factories know as much about the industry as the manufacturers themselves, and one of these, William J. Dillon, who is Secretary of the American Flint-Glass Workers' Union, has just made public a statement of great importance on the subject. This statement gives the cost of production, and it should prove of interest to the many housewives who were plundedred this year by the trust.

Mr. Dillon says the cost of making a dozen quart glass fruit jars is 52 cents, making very liberal allowances for labor, material, clerical hire, interest on investment, etc. Of this sum labor gets 10 cents a dozen. The manufacturer sells what cost him $6.24 a gross for $9 a gross. Then the middleman gets a slice for handling the goods, and, finally, the retailer sells off the jars for $13.20 a gross, or $1.10 a dozen.

What Mr. Dillon cannot understand is why the workingman should receive but $1.20 for his share of a gross, while the manufacturer gets $2.76 over and above interest, and why the manufacturer should have put the price up $2 a gross since the McKinley bill was passed and pocketed the entire advance, thus giving labor none of the benefits of increased protection.

The American Flint-Glass Workers' Union lobbied for the McKinley bill, but it is now getting its eyes open as to the true inwardness of protection. The workers see that it means higher profits for manufacturers, but nothing of the kind for labor.

Protection's Profits.

The protectionists always deny indignantly that our protected manufacturers and mine-owners make undue profits out of the tariff. The following from the Baltimore Manufacturers' Record, a prominent protectionist trade paper, will throw some light on the subject:

"Iron-ore mining in the Lake Superior region must yield extraordinarily large profits. The Lake Angeline Company, par value of the stock $25, pays a monthly dividend of $2 a share, nearly 100 per cent. a year. The Champion Iron Company's stock, par $25, is quoted at $87.50. The Chandler Company, par $25, is quoted at $37@39. The Jackson Company, par $25, with $90 bid for it. The Lake Superior, par $25, with $51 bid. The Lake Angeline, par $25, with $132.50 bid."

Companies whose stocks are selling at such figures are making fortunes out of the tariff, and they need "protection" no longer.

CANADA'S surplus wheat crop will amount to at least 50,000,000, more than twice as much as last year. Should the price be a shade lower for it than for our own crop, American millers can afford to import it in spite of the McKinley "protection" of 25 cents per bushel, for, having made it into flour, they will be entitled to a drawback of 99 per cent. of the duty on exporting it. The McKinley "protection" to American wheat-growers, therefore, in such cases amounts to only 2½ mills per bushel—a mere bagatelle.—Rural New-Yorker.

IN 1868, when a high protective tariff had just been put on wool in order to encourage wool growing, there were 2,591,000 sheep in Iowa. In 1890, after twenty-two years of protection, and after the population of the State had increased more than threefold, the number of sheep had fallen off to 475,000—a loss of more than two million sheep. The population of the State has increased threefold, the sheep have decreased four-fifths.

"LE BRAV'" EST MORT!

BOULANGER PUTS A BULLET IN HIS BRAIN.

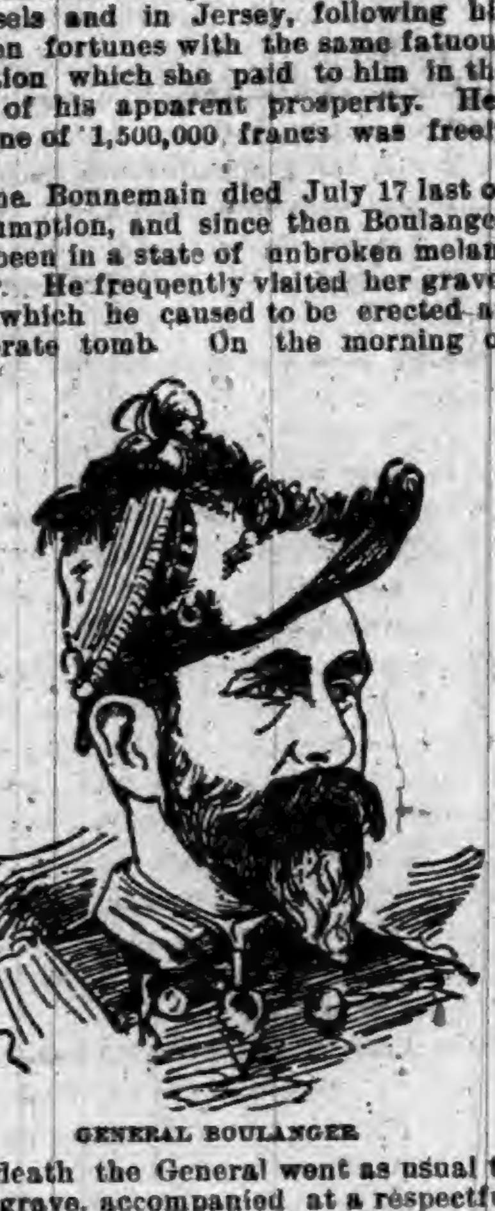
With Boots and Orders On—Theatrical Ending of the Great Impostor's Life—Story of His Successes and His Disgraceful Ending.

The End of His Tether.

The "brav' General," Georges Ernest Jean Marie Boulanger, ex-Minister of War of France, shot himself through the head at Brussels while standing by the grave of Mme. Bonnemain, the woman who had been known as his mistress since the stirring days of 1888. He fell forward on the grave, and was found by an attendant, who rushed instantly to the spot, quite dead. The ball had been fired into the suicide's left ear, and the revolver was still clinched in his right hand.

Mme. Bonnemain was the mistress of the house in the Rue de Berri, Paris, whither Boulanger resorted so frequently when he was at the top of his power. Though the place was constantly watched by spies it was from this house that Boulanger fled to England and with him went Mme. Bonnemain. She was his constant companion in London, in Brussels and in Jersey, following his broken fortunes with the same fatuous devotion which she paid to him in the days of his apparent prosperity. Her fortune of 1,500,000 francs was freely his.

Mme. Bonnemain died July 17 last of consumption, and since then Boulanger has been in a state of unbroken melancholy. He frequently visited her grave, over which he caused to be erected an elaborate tomb. On the morning of his death the General went as usual to the grave, accompanied at a respectful distance by one of the attendants still attached to his person. The attendant from his retreat heard the General giving way as usual to lamentations, but suddenly these were interrupted by the report of a revolver, and when he rushed forward he discovered his master's body bathed in blood



GENERAL BOULANGER

The suicide was evidently premeditated upon a truly theatrical scale The dead man was in full military dress, and on his heart were pinned all the medals he had received from France for bravery in the field. There was a letter also, but this was seized by the authorities, who declared it was of too serious political import to be made public except with the permission of the French Republic.

Brussels is in a state of excitement, and dispatches received from that city indicate that the same feeling prevails in Paris as well. In the absence of any interference (which is most unlikely), Boulanger will be buried where he fell—by the side of the woman who devoted her life and her fortunes to him.

Since the third Napoleon took possession of Paris upon that December night in 1851 no such attempt has been made, even in the South American republics, to establish the rule of the adventurer as that which was put forth by Boulanger in 1888.

His efforts to overthrow the French republic by means of a coalition of the Orleanist pretenders and the army seemed at one time upon the very threshold of success By marvelous intrigues with all parties except the representatives of Napoleon he managed to obtain money and influence enough to establish himself not only with the Paris rabble but with the clericals and peasants throughout the provinces At the elections of 1888 he seemed to be fully justified in issuing the famous manifesto in which he declared that France could now "congratulate herself upon having reached the hour of her deliverance." And indeed there were hosts of intelligent people throughout the world who had come to believe that parliamentary government was impossible for France.

Boulanger was born at Rennes in 1837. His descent on the maternal side is Welsh. In 1855 he entered the military college of St. Cyr and was made sub-lieutenant in 1857. He served under Marshal Randon in the Kabyle campaign. He also took part in the Franco-Italian war, and was wounded at the battle of Turbigo. In 1860 he obtained his full lieutenancy and two years later was promoted to a captaincy, having in the interim seen service in Cochin China. Just before the war of 1870 he became major. He was with Bazaine at Metz, but by some means escaped the fate of Marshal Bazaine's army, and made his way back to Paris. He was then promoted to a lieutenant colonelcy by the government of national defense and fought at Champigny (Nov 30 to Dec 2). After the suppression of the commune Boulanger's newly attained promotion was quashed by the grade revision committee, but was restored to him in 1874. In 1880 he became brigadier general. Being appointed to the command of the army of occupation of Tunis, Gen. Boulanger had a disagreement with M. Cambon, the resident general, and was recalled. He then held the War Office appointment of director of the infantry division and became Minister of War in 1886.

When M. de Freycinet resigned and was succeeded by M. Goblet (December, 1886,) Boulanger retained his portfolio; but on the fall of M. Goblet his name did not appear in the cabinet of M. Rouvier. Soon after this the General was dispatched to Clermont-Ferrend to take command of an army corps, receiving a great ovation at Paris on his departure. When the Limousin scandal broke upon Paris like a thunder clap General Boulanger commented very freely upon the war minister's conduct, and was immediately ordered under close arrest for thirty days at his own headquarters.

The goverment having decided in March, 1888, to cashier the General by placing him on the retired list, he inaugurated a vigorous campaign against the ministry. Vacancies shortly after occurred in the representation of Boulogne and the Nord. Here he was returned by 59,500 votes to 35,750 polled by the Opportunist candidate. In the Nord his triumph was still more remarkable, the number of votes polled for him being 172,528, against 75,901 for M. Foucart and 9,647 for M. Moreau. This was on the 15th of April, 1888, which, in a manifesto he issued to the electors, he declared would be marked in the annals of the country as a date of true deliverance. Subsequently his popularity waned.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

OR

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XXI.

JOE MEETS MR. PRATTY AGAIN.

At half past ten Monsieur Dufaur's bell rang.

"See! it is Mister Brown—or that boy!" said Madame Dufaur. "I know it!—I feel it."

Monsieur Dufaur ushered the clown, his cheery wife, and Dick into the room a minute later. Mrs. Brown was quick to perceive something was amiss.

"Are you not well, Madame Dufaur?" she said.

"O! Monsieur must tell you—I cannot."

"It is a very strange affair," said Monsieur Dufaur.

"Incomprehensible," said Madame.

"Inexplicable," added her husband mournfully.

"It is poor Joe—the child has disappeared."

"What!" exclaimed Dick. "Joe lost!"

"Since—it will be three hours since she went out," said Madame Dufaur.

"And which way did you send her?" asked the clown, with a serious face.

"O! 'twas but a little ways—only five minutes' walk. She has often returned in fifteen minutes—yes, less time."

There was a profound silence. Then the clown spoke.

"Whatever is done must be done quickly."

"What can I do? Tell me. I will do anything," said Monsieur Dufaur, holding out his hands.

"You—we must go to the police."

"I have been to see the police—I have told all—have described the girl."

"Well—did you tell them to exert themselves to their utmost?"

"I have said to them: 'Spare no pains, spare no means; I will pay liberally.' What more can I do? Yes, I can advertise in the papers. Then I am done. I can do no more."

"I can," said Dick, decisively.

They looked at him.

"Eh? You! What can you do?"

Monsieur Dufaur looked down on him with a look of wonder.

"I will go round and ask all the boys in the streets about here, and in the stores. I'll ask the policeman on this square. I'll keep asking till I find something."

"I guess you are right, Double Dick," said the clown. "That's business with a big B. But I can't help any, I'm afraid However, I'll see you can have plenty of time."

"It is a dificult task," said Monsieur, "still it is better than doing nothing. I am glad someone can do it. As for me, I can employ a detective. I did not think of that."

"That is business, too," said the clown.

Ben Brown had formed a plan he resolved to pursue on his own account, but he said nothing. So they separated sadly, Madame Dufaur grieving that she had permitted Joe to go out alone after dark, Monsieur Dufaur to employ a detective immediately, Dick to inquire of all the boys he encountered residing near at hand, while Ben went away to consult a friend whom he thought would assist in the search.

Meanwhile I will relate what befell Joe that evening.

Joe had performed the errand required of her and was returning home, when she was accosted by a poor woman who begged permission "just to speak to her." The woman looked so wretched that Joe's heart was touched.

"There is a little money—I'm so sorry I can't give you any more."

"O! thank you—but if anybody would come and see my sick child—if anybody would do something for her."

"Is it a girl?"

"Just like you, miss."

"Where do you live?"

"Just in here below—in a cellar."

"In a cellar!"

"Yes, and awful bad it is."

Joe was distressed.

"I can't do anything."

"No! but you might send some one—after I've took you to see."

"I'll go with you—now, but I can't stay a minute."

Thus it was that poor Joe's sympathies were played upon. The poor woman was employed simply to snare the girl. Poor Joe walked with both eyes wide open into the trap.

There are many such traps in all our large cities.

"Why, you said it was just here?"

"We'll be there directly; here we are now, miss."

The woman entered a dark passage; the next instant Joe felt a pair of hands around her mouth and throat, while a voice whispered in her ear:

"Keep quiet, or I'll murder you; try to scream or run, and it will be your last move."

But, notwithstanding this horrible threat, Joe struggled, freed herself, and opened her mouth to cry for help, when she received a blow that deprived her of consciousness.

When she regained consciousness she heard a man's voice, saying:

"I had to do it; she'd a brought some one down on us in a second. She's not hurt any. I didn't hurt her; just stunned her a trifle. It'll teach her a lesson."

"Yes; but if you hurt her Jenks will make a row, and you know it. You'd better 'fess up, and don't bring me in it."

"You're awfully afraid of Jenks; I'm not."

"Yes, you are, for all you blow so much."

There was more said, but Joe did not hear it. The voices were lowered. Evidently the speakers had discovered that she was conscious.

The name Jenks somehow impressed her.

Who was Jenks? Why were they afraid of Jenks? What was he like? Was it to please him she was brought there? These and other questions passed rapidly through Joe's troubled brain as she lay with her eyes closed, listening intently.

So the young man's warning was based on good grounds. Somebody was seeking to injure her, and it wasn't Mr. Caper, either. Oh, if she had only listened to that young Mr. Pratty!

What would Monsieur and Madame Dufaur think? What would they do? They might think she was an ingrate, and ran away the first opportunity that presented. They might think she was playing a part all this time. But, no! Surely—surely Madame Dufaur would credit her with more honesty!

"Poor Joe! Little did she dream of the commotion her absence caused in the domicile of the Dufaurs.

"Hello! You're not asleep?"

It was a harsh, coarse voice that addressed her, as a hand was placed on her shoulder.

Joe sprang upright as she said, with flashing eyes: "How dare you! No! I'm very wide-awake now. And you'd better be careful how you treat me, because I've friends."

"Friends, have yer!"

"Yes; friends who are able to punish people who ill-use me."

"Who's ill-using you?"

"None o' that now. You let the girl be, and what I told you, or you'll wish you had."

"Well—but I don't want her chinnin' me!"

Then a young man, with a sleek face and a manner that made Joe recoil, he was so snaky and sneaking, approached her, and in a low voice, designed to reassure her, said:

"Don't you be afraid, miss; this is a respectable house—we're the most respectable folks in the city. We wouldn't hurt a hair o' yer head. No, bless you, not for the world."

Joe felt precisely as you have felt when your hand came in contact with a toad. She drew back (she was reclining in a broken rocking-chair) and looked fearfully at the oily speaker.

"Do—do go away. If you don't mean harm, what did you bring me here for—let me go home."

"Well, we will by and by. You see—mind, I'm your friend—your true friend—this is a matter I'm not allowed to mix in. Same time I'll see no harm comes to you."

There was a sound in the adjoining room Joe recognized quickly—a clinking of glasses. She listened intently, but she did not distinguish any of the voices she heard in the next room.

Suddenly the two men left her, and a minute later a face—a face Joe recognized in the darkness—looked in at her.

It was the face of Mr. Pratty, the young man who had warned her of danger. Would he recognize her? The face came nearer—then Mr. Pratty spoke.

"It isn't—it cannot be the young lady I met at——"

"At Monsieur Dufaur's—it is. O, take me away at once!" Joe exclaimed.

"Sh!" exclaimed Mr. Pratty. "Sh! I must see that we are not observed."

Mr. Jenks, alias Pratty, put a hand to his head thoughtfully, after the manner of actors in melo-dramas, and leaned toward Joe.

"I never was so surprised in all my life—never!"

CHAPTER XXII.

THE LAW CLERK'S BOLD SCHEME.

Mr. Pratty advanced and spoke in a whisper.

"How came you here—who brought you here?"

There was a clinking of tumblers, and under cover of the noise Joe said in a rapid speech:

"I don't know—they hit me and stunned me—I don't know who, but I know their faces. They were here a moment ago."

"You are sure?"

"They just went out."

"Then they must be in the next room."

Mr. Pratty put a hand over his mouth, and leaning in a dramatic manner toward the door, to which one thumb pointed, he jerked the thumb significantly.

Joe nodded quickly.

"Humph? Well, it's lucky I came in here. I never am here—except on business. I'm a lawyer's clerk (he didn't say he was his uncle's), and I've got to go around hunting up witnesses in all kinds of places. This"—lowering his voice—"is a terrible place—for a young lady. Terrible."

"Can't you tell the police, or tell my friends, and they'll soon get me away—yes, and Monsieur Dufaur will punish them for it. They'll never meddle with any one again, if Monsieur Dufaur catches them."

"Yes, no doubt. But this is a ticklish thing. Awful ticklish. You see, the very moment I go out they'll take you somewhere else, and then how am I to prove I saw you here? Why, they'd swear through thick and thin they never saw you—never heard of you. And I'd be laughed at. No! I've a better plan than that. I'll pretend I know you—that you're a friend of mine, and in short, Miss, I'll just have to make believe I won't have no nonsense, because you are my particular favorite. See?"

Joe did not see, and said so very promptly.

"Why can't you make a row now, and then Ill run away and find the road home."

"They'd think nothing of settling my hash," said Mr. Pratty in elegant phrase, "and they'd be rougher with you. No. In the first place, I must find out who's at the bottom of this. I must find out who's paying them to do this, and all about it, in short. Then I'll spring a trap on them. Now, I'll slip out again, and if you don't see me soon you may be sure I'm working a plan to get you out of their clutches."

Then Mr. Jenks darted out quickly and Joe was left alone again. She looked eagerly about the room. There was no means of exit. There was but one door, and that led into the room where she heard loud voices and the clinking of glasses.

The time seemed interminable to poor Joe. In reality but ten or fifteen minutes elapsed, but Joe never could believe hours did not roll round before Mr. Jenks reappeared softly.

"I thought you had gone—I was sure you had gone."

"No. I was just getting to the bottom of this business. Now, listen to me. I'm a lawyer's clerk, as I told you. I know all about the law. There's somebody has a claim on you."

"I know—Mr. Caper, of Barnesville Poorhouse. O, I'll die—I'll kill myself before I'll go back there," Joe cried.

"Well, now, you may believe me or not; they can take you."

"Not if Monsieur Dufaur or Mr. Job Wonder knows it."

"You just listen a minute, then you'll see just how it is. In the first place—now don't interrupt me till I get through. In the first place, the poorhouse authorities can take you. I suppose you've an idea of that sort. In the next place, there's an old farmer who says he is responsible for you to that Mr. Caper, or to the authorities of Acorn County. It seems the old codger is in New York—now don't speak, wait till I'm done. Well, he's interested mightily. He'll lose, I guess, five hundred dollars if he can't produce you when Acorn County authorities demand you. So, he's anxious to get out of that fix. But it seems he's made a deal with the superintendent of the poorhouse like this: The old farmer's not to be known in it one way or other. He came to town and spied around—got policemen and detectives—found you out—then, instead of telling them to nab you—you see, to do that he would have to figure in it, and as near as I can learn, he's afraid his wife will make it warm for him if he gets his name in the papers—as it would; it couldn't help being printed when it comes into court, as it must. So he is pretty sly—awful sly is the old farmer—he finds a gang of fellows who will hold you till they get word to Zeke Caper, and he'll send on, or come on himself—more like he will come on to New York himself, and then, when he gets you back in Acorn County, why, no one will suspect the farmer's had a hand in it—and it leaves him out—no more responsibility on his shoulders."

"I don't believe it," Joe cried—but the doubts had entered the poor girl's heart—she did believe it—and the disillusion was more difficult to bear up under than the dread of encountering Zeke Caper again.

"Well—that's just all I learned—I believe it. It's clear enough to me, miss."

"It is Job Wonder—the man who was kindest to me."

"Ah. That's a pity, too."

"He—he—he," Joe was sobbing now, "called at Monsieur Dufaur's to-day."

"What!" exclaimed Jenks. He was not a bad actor—Ike Jenks' surprise seemed real.

"He called to—to—to tell us if—if anything happened me—so Madame Dufaur told me—to be sure and send him word, and he would do all he could to help me."

"Ah-h!"

Jenks' exclamation seemed to be final.

"That settles it."

"What settles it?"

"Why—don't you see? He knew beforehand, and how did he know? Because he had planned it. Then the cheek of the scoundrel—to go to your house and pretend he would help find you!"

Mr. Isaac Jenks, alias Pratty, was virtuously, furiously indignant at such treachery. He could not say enough ill of Job Wonder.

Poor Joe was abashed—dumfounded.

"The worst of it is, if you should manage to get back to Monsieur Dufaur's either Zeke Caper or Mr. Wonder—O, he is a wonderful sly Wonder, is he—either of them can walk right in, take you out of the house, and no one dare say boo. That's the law. Suppose Monsieur Dufaur or his wife is inclined to resist, well, then, they'll be arrested; and before they get out of the muss it'll cost 'em—well, knowing what I know, seeing what I've seen of interfering with law, if they get off with a hundred dollars apiece to two or three lawyers—and it'll take two or three sure, and two or three hundred to pay the folks about court—well, they'll be lucky."

"O, dear! That would be dreadful—all that money to pay just because they might want to help me!"

"O! You don't know nothing about it, miss. How can you. I know—because I'm in the law so much."

"I can't go back to Monsieur Dufaur's, if I could get away—I can't go anywhere! I don't know anybody. My God! What shall I do."

Joe bent her head and wept.

"I'll—I'll take something—I'll do something desperate—I'll never go back to the poorhouse—never!"

And Joe meant it.

Jenks saw it in her face, and it suited his vile purpose.

"They shan't take you back—I won't let them."

"But you said no one could prevent them—that nobody must interfere."

"O, no. I didn't say that, miss."

Joe looked at him in astonishment—hope lit up her face again. She smiled as she asked him, "Then what did you say?"

"I said Dufaurs dare not interfere."

"Well"— Joe's face became downcast again.

"There's just one way—only one." He looked at her very kindly, and winningly, as he thought. Joe thought he was very sorry for her.

"Well—what is it?"

The noise and laughter in the next room grew louder. Jenks continued.

"Why—if you were married nobody could touch you. Zeke Caper might have all the officers in Acorn County to back him—all the lawyers in New York, and you'd laugh at them if—if you had a husband. He'd make them stand back mighty quick. He would."

"Married!" Joe echoed the word scarcely realizing its meaning. "Yes, but I'm not married! So what's the use of telling me that?"

"But you could be."

He said no more. There was no need. Joe's quick eyes saw all he meant. She flushed scarlet.

"I understand."

The Reason Why He Married Her.

"No, sir, Jeff Nesbitt; ye don't a-courtin' me an' a-goin' weth Sal Trunnitt, too. Hit stops er we'uns stops. Thet's the word weth the bark onter it."

"Who keers, Sairy Hankinson? No woman dikates whut I does ner whut I don't. Ef yer wants ter saw off, saw off."

He took the ring she handed him as if it were a snake, walked to the creek bank in the moonlight and dashed it into the muddy waters with an angry fling. Three months later Samantha Trunnitt repeated virtually the same scene for virtually the same reasons. Again to the creek bank he strode and again in anger a ring hissed into the troubled waters. Again, some three months later, on Keziah Atwood's account, another ring was whirled into the yellow waves.

Then he married Pinky Hirst.

They sat by the open fireplace. He chewed. She smoked her pipe and cuffed the dog from the warm corners.

"Jeff," she faintly remarked, after a long silence, "hit's a dreffful time sence ye war kissin' me."

"Humph!"

"Jeff, ye hain't sot up close sence ye axed me."

"Humph!"

"Jeff, ye hain't onct called me yer hinky Pinky sence ye courted me."

"Humph!"

"Jeff Nesbitt, ye don't love me like ye used ter?"

"Humph!"

"Jeff'son Wash'ton Nesbitt, ye hain't er lovin' me at all."

"R-r-r-i-i-g-h-t!"

Her face fell still further, and her pipe went out with as deep emotion as a Cross Fork woman ever shows after her spanking days are past.

"Jeff," she faintly asked, "did ye merry me cuz I wer pooty?"

"Hain't blind."

"Jeff," still more faintly, "did ye merry me fer whut I bring yer?"

"Hain't cuttin' down big trees fer little coons."

"Jeff," very faintly, "did ye merry me ercount er Sal?"

"Nope—dern Sal!"

"Er Sairy?"

"Nope—dern Sairy!"

"Er Kezi?"

"Nope—likewise dern!"

A long silence. Pinky relit her pipe, kicked the hound, smelt a bit of bacon to see if it had soured, gained courage and forced the war.

"Jeff, ef yer didn't a-merry me fer love, er fer looks, er fer whut I hed, er fer them air gals t'rowin' ye over, whut the gashnashun did ye merry me fer, nohow?"

"I merried ye cuz I wer' tired er feedin' all ther dern mudcats in Cross Fork on rings—that's whut."

When She Changed Her Mind.

John Gladstone, the father of the ex-Premier of Great Britain, trained his children to give a reason for every opinion they offered. It was in this way that William E. Gladstone was early trained to debate. On one occasion, William and his sister Mary disputed as to where a certain picture ought to be hung. An old Scotch servant came in with a ladder, and stood irresolute while the argument progressed, but, as Miss Mary would not yield, William gallantly ceased from speech, though unconvinced. The servant then hung up the picture where the young lady ordered, but when he had done this he crossed the room and hammered a nail into the opposite wall. He was asked why he did this. "Aweel, miss, that will do to hang the picture on when ye'll have to come round to Master Willie's opeenion."

A Strong Case.

Judge, in Boston court—On what grounds do you apply for this divorce?

Mr. Beacon Hill—On the ground, your honor, of extreme cruelty and neglect.

Judge—Has the defendant anything to say?

Mrs. Beacon Hill (nee Harlem)—Your Honor, the only point of difference that ever arose between us was this: He wanted beans for breakfast seven times a week, and I thought six times was enough.

Judge—And you refused to let him have them the seventh?

Mrs. Beacon Hill—Yes, your Honor.

Judge—The Court grants the divorce, and cannot refrain from expressing its surprise that the application was not made before.—Boston Courier.

Force of Habit.

"It is astonishing how a habit becomes fixed on a man," remarked an electric-car conductor.

"Now what have you caught?"

"The driver, this morning, started out to the car with his stool and whip. He was informed that the stool was barred by the rules. He turned around and said: 'Well, I am going to have the whip anyhow.' The boys laughed at the idea of a driver undertaking to use a whip on lightning."—Columbus Dispatch.

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon; if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Delicate ladies, do not fail to use this great cure, because it will put the bloom of freshness and beauty upon your lips and in your cheeks, and quickly drive away your disabilities and weaknesses.

Old Settlers' Met.

There was an unusual reunion at the home of Nathan Fuller, near Newville Sunday, Oct. 4. That was the 55th anniversary of the arrival in this county, of a colony of 26 persons. They came from Warren, Trumbull county, Ohio in 1836. They were the Webster, Rose and the Coats families and Mathew Crooks, who now resides near Waterloo. Of this colony, but four survive. They are Mr. Mathew Crooks, Mrs. Nathan Fuller, Mrs. Laura Moore and J. E. Rose of this place. The latter went to the reunion from here and met there Mrs. Fuller and Mrs. Moore, but Mr. Crooks was absent. It was a notable meeting and the little band of four have a long backward view to the day the twenty-six left the Western Reserve, young and full of hope. It opens up a wide field for reflection.

THURSDAY.......OCTOBER, 8, 1891.

IN EARLY days, when we had no railroads, our fathers got but 3 or 4 cents a dozen for eggs, so we are told. That was because they had only a home market. As soon as we got railroads, prices went up, because we could sell in distant parts.

Mr. Brandon of the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works informs us that sales of their popular Road Machine, the Acme, have never been better than this year. And now, even after the summer's road work in this section has been finished, they are getting fresh orders from Southern Indiana where they can still do road work. This is a new feature. Speaking of road work, he recalled a piece of road up in Michigan, where they had put 79 days' work on three quarters of a mile, working with plow, etc., the old way. He then showed them the new way, and made a half mile of better road in one day of ten hours, with the Acme. They were astonished.

We have not met his wife, but are told, that like most of the old COURIER boys, he has secured a first-class helpmate. We are glad to hear it, for Mr. E is a worthy young man. They will live in Milwaukee where he is at work on the Sentinel.

The ladies of the L. L. C., had another nice entertainment Saturday evening. Mrs. Swarts had a fine supper prepared for them at the Hollister House at which about thirty were present. All unite in saying that friend Hollister is a capital cook. But Sherm blushes, and says he didn't cook a bit of it, but that they must give his women folks all the glory.

Charles Eckhart and wife have returned from a three weeks' trip in the east where they had gone partly for recreation and partly to attend a reunion of his old regiment, the 104 Pennsylvania. They visited Philadelphia, Washington, New York and other cities. At Washington, they accidentally met Charles McClellan, and had a brief chat with him. The trip was a pleasant one for both, but they return with the feeling that after all, there is no place like Indiana and DeKalb county.

Rev. J. N. Wilson came down from Fayette, Ohio, Monday, to look over business here. He says the Lake Shore road is still grading on their extension westward from Fayette, and he thinks that by Nov. 15 the iron will be laid to the point where they cross the Wabash just north of Alvordton. He does not know how far west the extension will be made. The road that has been running as far as Fayette for some years is the old Canada Southern, which the Lake Shore now owns, and which they now extending.

Charlie Crew was badly hurt last Friday at the mill where he was working, at Ripley, on the B. & O., west of Avilla. He was sawing lumber with the usual double buzz saws, and as the log was nearly done, he took up the ax to split off a piece of slab, the ax caught on a brace over his head, and this threw him in contact with the saw. One hand was cut off and the arm badly torn, and in some way his head got against the saw, which cut into the skull in several places. To make matters worse, he was in the mill alone and came near bleeding to death. His wife found him, but was not strong enough to carry him in, and it was some time before help could be got, and his wounds dressed. Dick Burniston of Garrett, who brought the news here, says it is hoped he may recover, but it is serious. A letter from Coroner Miser, who is a relative, says the arm was not amputated till next day, as he had lost so much blood.

Geary's show is back in Ft. Wayne again, and opened out for the season, Oct. 5. We see among his other attractions he has the man with the potato hands, a resident of Williams county, who was through here five or six years ago. His hands had grown full of bunches or knots, caused by a stroke of lightning, as he said.

How pretty the wreaths of smoke,
From the Union cigar doth rise;
Surely, it does great pleasure invoke,
And its qualities we dare not despise;—
Though burdened down with care,
As you take your choice from among them.
You can lots of ready comfort share,
If the Union cigar you do not condemn.

"The." Baker as he is called is a very popular fellow, one that everybody likes But they can laugh at a joke on him, as well as if it was on someone else Last Friday morning he came up the Clifton meat market where he works, at an early hour. He often comes up and works awhile before breakfast, while Mr. Clifton is at breakfast Then when the latter returns, goes over the creek to his home and takes his own breakfast. On this occasion he kept wondering what made Mr. Clifton so late, and finally told one of the customers that if Clifton did not return soon, he would lock up the market and go to breakfast anyway. Clifton still tarried and Mr. Baker, no longer able to bear the pangs of hunger, locked up and started home. He had got about to the laundry, when he suddenly stopped, and exclaimed, "By gracious, I've been to breakfast." And so he had, but had forgotten it. Like a faithful hand, he hurried back to the meat market, unlocked the door, and resumed the work of slicing off choice steaks for their hungry customers.

A LONDON, England, paper knowingly informs its readers that "Chicago is destined to become one of the greatest grain-growing States of the Union." Not so bad, after all, when it is remembered that Chicago seems bent on annexing all of Northern Illinois in order to keep ahead of Philadelphia and to overtake New York in population.

WHEN a woman begins to look tired out and old, why do people look at her husband as if they thought him a brute? He is not to blame. Every one must grow old some time, and when a woman reaches that time, there is no reason why people should look reproachfully at her husband. When the husband gets old and sick, they do not blame his wife.

THE President is not used to naming babies. He gave only one name—Marguerite—to the New York baby whose parents asked him to do the naming. Nearly everybody knows that a girl baby is entitled to two or three names, or even more. Why did not Mr. Harrison call the little thing Marguerite Araminta or Marguerite Arabella or Marguerite almost anything? Any old bachelor would have done better than Benjamin did in this case.

BRITISH justice is one of the most delicious things known to man. One of the latest cases which have attracted attention is that of a man in Jersey who was caught by the rising tide so that a boat had to be sent out to rescue him. Gilbert had better lay the scene of his next extravaganza in the Isle of Jersey.

THE sale of oleomargarine for butter has come to be a matter of general complaint. There is no question that the dairy interests suffer severely by this unfair competition. It is the business of the officials, both Federal and State, to enforce the laws concerning the sale of oleomargarine, and any failure to do so will not be overlooked by the public. No one wants to pay for butter and be given oleomargarine instead. The swindle can be stopped by the proper authorities.

THE country will watch with a great deal of interest the fight which the citizens of Baltimore are now waging to secure lower telephone rates. If they prevail the effort to reduce tolls to a more equitable basis will spread to other parts of the country. THE modern dime museums in their mad race for queer freaks and curious wonders might take a hint from an advertisement in The Flying Post, of London, July 20, 1699, reading: "The man that ate the live cock at Islington, and another since, on the 15th of June last, at Stand-up Dicks at Newington Butts, near the borough of Southwark, is to eat another there on Tuesday next, being St. James' day, with the feathers, bones and garbage. Any person may see it performed, paying but two pence for their admittance."

THAT bumptious sillybilly sheet, Bradstreet's, is getting "sot down on hard" by the Chicago Daily Trade Bulletin, the New York Produce Exchange Reporter and other well-informed journals. Bradstreet's absurd crop figures are shown by its contemporaries to be absolutely valueless and unreliable. Amateur crop-guessing appears to be the principal occupation of Bradstreet's, and in that line it has broken its own record during the past year. The trade no longer place any reliance upon its bungled and confused maunderings over the crops.

AUSTRALIA seems to be giving the world an object lesson in the effect of strikes which it were well to heed. Recent travelers report that cotton is rotting unpicked, rich mines of gold, silver and tin cannot be worked, and that not because laborers are dissatisfied or have any reason to be, but because the professional agitators play on the cupidity and the indolence of the workingmen, clamoring for the undertaking by the Government of important public works, although this means borrowing money from England for the sake of employing men who refuse the employment now offered them and who are ruining the colony by their obstinacy.

THEODORE STANTON, whose articles in the Westminister Review on Abraham Lincoln are attracting so much favorable attention, is not "an English writer," as has recently been said, but an American, born and bred. He is a son of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton. He has lived for some years in Paris, where he holds a high position, and is married to a French wife of exceptional literary and social gifts. Nor is he a newcomer in literature. Seven years ago the Putnams published a volume of which he was designer, editor and part author, "The Woman Question in Europe," a large and comprehensive work exhibiting the status of woman in all relations in all European countries. Most of the chapters were written by eminent women belonging to the countries which they represented. Mrs. Stanton has a daughter, Mrs. Balch, married to an Englishman and living in London. Despite age and infirmity she frequently visits both her children, and is always, physically and intellectually, an impressive and welcome figure in the two great capitals.

Misunderstood the Motive.

Most men are never so happy as when their heels are higher than their heads. If you said to a piazza group, "Make yourself unreservedly comfortable," they'd all tilt their chairs back and hoist their feet to the railing. My friend next door had the foot-hoisting habit so badly that he wore the paper off the wall; so his wife thought out a biting, caustic bit of sarcasm, and one morning nailed on the wall right where the tell-tale marks were, a pair of slippers. But he misunderstood the motive completely, kissed her for her thoughtfulness, and forthwith tilted his chair back, and up went his feet to the most comfortable attitude he had struck in a long time, his heel held in the very convenient slippers.

Good Reason.

Tramp—Please, sir, give me a quarter.

Lawyer Howe—A quarter? Why do you ask me for a quarter?

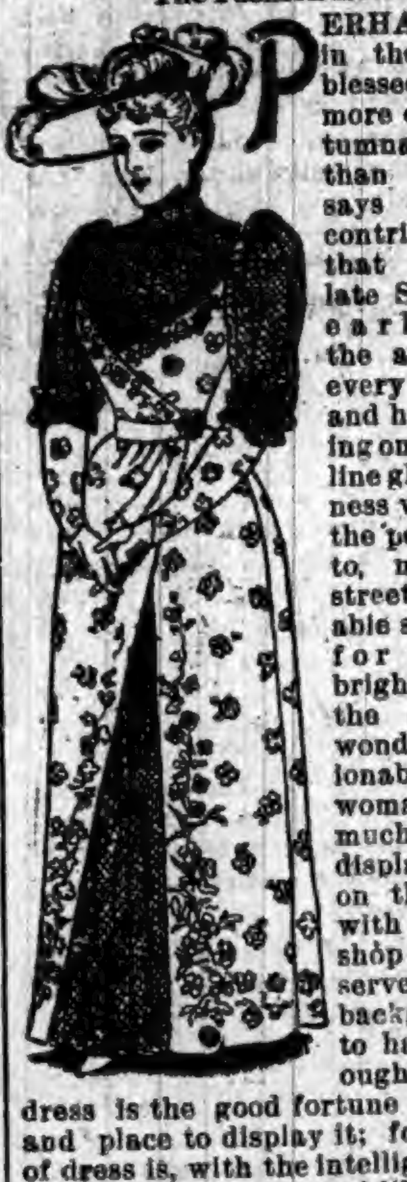
Tramp—Because I didn't like to ask you for half a dollar for fear you wouldn't give it to me.—New York Herald.

WHAT WOMEN WEAR.

FASHIONS CRAWL INTO POPULARITY SLOWLY.

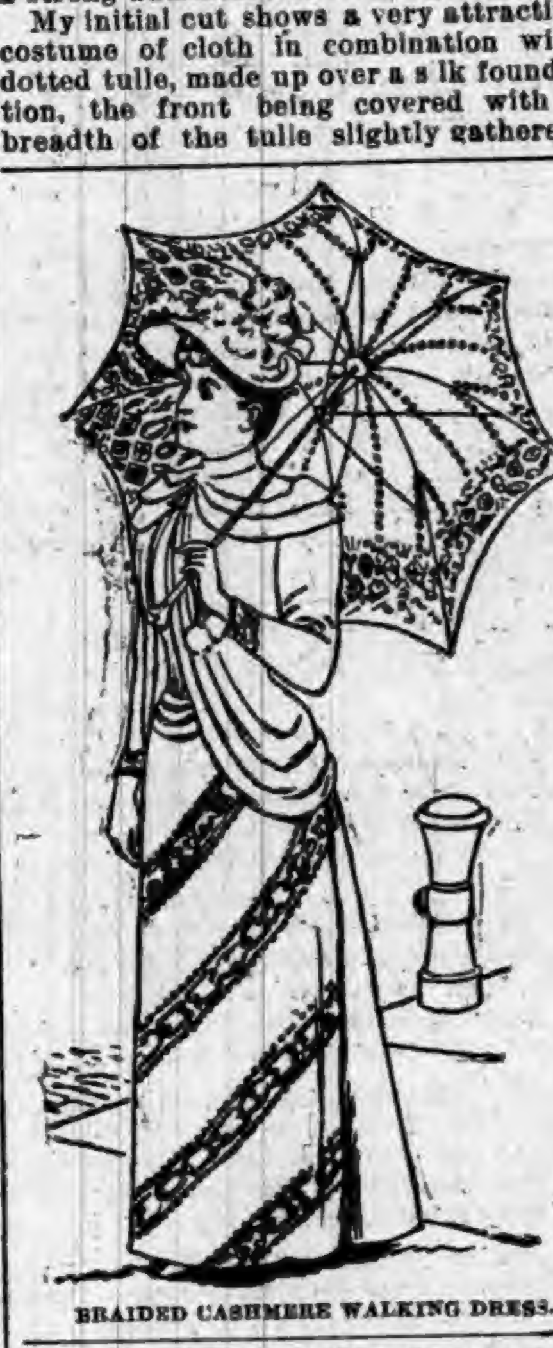
Among Street Dresses This Season the Artistically Designed and Well-Fitting Tailor-Made Continues to Hold First Place—For Afternoon and Evening Flower-Figured Foulards Are All the Go.

The Fashion Review.



PERHAPS no city in the world is blessed with a more charming autumnal season than New York, says our weekly contributor from that city. From late September to early November the air parts with every trace of haze and humidity, taking on that crystalline glow and crispness which, during the period referred to, makes its streets such admirable show grounds for the warm bright toilets of the season. No wonder the fashionably dressed woman finds so much pleasure in displaying herself on the sidewalks, with the gorgeous shop windows to serve as an artistic background. Next to having a thoroughly becoming dress is the good fortune to have time and place to display it; for this matter of dress is, with the intelligent women of fashion, a real art, and like her brother artist of pen or pencil, when the picture is complete she longs to exhibit it. And I must say if the world knew what study, what labor, what genuine toil is necessary to achieve these triumphs of personal adornment, it would not be so chary of its admiration. Madam Roland in her toilet of death was scrupulously exact in the arrangement of her gown and fichu, and Beau Brummell went to his lamentable end with an almost heroic determination to be the well-dressed man to the very last. Call it vanity if you will, but it seems to me that it has a strong admixture of self-respect.

My initial cut shows a very attractive costume of cloth in combination with dotted tulle, made up over a silk foundation, the front being covered with a breadth of the tulle slightly gathered.

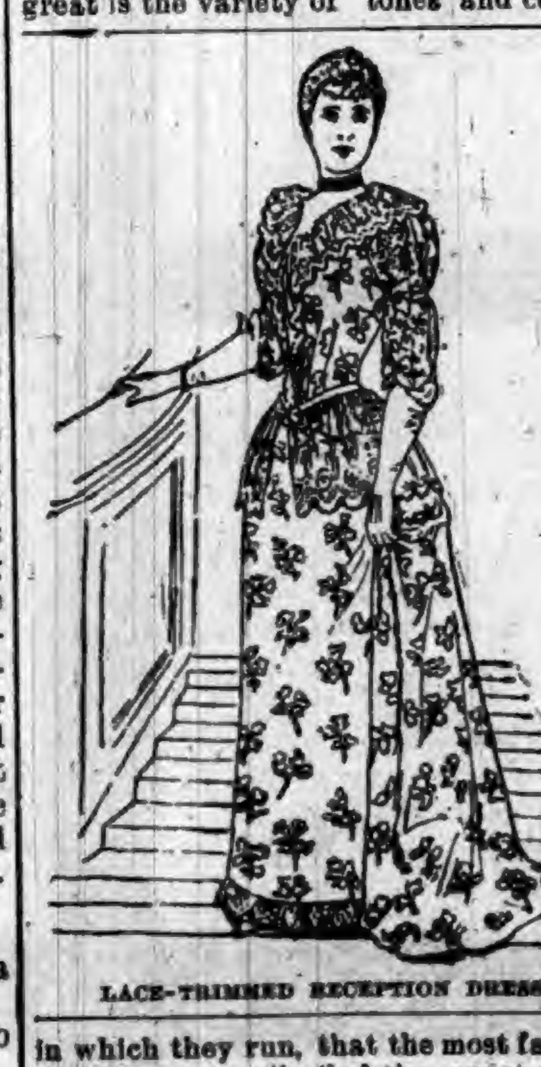


BRAIDED CASHMERE WALKING DRESS.

The corsage of tulle is made up on a fitted lining. The right side of the corselet crosses over the left, and there is a ceinture which closes at one side with a rosette. The pleatings of the tulle corsage are so arranged as to conceal the opening in front. Upper sleeves of the tulle, lower of the dress material, ending with a point on the back of the hand.

Among street dresses, the artistically designed and well-fitting tailor made will continue to hold first place, especially as the season advances and a foretaste of winter warns us to unite so far as practicable the useful and the beautiful, for that seems to be the mission of the tailor-made dress. I saw a very pretty one the other day in dark-blue serge, the coat being open in front and showing a vest of tan cloth, evidently fastened from behind and fitting the figure like a glove. Around the collar and the bottom of the vest there was a broad band of gold braid. A very small blue felt hat with yellow ribbons was designed to be worn with this extremely tasteful toilet. For those who prefer dressy effects to the severe style of the tailor-made, I would commend such a promenade toilet as is pictured in my second illustration—an India cashmere garnitured with chevrons laid on with narrow braid or in passementerie. The corsage is finished at the back in pleated basque dress-coat style. At the front and sides the corsage is draped in paniers. There is a faille vest which is slightly gathered at the neck and at the waist, and there is a draped ceinture.

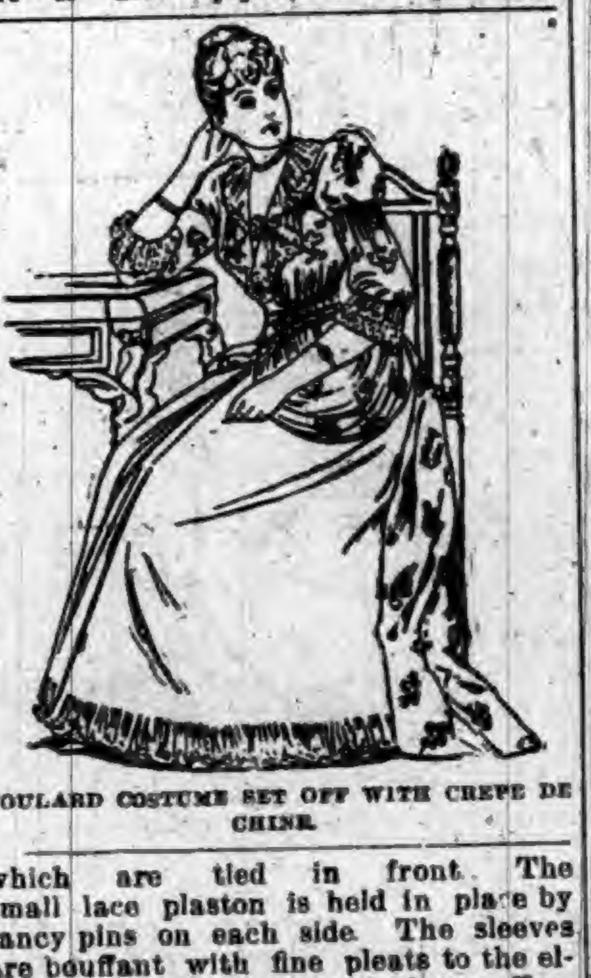
For afternoon or evening reception dresses nothing can be prettier than flower-figured foulards in combination with lace. Such costumes have an air of distinction quite their own and so great is the variety of tones and colors in which they run, that the most fastidious eye may easily find the exact shade desired.



LACE-TRIMMED RECEPTION DRESS.

In my third illustration you will find pictured a lovely interior costume made up in flower-figured foulard and richly garnitured with lace. The dress has no foundation. It is trimmed on the bottom, as far as the back breadths, with several rows of velvet ribbon and a lace ornament arranged in scallops. The corsage, which is made glove-tight, extends a little below the waist line and has lace basques, which are gathered on the stuff and arranged in a large hollow pleat at the back. The deep cut-out is framed with a broad lace volant extending down the front in a double coquille, which serves to hide the opening of the corsage. The cut-out has a piping, the strings of which are concealed under the lace.

Everywhere I hear predictions of a very brilliant season this fall and winter. The metropolis is being rapidly and thoroughly furbished up, and hand in hand with the public diversions will go the luncheons, teas, small dances, card and dinner parties, and literary receptions at the private residences, and I'm inclined to think that you will not take it amiss if I set before you still another reception toilet as I do in my fourth illustration. This is a combination costume of plain and figured foulard, the corsage being made up on fitted linings and garnitured with volant of crepe de chine, pleated and sewed on in such a way as to form a coquille. The front sides have only one dart, made in the lining at the same time it is made in the stuff. The ceinture is of open work gold galloon, lined with silk, boned and fastened on the side under a bow. The ceinture must have a piping in order to keep it from stretching. The cut-out is also piped, the cords of which are tied in front. The small lace plaston is held in place by fancy pins on each side. The sleeves are bouffant with fine pleats to the elbow and ornamented with lace ruffles. The skirt of the plain foulard has a lace flounce in front, with one breadth of the figured foulard at the back. The paniers are gathered and sewed on the waist. The pleated back breadth is fastened to the waist by means of a hook and a narrow band of the material. It need hardly be added that to bring out the full beauty of this costume there must be artistic harmony between the colors of the plain and figured stuffs.



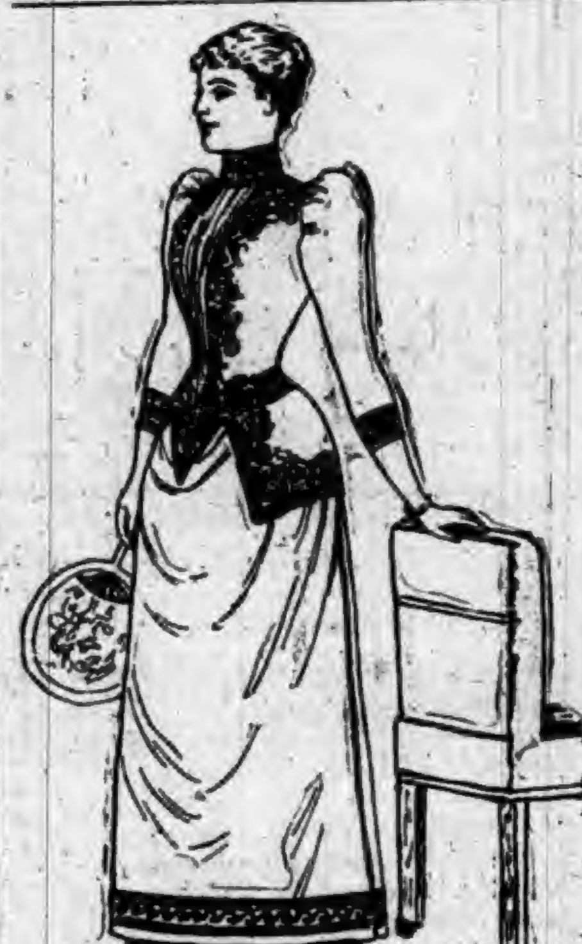
FOULARD COSTUME SET OFF WITH CREPE DE CHINE.

I noticed the other day what seemed to me to be an almost startling novelty, it being nothing more nor less than real men's braces in gold galloon to be worn over a chemisette and under an open vest. No doubt this bit of eccentricity will find some who will like it. Such novelties, although they may startle us at first sight, yet the moment there is evidence of any general adoption of a new mode, it at once loses all its look of strangeness and exaggeration. The fact of the matter is, fashions rarely come with a sudden leap. They crawl into popularity so slowly and so cat-like that we don't notice their advance.

I don't think I ever saw more exquisite woolen fabrics than those which are now spread so temptingly on the counters of the large dealers. They are as soft as silk and most delightful to the feel. I see delicious shades of gray-blue, which make up charmingly for street dresses and look particularly stylish when embroidered with steel.

My last illustration presents such a costume. It embodies the very perfection of style in make and application of garniture, which is so artistically proportioned that the dress has that air of complete harmony and balance which always characterizes the well-dressed woman.

A pearl-gray ribbed cloth makes a very pretty street dress for a young girl, made up with a jacket opening on a vest of old blue faille. The vest is cut out V-shape, and shows a plastron of crepe de chine with a straight collar of the same material. The open jacket has revers which run into a turn down collar. These revers may be made in plain gray faille or of the woolen stuff with imitation button holes.



TAILOR-MADE, WITH STEEL EMBROIDERY.

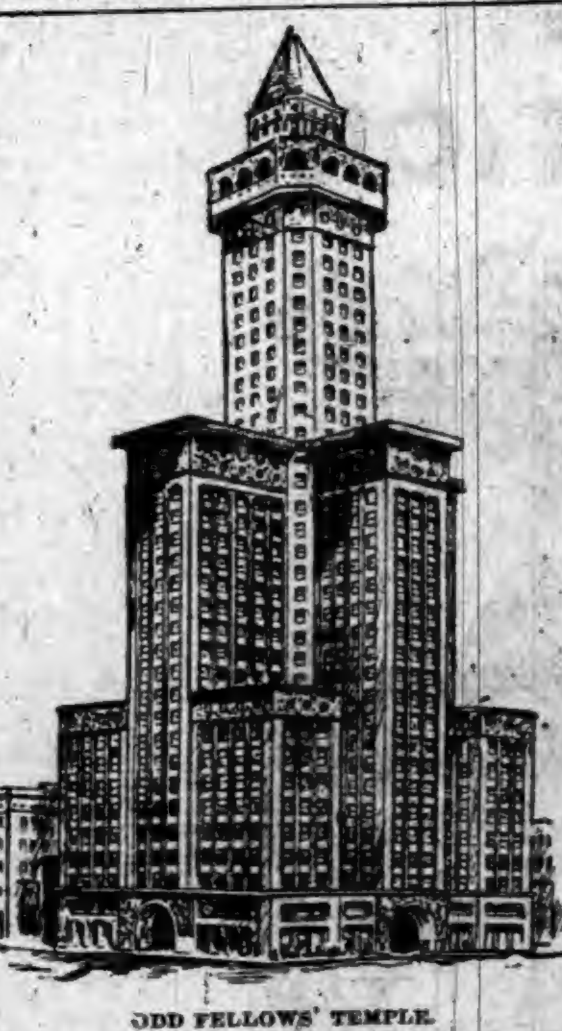
A half-mourning costume which struck me as having an air of great refinement about it was made up in black cloth with a border of English crape five inches deep at the bottom of the skirt. There were large revers of crepe running to points at the waist line, collar slightly flaring, bouffant sleeves, with crape cuffs. The skirt was made quite plain in front, with fan pleats at the back. The corselet skirt will no doubt become very popular, especially for graceful, slender figures. It gives the costume the same effect as the princess form, and a good fit may be more readily obtained than with the latter trying form of dress.

THE buttermilk fiend is out with another eulogy. "There is nothing," he says, "in the line of simple drinks which exercises a more beneficial influence on the general health. It is at once food and medicine. The lactic acid that it contains acts on the whole digestive system, while as a food it has already undergone a semi-digestion in the churning to which it has been subjected. Physicians are every day increasing the amount of it that they prescribe for their patients, and in cases of liver and kidney disease it is invaluable. Instances are numerous of person afflicted with Bright's disease living for many years in comparative comfort with no other medicine than a daily supply of buttermilk."

TALLEST IN THE WORLD.

The Illinois Odd Fellows' Building to Beat Them All.

And now the Illinois Odd Fellows propose to out-do the Masons, and, in fact, everybody else. They say their new Chicago temple is to be one of the biggest, best and most beautiful buildings in America. Plans and specifications have been prepared, and all that is needed is to select one of the many sites which the building committee has under consideration. The temple will be so constructed as to serve the purpose of an office building as well as a society rendezvous. It will be thirty-four stories high and will be so peculiarly constructed as to have windows in every apartment facing the light. The main portion of the building will be twenty stories high, the tower constituting the remaining fourteen stories and rising to a height of 556 feet. The area of the site will be 43,000 square feet, and the broad base 177 by 210 feet, will cover the entire tract to a height of thirty feet above the sidewalk. The "breaks" and deep recesses of the long facades are so formed as to admit air and light to the building, and also to give a diversity of outline.



ODD FELLOWS' TEMPLE.

The tower, it is said, will be easily visible from Michigan City, La Porte, Aurora, Elgin, Waukegan and points sixty miles distant. It will not be built merely as a curiosity. While its design will be artistic, business-like consideration will not be lost sight of, for within it will be run no less than eighteen elevators, in addition to four main stair cases, which will lead to 192 offices, all in the tower proper and above the roof level of the building. Discontinuing the terminal bays above the tenth story will prevent the throwing of shadows into the lower offices and will develop the element of progressive recessions from base to pinnacle, which constitutes an interesting feature of the design. The terminals, as the plan shows, serve as buttresses for the long arms of the cross, which is the typical characteristic of the plan.

It is intended that twenty-four lodge rooms and public halls shall occupy the third, fourth, fifth, sixth and tenth stories, the great drill hall occupying the whole of one end of the tenth story, and measuring nearly 8,000 square feet in area. The remainder of the building will be available for business purposes. The entire number of rooms available for rental, exclusive of the halls and lodge rooms, will be 1,100, and their aggregate area will be over 250,000 square feet, while including lodge rooms and public halls, the area inclosed, exclusive of walls, partitions, corridors, etc., will be 350,000 square feet. The design of the superstructure involves the use of riveted steel pillars and steel girders, immovably knit together at all joints, vertical as well as horizontal, by steel or iron rivets, and a system of diagonal wind-braces of steel so thorough and all-pervading that, re-enforced by the masses of masonry which will surround the pillars in the lower parts of the structure, there will be attained that combination of masonry and skeleton construction required for successful resistance to the wind strains to which so high a building will necessarily be exposed.

All the structural iron and steel will be surrounded by non-conducting, fire-resisting inclosures; the fillings between floor beams and between pillars will all be of non-combustible material, stairs and elevator guides and inclosures will be of metal, hall and corrider floor will be of mosaic, and to the remotest detail of the erection of this building it will embody, it is said, the best architectural practice of the day and every advance and improvement upon the same that can be discovered before the execution of the work.

Good Health Catching.

Bob Ingersoll being asked how he would have improved upon the laws of nature, replied that he would have made health "catching" instead of disease! Thousands of his admirers have laughed over this witticism, ignoring the fact that nothing in all this world is one thousandth part as contagious as health. Both in the animal and vegetable kingdom, generation after generation is constantly inheriting it! That which we get by "catching" it is the rare exception.

The Human Face.

A German biologist says that the two sides of the face are never alike. In two persons out of five the eyes are out of line; one eye is stronger than the other in seven persons out of ten, and the right ear is generally higher than the left.

Somebody Is Always Willing.

Binks—Did you see that disagreeable paragraph about Jenks in the paper yesterday?

Jinks—Yes. I wonder if Jenks has seen it. Somebody surely ought to show it to him.—Somerville Journal.

THERE is a hotel in Boston that is frequently mistaken for a church by strangers who pass one of its entrances. At the end of the corridor, and visible from the street, there is a peculiar feature of the stairway which, from a little distance, resembles the pipes of an organ.

SPECIMEN TESTIMONIAL.

Gentlemen:— WHEELING, Feb. 10, 1891.

Early last fall I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs. I coughed dreadfully and lost flesh rapidly until advised to try Sangole, which I did with the most gratifying result.

After taking three bottles my cough ceased and I found that I had gained six pounds in weight. I most heartily recommend it to sufferers of loss of flesh from any cause. Respectfully,

WHEN Mr. David Dear (winner of the Queen's Prize at Bisley this year) was a law student, he once attended an "at home." On the servant asking his name, he replied, "David Dear." The girl blushed and said: "Yes, yes; but what is your other name, sir?" He assured her that he had no other name. But it was of no use; the servant knew better, and announced him as "Mr. David."

Faith in Prayer.

A little Detroit girl of 4 years of age has been taught to pray for all kinds of blessings and help. The other day she was guilty of some act of disobedience for which her mother took her up stairs to punish her with considerable severity. The little girl had been there before and knew what was coming. On the way up stairs with her mother she knelt down, put her little hands together and lifted them in supplication.

"O, Lord," she said, "I'm going to catch it. If you ever do anything for little girls, please Lord, now's the time."

Then she arose and followed her mother, who, in order to increase her little daughter's faith in the efficacy of prayer, let her off that time.—Free Press.

A Clever Little Boy.

It is hardly decided whether Whittie, when he becomes a man, will be a minister or a horse-jockey, for he plays preacher sometimes all day; then, perhaps for a week, plays nothing but jockey. People say he might be both, but mamma thinks the jockey is going to win. He is called Whittie because his name is Whitney, and one gets dreadfully tired pronouncing the "n" when he is called so many times a day.

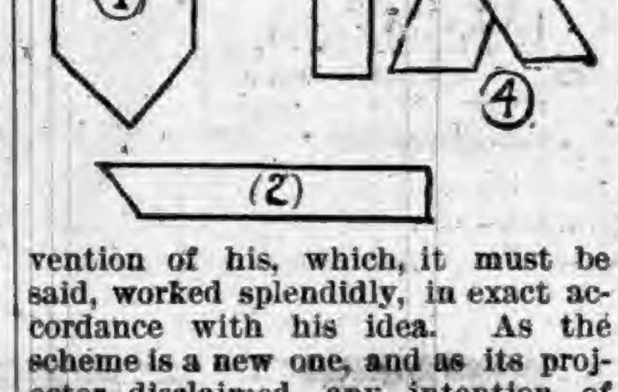
When he was sick with the grip he drew horses as long as his little fingers could hold the pencil and every one who called on him was expected to try his or her skill at sketching also.

Whittie has a cousin Willie, and they study one hour every day. If mamma spells they can write letters. Whittie writes: "Please make me a horse" to every one he knows, and if he does not get an immediate reply he follows up the letter with this one: "What keeps you so long with that horse?" Mamma spends all her pin money buying stamps for Whittie's correspondence. He has gone to the country now for the summer, where he rides a real live pony and has two white rabbits with pink eyes, and two black and white kittens that haven't their eyes open.

Tommy says Whittie talks slang. Whittie's speech is funny, for he has not yet learned to give the long sound of a or o, and instead of saying "I fell into a hole," or "What do you say?" he says "I fell in a howl" and "What d' you si?"—New York Recorder.

A Rainy-day Toy.

After one of the heavy showers the other day on the south side of Canal street, about midway between Hudson street and the North River, there had formed quite a good-sized pool of water, held in check by a quantity of mud and several bricks placed in the gutter by a bright-eyed youngster. The object of the dam so formed was to afford the young inventor an opportunity of testing what appeared to be a rough model of a recent invention of his, which, it must be said, worked splendidly, in exact accordance with his idea. As the scheme is a new one, and as its projector disclaimed any intention of having it patented, it is given to the young readers that they may try their skill at boat building on a plan which involves neither mechanical ability, capital, nor a great expenditure of time. There need be no excuse for not having an enjoyable afternoon, even if the streets are wet, as this is a rainy-day toy.



The way in which the boy in question had constructed his self-propelling boat was very simple. He took the bottom of an empty cigar box, knocked all the nails out, and had then, with the aid of a broken-bladed pocket-knife, cut it into this shape:

After this he took one of the side pieces of the box, cut it half lengthwise, and bevelled off the end, forming a keel like this:

This he then nailed to the bottom of the flat board, exactly in the middle, in such a manner as to make the keel and the bottom form right angles. The most difficult part of the boat was then commenced—the manufacture of the paddle. Taking the remaining half of the side piece he had used for the keel, he cut it in half crosswise, and then in the middle of each piece made a groove, so as to allow the other piece to fit in snugly. The groove was made to go only half way through, so that when the other piece was fitted in it did not lap over on the other side. When these two pieces were put together they formed the four-bladed paddle shown in the cut.

This completed the difficult part of the work, and the boy was by this time surrounded by quite a group of his playmates. Some of them were curious to know what the queer-looking affair was to be, but to these he gave rather curt answers, telling them to wait and see. It was evident that they had watched him doing some whittling before, because they seemed to think it would pay them to wait, and quietly sat down on the curbstone.

Taking a good, strong rubber band from his pocket, the embryo naval constructor placed it over the paddle in such a way that each side of the band was between two of the blades of the paddle. Then he placed the ends of the bands over the stern of the boat and caught each end in the groove he had cut for the purpose, which is shown in the cut. Now the boys were all attention. The paddle was then wound around and around until it seemed as though the rubber would break if it were turned the least bit more. Advancing to the edge of the pool, the youngster placed the boat in the water, and then let go of the paddle and the bow at the same time. As the paddle was released, of course the rubber began to untwist, and thus moved the paddle with sufficient force to send the little craft to the end of the ten-foot pool. It was quickly caught up here and headed the other way, and had just reached the starting-point when the rubber had spent its force.

As the boat sailed away there went up quite a cheer from the audience of small boys, and the inventor had to repeat the operation any number of times. They did not hesitate to commend their ingenious playmate, and each one immediately set about finding the material to construct one of the simple toys himself.—New York World.

The Joys of Tooth-Pulling.

The Medical Battery Company in Oxford street, more widely known as the Electropathic and Zander Institute, has introduced a new feature in dental and surgical operations. An operating chair of the best and most approved type is provided with a battery and Faradaic coil, whereby a smart current of electricity is generated. The battery and coil, and the apparatus connected therewith, are arranged in a closed space under the seat of the chair, and the current is excited when required, or turned off, by means of two thumbscrews at the back of the chair, which respectively actuate by levers the proportional immersion of the zinc plate in the battery cell and the withdrawal of the sheath from the core of the coil. Thus, the quantity and tension of the electric current is determined. This current is connected by two electrodes fastened into the ends of the two arms of the chair. The patient, being seated, takes hold of the electrodes with both hands, when he experiences the usual galvanic sensations. So soon as he has become accustomed to the action of the current, which has a deadening effect on pain, the operator puts his foot on a pedal, which, by means of a weighted lever, shunts the current to the reophore, or cord, attached to the forceps or operating instrument. As soon as the forceps touch the tooth to be extracted, the circuit of the current is established through the body of the patient. The galvanic action thus brought directly on the nerve of the tooth deadens the local pain, and permits extraction without suffering.

Some patients have been already operated on, and a successful future appears to be promised for this novel process. For other surgical performances, the like local application of the galvanic current can be similarly applied, and the use of electricity may very likely become a widespread substitute for the powerful and less safe anæsthetics at present so largely employed. The neatness and unobtrusiveness of the galvanic appliances and the means of employing them are not the least commendable features in the invention.

The Faithful Dog of Helvellyn.

A monument has been erected on Helvellyn (a mountain of Cumberland, England, 3,300 feet high) to the memory of Charles Gough, who, in the year 1805, was killed by falling from the high crags on the ridge that joins Striding Edge to the Summit; and of the faithful dog that for three months watched over her master's remains. Sir Walter Scott describes the event in the poem, "I climbed the dark brow of the mighty Helvellyn," and Wordsworth records it in his lines on "Fidelity."

The young man was returning to Wythburn, where he lodged, from a fishing excursion in Patterdale. The accident was probably caused by a false step, during a blinding hailstorm or a dense fog that day. It happened on April 18, and on July 20 his bones were found, still watched by the starving dog, a little yellow, rough-haired female terrier. She had given birth to puppies, which were found dead by the side of the corpse. It is believed, though unable to secure enough food for milk for her young, she maintained life by bits of carrion sheep which are not unfrequently found on the hills; but she might have had to range far and wide during her three months' watch. The mere fact that the bones were found intact serves to prove the assertion that the dog did not touch the remains of her master, for dogs break the bones to suck the marrow. This animal died a few years afterward at Kendal.

The merit of the suggestion to erect this monument belongs to Miss Frances Power Cobbe, whose design has been carried into execution by the aid of the Rev. H. D. Rawnsley, Vicar of Crosthwaite, both names of some repute in literature.—Hearth and Hall.

Puzzled Frenchman.

Inappropriate words, says an exchange, may convey the meaning unmistakably, without being in accordance with the English idiom. A Frenchman, while looking at a number of vessels, exclaimed, "See what a flock of ships!" He was told that a flock of ships was called a fleet, but that a fleet of sheep was called a flock.

To assist him in mastering the intricacies of the English language, he was told that a flock of girls was called a bevy, that a bevy of wolves is called a pack, but that a pack of cards is never called a bevy, though a pack of thieves is called a gang, and a gang of angels is called a host, while a host of porpoises is termed a shoal.

He was told that a host of oxen is called a herd, and a herd of children is called a troop, and a troop of partridges is termed a covey, and a covey of beauties is called a galaxy, and a galaxy of ruffians is called a horde, and a horde of rubbish is called a heap, and a heap of bullocks is called a drove, and a drove of blackguards is called a mob, and a mob of whales is called a school, and a school of worshipers is called a congregation, and a congregation of engineers is called a corps, and a corps of robbers is called a band, and a band of locusts is called a crowd, and a crowd of gentlemen is called the elite.

The last word being French, the scholar understood it and asked no more.

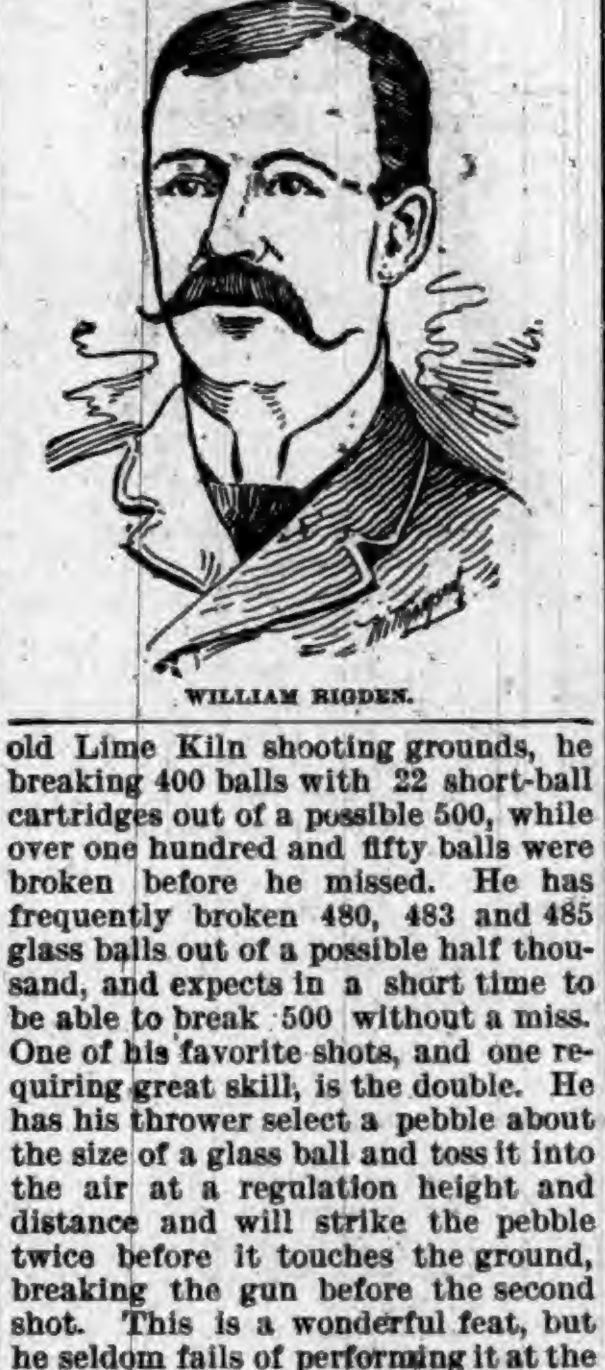
MRS. EDISON lately gave a ball at which the music was furnished by phonographs.

MIRACLES WITH THE RIFLE.

Wonderful Feats Performed by William Rigden, World's Champion Snap Shot.

William Rigden, the rifleman who broke the world's snap shooting record near Ottawa, Ill., by hitting with a twenty-two caliber ball twenty pennies out of a possible twenty-five thrown in the air, is without question the finest shot in his line in the United States. He is little known, save to a limited circle of marksmen in Illinois, for the reason that he shoots wholly for his own amusement and has never taken part in tournaments or matches. He discovered his remarkable talent as a rifleman through an accident in killing swallows on the wing, and at once began practicing at snap-shooting. For nearly five years his work was done spasmodically, but about four years ago he began regular practice, shooting not less than 500 shells a day. He has no favorite target, but shoots glass balls, pennies, pebbles, white beans and other small objects, according to his fancy.

Rigden considers the use of shot cartridges demoralizing and will not use them under any circumstances, preferring the small 22-caliber ball, as it is the most difficult. He exercises great care in selecting his guns, and has several splendid weapons which he holds priceless. Truly phenomenal was his latest score with glass balls in a 500-ball shoot at the old Lime Kiln shooting grounds, he breaking 400 balls with 22 short-ball cartridges out of a possible 500, while over one hundred and fifty balls were broken before he missed. He has frequently broken 480, 483 and 485 glass balls out of a possible half thousand, and expects in a short time to be able to break 500 without a miss. One of his favorite shots, and one requiring great skill, is the double. He has his thrower select a pebble about the size of a glass ball and toss it into the air at a regulation height and distance and will strike the pebble twice before it touches the ground, breaking the gun before the second shot. This is a wonderful feat, but he seldom fails of performing it at the first trial. Here is another favorite shot: He faces the thrower, gives the order to throw, turns completely around and breaks a glass ball before it has fallen half way to the ground.



WILLIAM RIGDEN.

FRANK JAMES' HOME.

The Historic House to Which the Pinkertons Once Laid Siege.

The home of Frank James, the notorious outlaw, which foolish gossip recently had it was to be purchased by Chicago parties and transferred to the World's Fair grounds, is located in Missouri, near the little town of Nevada. This is the house which was surrounded by Pinkerton men on one occasion when they threw bombs down the chimney to raise the siege and force the outlaws into their clutches. One of these bombs shattered the arm of Mrs. Samuels, stepmother of the men. The house is still occupied by Mrs. Samuels and is an object of interest to the curious and to the relic hunters who visit the neighborhood. There is no probability that it will be taken to Chicago—at least not by the World's Fair directors as an adjunct to the exposition.

Josh Billings' Philosophy.

Thare iz 2 kinds ov obstinacy—obstinacy in the right, and obstinacy in the wrong; one iz the strength ov a grate mind, and the other iz the strength of a little one.

Lazyness iz like mollassis, sweet and sticky.

I think a bear in hiz claws iz preferable to one with gloves on.

I kant tell now which i admire least, an old coquett or a young prude.

Misanthropy don't pay; thare ain't no man living whose hate the world cares one cuss for.

Rash men ken be korrekted, but it don't pay to labor with a phool.

The man who haz never enjoyed the plezzure ov being forgiven haz missed one ov the greatest luxurys ov life.

I hav seen coquettry that had no more malice in it than a ewe lamb frisking on the green.

When i cum acrost a man who utters his opinyuns with immense deliberashun, and after they are uttered they don't amount to ennything, I write him down "misterious phool."

The grate cry ov the world now daze is, "What's trumps."

Love iz a weakness; but it is the same kind ov a weakness that repentance iz; both ov them are creditable tew our natures.

A man iz hiz own best friend, and worst enemy.

Jealousy iz one ov love's parasites.

We kan endure vices in the young that we should despise in the old. Pleaze make a note ov this, old phellows.

Friendship iz like earthenware. If it iz broken it kan be mended; but love is like a mirror—once broken, that ends it.

Down by the Brook.

A great many pleasant things come to pass when you are down by the brook. In fact, a brook always seems to flow through the very heart of nature. Most wild things love the cool streams in summer. The birds go there to bathe; the raccoons go there to catch craw-fish and water-snails. You will see muskrats swimming along with their noses above the surface, and now and then a mink may dart into a heap of draftwood. The beautiful wood-duck and the queer green herons haunt our bass brooks, and so do the kingfisher and the small white heron. When you are slipping stealthily along beside the stream, looking for a good place to cast your fly, you often come upon these wild things unaware, which gives you an excellent opportunity for studying their habits.

One day, some years ago, I was casting in a narrow, weedy stream in the South, and was trying to make my fly fall upon a small pool near the opposite bank, when it went a little too far and settled in a tuft of grass. No sooner had it touched than something grabbed it savagely, and, when I reeled in my line, I found that I had caught a bull-frog!

In fly-fishing for bass, you find the streams more easily approached than trout brooks, and there is less in your way when casting. In fact, I can say with confidence to the girls and boys of the St. Nicholas household, that they could not wish for better sport than they can get from fly-angling in almost any of our larger brooks, when once the secret of the gentle art is discovered by them. It seems strange that even enthusiastic anglers are just beginning to find out the great merits of the black bass as a game fish to be taken with the fly. All these years men have been making long journeys to Canada and to Northern Michigan for trout and salmon, when the streams that flow through every county of nearly all our States are teeming with bass gamer than salmon and more voracious than trout!

Bass brooks, as a rule, are shallow, so that there is little danger of drowning in them, and you can wade where you please. Some girls may think angling is too much like boys' sport for them; but if they will try it once, some sweet June day, they will change their minds. There is a great deal more fun in wading a clear, running brook, than in wallowing in the surf of the sea; and then, if you get a big bass, he gives you excitement that makes the blood leap in your veins.

Some very good and tender-hearted people think of angling as a most cruel and wicked sport. I cannot decide this matter for any one but myself. If you are afraid that killing fish is wicked, don't angle, for a timid angler never gets a rise or, if he does, he strikes too feebly or too late to get the game. To succeed at fly-fishing, one must go at it with a clear conscience and a steady nerve. Be sure you are right, and then don't let the fish get away—that is my rule!—Maurice Thompson in St. Nicholas.

In an interesting letter to Science Gossip on the habits of American testudinata, Dr. C. C. Abbott gives some notes of personal observation: "I am inclined to believe that all turtles have, more or less, the faculty of emitting distinct sounds. It is not to be wondered at that our turtles should have voices, for they are by no means sluggish, indolent creatures as is supposed by those who have only observed them indifferently or from afar off. I have frequently seen them get up a "square fight" over some delicate morsel, as a dead fish or drowned squirrel; and, again, while peering over the side of my boat into the clear depths below, I have watched the spotted turtles, two and three together, go through a variety of erratic movements, strongly suggestive of play. Even the solitary land tortoises will, when they meet, gently touch their noses together, and go through other movements suggesting the expressing of ideas to each other. Indeed, I have never seen any animal as high as, or higher in the scale of development than fishes, that did not possess means of communication of ideas to its fellows. I know not in what other way to explain very many of the acts of these animals.

Delight Followed by Torment.

What man or woman will deny that a good dinner is a present delight. Equally undeniable is it that when a well-cooked meal is succeeded by a fit of indigestion, rapture is converted into torture. Don't charge your dyspepsia to your dinner. No, my dear sir, your gastric department was out of order, to begin with. Had you regulated it with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the cargo that you took on board would have been comfortably stowed away without the slightest inconvenience. This incomparable stomachic entirely reforms faulty digestion, and regulates, besides, the liver and the bowels, which must act harmoniously with the digestive organ, or all three fall out of gear. Take the Bitters for kidney and rheumatic complaints, and in all cases of malaria. As a tonic, appetizer and promoter of convalescence it has no peer.

France's Economic Problem.

Commenting on the low birth rate among the French women, the Medical Record says: "Too them maternity too often means a definate curtailment of daily bread. The situation involves serious questions of social economics. It is a serious loss to a nation when a large proportion of its women are engaged in non-original production, in work that men can do just as well. Their women have engaged in every kind of career, and it has not paid. Such social order is only seemingly progressive. It marks an epoch, a stage of pure expediency but not necessarily in advance except in comparison with tyrannous times."

They Were Millers.

Two famous philosophers—Menedemus and Asclepiades—when pursuing their studies at Athens, were enabled to pay for their support and schooling by acting as millers after school hours, receiving the munificent sum of 36 cents (two drachmæ) per night. Happily their fellow students, upon hearing this, raised a subscription sufficient to defray the expenses of these deserving young men.—[Detroit Free Press.

AT a time of great drought a schoolmaster, accompanied by his pupils, went out to pray for rain. He was met by an inquisitive fellow, who asked where they were going. "We are going to pray for rain," the teacher replied: "God will hear the prayers of innocent children." "If that were so," answered the man, "there would be no teachers alive."

PASTOR KOENIG'S NERVE TONIC

Sleeplessness Cured. IV

I am glad to testify that I used Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic with the best success for sleeplessness, and believe that it is really a great relief for suffering humanity.
E. FRANK, Pastor.
St. Severin, Keylerton P. O., Pa.

LOGAN, Ohio, Oct. 18, 1890.
I used Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic in the case of a 13-year old boy for a case of St. Vitus Dance of two years' standing. His condition was most lamentable, as his limbs were constantly in motion, and at table his hands could not hold knife, fork or spoon. The effect of this medicine was at once noticeable to all, and the boy himself remarked, "I know it helps me," and before the second bottle was used up, he insisted that there was no necessity of taking more as he was entirely cured.

"German Syrup"

The majority of well-read physicians now believe that Consumption is a germ disease. In other words, instead of being in the constitution itself it is caused by innumerable small creatures living in the lungs having no business there and eating them away as caterpillars do the leaves of trees.

A Germ Disease.

The phlegm that is coughed up is those parts of the lungs which have been gnawed off and destroyed. These little bacilli, as the germs are called, are too small to be seen with the naked eye, but they are very much alive just the same, and enter the body in our food, in the air we breathe, and through the pores of the skin. Thence they get into the blood and finally arrive at the lungs where they fasten and increase with frightful rapidity. Then German Syrup comes in, loosens them, kills them, expells them, heals the places they leave, and so nourish and soothe that, in a short time consumptives become germ-proof and well.

He Predicted Gas.

Jonathan Boyle, one of DeKalb's pioneers who owns a good farm in Concord township, was in town Friday. He came to this county in an early day, when the grand and beautiful farming country, on the eastern border of Indiana, was nothing but a dense forest, with here and there a path through the wilderness. Like many others, he has lived through those dark days to see an age when broad acres of tillable land, fine residences, good highways, and bank barns have taken place of dark woods, log cabins, foot-paths and pole sheds. He is now at a ripe old age, and looks with true American pride on the improvements of the last third of a century. In 1882, this gentleman predicted that gas would some day be taken from the ground in DeKalb county, and based his theory upon the observances he had made of the water found in the sprins, which feed Bear Creek in Concord township. At one time he was so enthusiastic over the matter, that had he possessed the capital, a well would have been sunk in that vicinity. People often laughed at what was termed his wild theories, yet to-day, those who smiled contemptibly at the expression of one opinion, must now confess the old gentleman was not so wild after all, as natural gas has been utilized in Auburn, several years. Poetically we would say:

Dare to have an opinion,
Though in that opinion we be alone:—
Dare to have a theory,
Do not hesitate to make that theory known.

We'll Get the Depot.

The Lake Shore road is bound to favor Auburn with the long needed depot, which was spoken of in this paper several months ago. The foundation was laid last week, and on Monday, the work train with a gang of about twenty men, were engaged in removing the high bank south of where the foundation stands and hauling it back to fill up the low ground around the building. The long switch at that point was shortened to make room for a platform. This is going to be one of the noticeable improvements with which our town has been blessed this year, and the public will no doubt appreciate the company's kindness in building here.

He is Papa.

Frank Shull boarded the west-bound passenger train over the Wabash, Monday noon, for Carlinville, Ill., where he expects to visit his brother Martin, who is operator for the Postal Telegraph Co., and who has rather a pleasant history, since he left Auburn, four or five years ago. We cannot refrain from making an open note of the fact that "Mart," as he was commonly called among the boys, went west, secured a lucrative position, got married and is now papa to, as he expresses it, one of the finest three-weeks' old little girls in Carlinville. Once more we can say an Auburn boy occupies a front seat.

ARSENIC AND AMMONIA.

Remarkable Contrast in the Effect of two Poisons on the Complexion.

The slow absorption of many poisons changes in some more or less modified form the complexion, but arsenic and ammonia show their effect about as quickly as any. The popular belief that arsenic clears the complexion has led many silly women to kill themselves with it in small, continued doses. It produces a waxy, ivory-like appearance of the skin during a certain stage of the poisoning, but its terrible effects have become too well known to make it of common use as a cosmetic. The effects of ammonia upon the complexion are directly the opposite to that of arsenic. The first symptom of ammonia poisoning which appears among those who work in ammonia factories is a discoloration of the skin of the nose and forehead. This gradually extends over the face until the complexion has a stained, blotched and unsightly appearance. With pepole who take ammonia into their systems in smaller doses, as with their water or food, these striking symptoms do not appear so soon. The only effect of the poison that is visible for a time is a general unwholesomeness and sallowness of the complexion. Many people are slowly absorbing ammonia poison without knowing it. The use of ammonia in the manufactures has greatly increased of late, and it is unquestionably used as an adulterant in certain food preparations. Official analyses have plainly shown its use even in such cheap articles of every day consumption as baking powders. The continued absorption of ammonia in minute quantities as an adulterant in food is injurious not merely from its effect upon the complexion, but because it destroys the coating of the stomach and causes dyspepsia and kindred evils. Professor Long of Chicago, is authority for the statement that, if to fifty million parts of water there is one part of ammonia, the water is dangerous.

CORRESPONDENCE

WATERLOO.

P. Montavon furnishes meals during the fair.

A number of our people attended the Kendallville fair.

Mrs. Nellie Carpenter, of Pleasant Lake, was in town on Wednesday, of last week.

John Patterson was back here the first of the week for a brief visit. He reports his people well.

Katy, daughter of John Hoffelder, who lives north of town, died Monday evening, of typhoid fever. The funeral took place Wednesday.

Frank Bevier was married last week in Michigan, and has gone to housekeeping in the building owned by Frank Zerwis on Railroad street.

Mrs. Carpenter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hill, also her brother Frank and a sister, Mrs. Southworth and son, from California, are visiting the family this week.

The ladies of the M. E. church will have a dining hall open during the fair, in the building on the west side of south Wayne street, recently occupied by Hackman & Waterman.

In regard to the statement in the COURIER that Dell Locke would not move to Bryan this fall, your correspondent received the information from Mrs. Dell Locke, who added that they should not go before spring.

Fair started out in good shape so far. Our merchants are making better displays than usual. In Floral Hall, The People's Store has a nice display of goods, and John Maxson has a lovely case of silverware. In Music Hall, J. S. Jackman has a big display of boots and shoes; J. M. Waterman, of fine furniture; J. D. McAnally has sprayers and his patent tug fasteners, making quite a show; J. C. Day, has stoves and hardware; Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson has a big display of lovely flowers in the midst of which is Sherman Trait's Brugmansia Arborea, a rare plant, often called "ghost flower." Fleming, of Auburn, also has a good collection. Smith & Madden, of Auburn, have granite and marble monuments; Shaffer & Berg, of same place, have splendid farm wagons, and the Eckhart Carriage Co., have a lot of their nice buggies. T. H. Shoub, of Butler, has a common stove in Music Hall, and in that a gas burner and generator, used in cook stoves. It is a novel affair and creates good interest. It bids fair to do away with wood fires. There is a wind mill made in Chicago, all of steel, including ten-foot corner strips to fit to the upper part of the derrick. Uncle George Dennison fairly rolls in fine fruit, in his department. Such a showing of grapes was never seen here before. And then, the apples! All kinds, and so fine. There is canned fruit and jellies enough to tempt one to steal, almost, and the baked goods, cakes, etc., Mr. D., has cased in a neat show case with glass sides. He wants no flies on them. Mrs. Kennedy is in the Floral Hall again and has a wilderness of fine needle work and and other lovely things to care for. Extra room has been made for these. Willis & Co., make an interesting display of stationery, notions, etc. Then there is a bound file of the Press, and an extensive and neat neat display of job work, binding, etc. All that is needed to complete the display is a lot of the COURIER's fine litho-tint work to make it the most complete display of printer's skill ever shown in the county. S. M. Knott and Chris Breckbill have each a creamery to display. Wallace has fine harness. E. Y. Williamson has a flour chest and bread trough combined. Out on the grounds, the stock departments are full. There are many shows and various stands and many of them. The dining hall is in charge of Mrs. Barnhart, who will set out a good meal and in nice shape. We hope she will be well patronized. The town is beautifully decorated, the first time it has been done for a fair, and shows the increased interest our people take in it. Much more could be said, did space permit.

We allude to Shaffer & Berg's wagons made right here in Auburn. They stand by their work and can prove it the best. No shoddy work about a wagon of their make. Get new wagons there, or bring in your repair work to their shops on South Main St., Auburn.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1854—Continued.

The text books which took the place of the miscellaneous books hitherto in use as adopted by the board were McGuff's Readers, Ray's Arithmetic, Bullion's Grammar, Mitchell's Geography, Davis' Geometry and Algebra, Olmsted's Philosophy and Webster's Elementary Spelling book.

Teachers were supplied with copies of these books by trustees, for personal use and in consequence when a class was called, no pupil was called upon to lend his book to the teacher while he "looked over" with the one next him.

In default of other supervision, Messrs Brandt and Waterman were ordered to visit the schools and given liberty to take such action as their condition should demand. These gentlemen reported the schools in as good state as was practicable under existing disadvantages.

From the time that Auburn was platted till the present, lot owners have been uncertain of their boundaries and there have been surveys and re-surveys, establishing grades only to later invalidate them; but system seems to control at last and uniformity has come with permanence.

During the summer of 1854, a survey being deemed imperative, due notice was given in the Messenger of an intended survey and re-location of the streets of the town.

Wyllys Griswold was authorized to employ Joseph Nodine, county surveyor, to do the work. The surveyor assisted by Houghton and Thompson, chain bearers, Griswold rodman and E. Berry as axman accomplished the task in four days for which his bill was $10.50.

The distance across the town plot east and west was eighty-four rods; and north and south, two hundred and thirty-six rods giving an area of something less than one hundred twenty-four acres.

Limited in area, Auburn was yet a backwoods town. Developement of the county was still in a primitive stage and the lands largely partook of forest characteristics. Magnificent timber covered thousands of acres and other thousands were swamp lands then incapable of cultivation, covered by the tamarack and the haunt of an occasional wolf.

J. M. Gœtchius killed a wolf in the spring of 1854 and the scalp brought him $5. Emanuel Surface at the same time presented for bounty before the county commissioners what "purported to be the scalp of a wolf," took oath that it was the scalp of a wolf and although the board seemed staggered in opinion, after due consideration of the premises, ordered the bounty paid.

At this session Dr. O. J. Vincent presented a bill of $20.00 for holding a post mortem examination of a person found dead, and the board as reasonable payment allowed but $8.00, and so established a precedent in cutting exorbitant medical bills.

During this year of 1854, the crops in portions of the county had been nearly cut off; disease had prevailed to a greater extent than usual, and the sacrifices of life through casualties were remarkble. But while these conditions existed there was at the same time activity in public improvement which stamps the year conspicuous for works of great moment and inaugurated the era of the railroad and the decline of the canal.

Railroad building became a mania and the town or city which had no road building or contemplated was behind the age.

The organization of the Auburn & Eel River Valley railroad company was a movement that promised much for Auburn and DeKalb county.

This company organized May 11th, 1852, but accomplished nothing of moment until the year following when on Aug. 3, the corporate name was changed to the Logansport & Northan Indiana railroad company. William L. Brown was secretary of the board of directors and we have been informed that William Hubbell, Robert Work and Wesley Park were prominently identified with the company in DeKalb county. Survey was made of the proposed road, right of way was secured and contract let for grading.

Messrs J. B. Hoover and H. S. Moneysmith contracted to grade between Auburn and Butler, and had good reason to to regret having anything to do with it.

Much work was done; the grade had nearly been completed at various points on the line; much money had been spent when the corporation unfortunately became bankrupt and the work was suspended and suffered to remain untouched for many years.

What might have been, had this the first road contemplated through Auburn, been then built it is impossible to conjecture; but that the men who composed the company were wise in selection of the route is amply confirmed by the immense travel and traffic over the completed road.

Although the people of Auburn were much disappointed at the suspenison of work on the railroad and were thus deprived of that stimulus which gave origin and healthy growth to Norristown and Waterloo, it does not appear that they lost faith in the town nor that the town itself lost prestige.

The boomer was the product of a later period and while an expected importance had not been gained there was no collapse of speculative values.

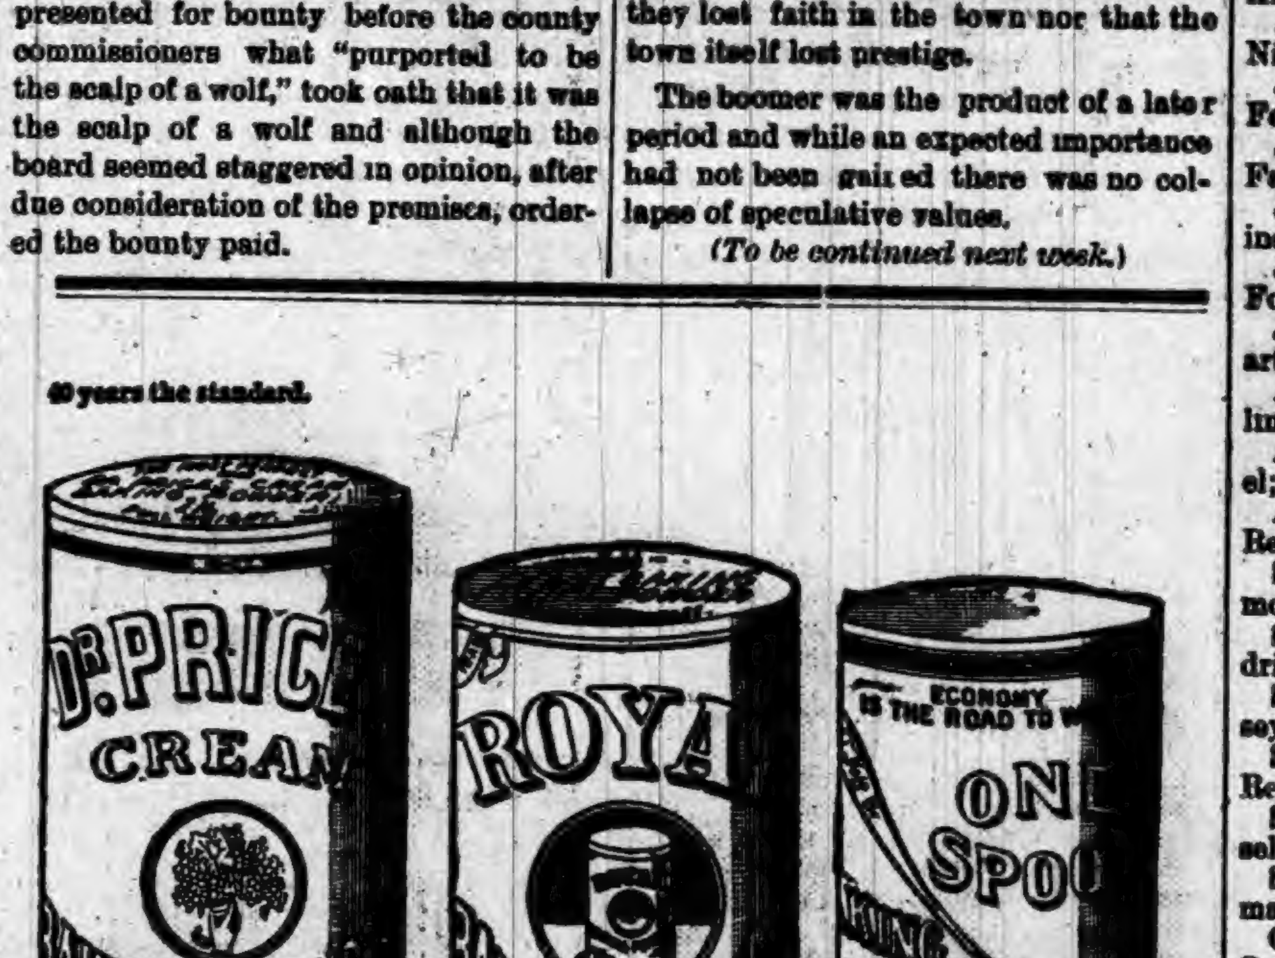
40 years the standard.



A Pure Cream Tartar Powder

ROYAL, Contains Ammonia.

TAYLOR'S ONE SPOON. Contains Alum and Ammonia.

Dr. Price gives larger and fuller cans than those of any other Baking Powder manufacturer.

Above cut represents the comparative size of one pound can each "Dr. Price's," Royal" and "Taylor's One Spoon." These cans were set side by side, then photographed down in exact proportions to admit the plate in this space. Ask your grocer to set a one pound can of any other brand alongside 1 lb. Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, and observe the difference, as illustrated above.

Adulterated powders may usually be detected by their heavier bulk, as shown by the small cans, and these scantily filled, often containing a circular to help fill out the cans. It is a singular fact that many of the ammonia and alum baking powders are advertised as "Absolutely Pure," All official examinations prove that it would be safe to reject all powders labeled absolutely pure.

The economy in using Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder does not consist alone in the fact that much larger and fuller cans are given, but Dr. Price's is a stronger, purer and more wholesome baking powder than any other known. Does better work, and goes farther, hence more economical in every way.

What woman would use an ammonia or alum baking powder if she knew it? Such powders not only undermine the health, but ammonia gives to the complexion a sallow and blotched appearance.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is reported by all authorities as free from ammonia, alum, lime, or any other adulterant. The purity of this ideal powder has never been questioned.

Refuse all substitutes. They conceal either ammonia or alum.

Admitted the Facts.

Newspaper editors have to be very careful in opening their columns for statements. But aware that the Dr. Miles Medical Co., are responsible, we make room for the following testimonial from R. McDougall, Auburn, Ind., who for two years noticed a stoppage or skipping of the pulse, his left side got so tender he could not lie on it, his heart fluttered, he was alarmed, went to different doctors, found no relief, but one bottle of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure cured him. The elegant book, "New and Startling Facts," free at F. E. Davenport. It tells all about heart and nervous diseases and many wonderful cures. 2

Loitering in Kansas.

We left Wichita on the evening of Oct. 1, over the Arkansas City division, of the Santa Fe road. Our train was crowded to excess. We reached Winfield, Cowley Co., about 9 p. m. and soon found comfortable quarters at a hotel, and got our first sleep since Monday night previous, The cry and racket at about midnight, of a fire failed to disturb us. We rose early on the morning of Oct. 2, and took a stroll about the city of Winfield, one of the prettiest small towns in the state, The streets are about 150 feet wide paved with native stones. The buildings are nearly all stone, a white smooth stone quarried in the vicinity. They are very durable and grow whiter with age. The town has about 8000 people, and for a wonder has not been boomed to death. We left Winfield 9 a. m. for Oxford, over the Southern Kansas road now controlled by the Santa Fe, crossed the Walnut River, and the great white sandy valley through which the waters of the Arkansas River find a tortuous passage, reached our destination, Oxford, a small, ragged, depopulating town on the right bank of the Arkansas, and were soon enjoying the greetings of friends, and noting the changes which five years had made in face, figure and landscape. Before the country was settled and improved, it was one continual feast for the eye to look upon its pristine beauty. Its long stretches of grassy meadow broken by gentle undulations and fringed by the timber on some distant stream. Now all is changed. Nearly every quarter section is occupied, and hedges fifteen to thirty feet high surround them, completely shutting off the view in all directions, except the narrow lane like road. Good buildings, fine orchards of all kinds of fruits—apples, peaches, pears, cherries, apricots, almonds, grapes, etc., are to be found on every hand—yet this interminable hedge hides all. The buildings are generally placed a short distance from the street or highway and surrounded by trees, and further cut off by a high untrimmed hedge, renders the pleasure about the same as going through the woods. The crops have been unusually good, but continuous rainy weather, rendered it impossible to harvest all the grain; so much remained ungathered, and a large part that was gathered has since spoiled, so that the farmers are not realizing as much as they anticipated. A drouth set in the forepart of July and has continued to this writing, except a light shower about a week ago. The dust carried by the prevailing high winds, has been almost beyond endurance and now the farmers are getting anxious about the big crop of wheat they intended to plant. The ground is dry and hard beyond anything I have ever seen in a clay country, unless it would be the center of a well traveled highway. Plowing has been pushed forward, by double teaming, but the ground plowed looks like a field of boulders. Clods from the size of a small cabbage head to that of twice the size of a half bushel, cover the fields, and all the improved machinery of this great farming country has failed to reduce them to a condition that would enable the farmers to drill in their wheat. The yield of fruit of all kinds has been enormous. But no market has been open for their sale. The finest of peaches brought 25 cents per bushels, grapes a drug at 2 cents per pound; apples are plenty at from 10 to 25 cents per bushel; wheat is worth 75 cents per bushel, at the time I am writing. The country is full of the finest hogs, but cholera has made its appearance and farmers are hurrying off their hogs at $3.90 per hundred. Cattle are looking well. Horses are very plenty. Few farmers try to farm with less than six or eight work horses and a drove of colts besides. Every thing is done in these parts on a wholesale scale, and waste is the bane of the people. Only the best and most improved machinery is in use. Half worn machinery crowds the new machines from the sheds. Merchants and others engaged in trade complain bitterly of the "Farmers Alliance," that seeks to blot out all the small towns and drive the small dealers out of business centers. The outlook for another year is not over favorable owing to the severe drouth of the fall, and lateness of planting and the cloddy condition of the ground. The corn crop is only moderate and is selling for 35 cents. Considerable of hay is yet to be made, mostly the second crop of prairie grass. The fields from which wheat has been cut, are covered with a dense growth of coarse, weedy grass, here called crab grass. It makes good pasture while young, but hard and woody when dry. But little corn is cut for feed. and the stalks are dry as ours in December. The weather is quite cold, leaves mostly off the trees and the season is apparently a month later than our own. We left for home on the night of the 7th of October over the Southern Kansas road, now operated by that great rail road Octopus, the Santa Fe. This branch of the road seems neglected. Is very rough, and having but one slow passenger train each way a day, makes travel over it tedious. Reached Ottawa about 2 a. m, where we were headed off by a wreck. After a couple of hours delay our train proceeded over the old Lawrence, Leavenworth and Galveston, to Lawrence and then to Kansas City about two hours late. We made a hasty trip up town in a cable car, there took the 10 a. m. train for St. Louis. The run to Moberly was made in four hours, and from there to St. Louis in about four more. The country from Moberly to St. Louis is high rolling prairie, with several good towns. We crossed the St. Charles river nearly as large as the Missouri, on a high trestle bridge nearly one mile long. Found the depot at St. Louis litterally packed with people who had been attending the fair. We took the 8 p. m. Chicago Wabash train, passed through the long tunnel and over the $7,000,000 bridge over the Father of Waters, and after an all nights run reached Chicago at 7 a. m. Friday, just a little more than tired. Spent a few hours looking at some of its many sixteen story earthquake proof brick and iron buildings. We became too tired to enjoy sight seeing so we took the 3 p. m. Detroit Wabash train and reached home at about 9 p. m. well satisfied with the shortest and cheapest trip we have ever made to the Sunflower State.

OUR NEWS SUMMARY.

TERRIBLE FATE OF A BAY CITY, MICH., LADY.

Attempted Assassination—Wheel Makers Fail—A Fatal Bonfire—Printing Office Burned Out—Indianapolis Election.

STRANGE DEATH.

Terrible Fate of Miss McLaughlan, of Bay City, Mich.

Buffalo special: As passenger train No. 3 on the Central road, west bound, was passing West Batavia, N. Y., a young lady was seen to leave her berth in the sleeper and walk to the rear platform. She did not return and alarm was raised. Failing to find her the train was stopped and backed toward Batavia, the crew searching both sides of the track. The search was unsuccessful, but the operator at Croft's Station, who was instructed to continue the search, found the girl lying near the track just outside of West Batavia. Her head was cut open and she was internally injured. She was brought to this city, where she died. The police state the girl's name to be Mary McLaughlin, and that she was en route to Bay City, Mich. A note in her pocket stated that she was going to her sister at West Branch, Mich. A card, with the name Ida G. Voorhees, was also found in her pocket. She was well dressed, and wore some valuable rings. The supposition is that she was a somnambulist, and walked off the train while asleep.

Burning Oil at Cleveland.

A disastrous fire broke out in the Barrett street oil works in West Cleveland, Ohio, and had the locality been thickly built a serious conflagration would have resulted, as the firemen were powerless to control the flames. The fire originated in the Acme Grease and Oil Works through the running over of a large kettle of heating grease and spread with lightning rapidity. The fire then communicated to the Merchant's Oil Works and the office of the Lake View Oil Company, all of which were destroyed. The Acme Company loses $20,000, with $10,000 insurance, the Merchants' $20,000 with $12,500 insurance; the Lake View Company, $1,000 with no insurance. The books of the Acme Company containing $40,000 worth of accounts were destroyed in the fire.

Printing Office Burned.

Fire broke out in the Nashville American Building the other night. About fifty men were at work in the building at the time. Two printers are thought to be badly burned. The building was destroyed. The fire spread so rapidly that the compositors had to escape by the fire escape and ropes stretched from the top floor. The names of the printers injured are M. W. Brooks and A. W. Phelps. J. K. Muirs was also badly burned. The fire caused a loss of about $5,000, covered by insurance. The composing rooms, telegraph rooms, office of the United Press and Associated Press were glutted. The fire was probably incendiary. The compositors were caught in the flames, but their injuries are not serious.

Attempted Assassination.

An attempt was made to assassinate Congressman R. D. Bloe at Sardis, Tenn., while he was delivering an address in which he scored the third party and sub-treasury scheme of the Alliance. A half brick was thrown through the window at him, but struck N. J. Galbreath, of Centerpoint, instead, inflicting serious injuries. A large number of leading citizens of Sardis and vicinity, representing all shades of political opinion, have published a card condemning the attempted assassination, and pledging themselves to use every means in their power to discover the guilty person.

Wheel Makers Fail.

Indianapolis special: Julius F. Pratt and Addison Bybee, of the old Sarven Wheel Works Trust, have made an assignment, and Lement Lyman appointed assignee. Pratt holds $229,000 and Bybee $209,000 in the American Wheel Works, and each has $12,500 in the B. B. S. Co., of Dayton, Ohio, and $18,000 in the Indianapolis Wagon Company. All their real estate holdings are included in the assignment, portions in this city being subject to $55,000 mortgages. The failure is due to the assignment made by the American Wheel Works.

Murder and Suicide at Holgate.

At Holgate, Ohio, Ray Burke shot and killed his sister-in-law, Mrs. Frank Burke, and then blew out his brains. Mrs. Burke gave the young man $150 to deposit in the bank a few days ago, but instead of depositing the money he went to Defiance on a spree. He returned and wound up his debauch as above stated.

Why Edward Went Crazy.

Edward M. Rowles, an intelligent young man of Akron, Ohio, was recently appointed as an attendant at the Cleveland Insane Asylum. He was so constantly with crazy people that he went insane himself, and the Probate Court has ordered him taken to the Asylum for the Insane at Dayton.

The Cage Fell.

The cage men at shaft No. 2 on the tunnel at Niagara Falls, lost control of the cage and it fell to the bottom of the shaft, killing three colored men and fatally injuring two white men. The cage-tenders were in danger of being lynched by the tunnel men and they were locked up in the police station for safety.

Election at Indianapolis.

The municipal election at Indianapolis resulted in a victory for the Democratic nominees.

A Fatal Bonfire.

Three children on Andrew Lupp's farm, at Martinsville, N. J., built a bonfire near a barrel containing some benzine. The barrel exploded and the children were badly injured and burned. One of them will probably die. The mother was also badly burned.

The Clothes Line Route.

Steven Ridien, a prominent farmer and politician of Fountaintown, Ind., became despondent and hanged himself with a clothes line. He leaves a family.

An Oregon Bank Looted.

A daring robbery was perpetrated upon the National Bank of Enterprise, in Wallawalla County, Oregon. The cashier, Mr. Holmes, was in the bank alone when a man entered and asked how much money John Smith, of Portland, had deposited. Upon the cashier's saying that no such man had any deposit, the visitor presented a pistol and covering the cashier said, "you're a liar." At this juncture two confederates came up on horseback. One of them sitting on his horse, with revolver in either hand, warned the people back. The other entered the bank and poured into a sack all the money on the counter, about $35,000. The three men then escaped to the mountains.

DWIGHT, ILL., IN FLAMES.

The Entire Town Almost Wiped Out of Existence.

Dwight (Ill.) special: This town, famed in connection with the Keeley Institute for Inebriates, was almost wiped out of existence by fire. The flames originated in the Keefling Hotel and consumed fourteen buildings, including two newspaper offices and one of the finest hotels in the State. Buildings were blown up with dynamite in order to check the flames, and as the town has no Fire Department, the surrounding towns of Pontiac, Joliet, and Bloomington, sent engines on special trains.

The effort to prevent the spread of the flames by blowing up buildings proved successful and the fire was got under control. Dr. Keeley's hotel, the Pennsylvania, was saved by blowing up a building adjoining it. The losses by fire are: Perry's Hotel; H. H. Cutting, cigars; Kepplinger Opera House; a machine shop; Dwight Star and Herald newspaper and printing office; Dwight Steam Laundry; two small frame buildings; C. E. Koehnlein, furniture; Reinhardt's restaurant and the Stuffe Hotel, which sheltered 150 of Dr. Keeley's patients. It is not possible to estimate the loss.

George Kepplinger is the heaviest loser by the fire. He owned the hall and several other buildings. His loss was full $10,000; insured for $500. The Stuffe House, which was built this summer for the accommodation of Keeley patients, was entirely destroyed, loss $4,500. The Perry House, was also destroyed, loss, $4,000. The other losers are: C. A. Stuck, owner of the North Star; J. Crocker, W. Rinehart, Mrs. Koehnlein. The streets presented a queer sight. Dunkards from all over the United States assisted the town people in saving goods. The Bicholoride of Gold Club was to hold an entertainment in Kepplinger's Hall at night. Had the fire occurred during the entertainment great loss of life would doubtless have resulted. The fire is supposed to have started from overheating boards over an engine.

HIGHWAYMEN CAPTURED.

One of Them Turns Out to Be a Wealthy Girl.

Helena (Mont.) special: Anaconda, Helena, and Butte, have been treated to a series of bold highway robberies during the past week. The other night Policeman John Grogan, in attempting to arrest Henry Clark on suspicion of being implicated in the thefts, was shot through the right breast. Although mortally wounded, Grogan continued firing at the fleeing man until he disappeared. Next morning Policemen Beck and Gibson saw a boy walking down the Northern Pacific track toward East Helena, and his actions being queer the officers decided to search him. They found on his person a watch, stolen from Conductor Richardson. The prisoner was lodged in jail when it was discovered that the supposed boy was a woman. She asked to send a note to a friend. This note was addressed to Clark, and the police, following up the messenger, found their man, and lodged him in jail. He was taken to the bedside of the dying policeman and identified. The Mayor has sworn a large force of extra policemen to guard the jail. The woman is 20 years old and declares she is Birdie Miller. Her parents are well-to-do people in Oregon.

FOUND AT LAST.

But Death Had Preceded the Rescuing Party.

Pottsville (Pa.) special: After days and nights of unceasing labor and some hundreds of tons of coal had been removed by the rescuing party, the bodies of four of the unfortunate miners imprisoned by running pillars at Richardson Colliery, near Carbon, were found. There was great rejoicing when the news was sent to the surface that the imprisoned miners had been reached, but it soon turned to sadness and grief when it became known that the men were dead and that the bodies of only four of the six had been found, badly mutilated, but recognizable, as those of John Purcell, John Lawter, Jos. Shields and James Salmon. The rescuing party are working with renewed vigor for the recovery of the bodies of Thomas Clancy and Michael Welsh and there is every prospect of reaching them soon.

The Alaska Expedition.

Victoria (B. C.) special: Lieutenant Schwatkas has just returned from Alaska and in the account of the trip says: "We opened about 500 or 600 miles of totally unknown country and, of course, a good deal on each side. We have secured a thorough map, which was taken by Dr. Hayes, of the geological survey at Washington." A large collection of botanical specimens were made and photographs taken of everything of interest. The most important feature of the whole trip was the successful breaking through St. Elias Range, a feat never before accomplished by man. All the party are well. The journey was hazardous in the extreme, and full of great danger at times.

The Deadly Elevator.

A terrible accident occurred at the finishing-rooms of the Shelby Cabinet Company at Shelbyville, Ind. Joseph Scott, foreman, Clint Neely and Henry Thayer were transferring furniture from the upper story when the elevator cable broke, precipitating the men and cargo thirty-five feet below. The unfortunate men were removed from the debris and physicians called. They are in a very critical condition, and it is feared their injuries will prove fatal.

William Steinecker and Matthew Dewald, employes in Severin & Ostermyer's wholesale grocery, were crushed in a descending elevator at Indianapolis. Steinecker will die and Dewald is dangerously injured.

Bishop Dubs Expelled from the Evangelical Church.

The committee of the German Evangelical conference, which has been investigating the case of Bishop Dubs for the past week at Indianapolis, has submitted its report. "Not only his suspension be ratified, but he is hereby deposed from his office as bishop and preacher in the Evangelical Association and expelled from the church." Concurrence in the report of the committee was then put to a vote and the Bishop was unanimously deposed and expelled from the church.

The Grant Statue Unveiled at Chicago.

Chicago special: The superb equestrian statue erected by the citizens of Chicago to the honor of the late General U. S. Grant was unveiled in the presence of an immense concourse of people. The ceremonies were at once impressive and inspiring. Business in the city had been almost wholly suspended. The banks, exchanges, government and municipal offices were closed and the employed classes generally were given a holiday. The result was an outpouring of the people from the heart of the city, such as has been seldom witnessed here.

A Congressman Gets $800 Damages.

Congressman George W. Cooper, of the Fifth Indiana District, attended the corner-stone laying of the Soldiers' Monument in Indianapolis in August, 1889, and in the afternoon he attempted to take a train at the Union Depot for his home. There was a great crowd, and, although the Congressman pointed out his train, the gateman struck him when he persisted in passing, and closed the passageway. Mr. Cooper then sued the Union Depot Company for $5,000 damages, and recently a jury awarded him $800.

Starving by Thousands.

D. P. Newcomer, United States Immigrant Inspector, has just returned from a visit to Piedras Negras, Mexico, and states that there is great destitution among the lower classes of Mexicans in the States of Chihuahua and Durango. There are about 4,000 people seeking employment on the railroad extension between Tarreon and Durango. There are hundreds of the unfortunates who live entirely on the Maguay plant. The drought, however, has been broken, and there are indications of better times.

An Alliance Elevator.

It is announced that the Farmers' Alliance of Minnesota will build a million bushel wheat elevator at West Superior, Wis., commencing this fall and having it ready for next season's crop. The elevator will be built by a stock company, composed wholly of grain growers. The capital stock, $1,000,000, is to be divided in shares of $10 each. A committee appointed by the Grain Growers' Association is now there, it is said, to select a site.

A Queer Receptacle for Smuggled Diamonds.

The New York police are looking for a Mrs. Yancey, who is accused by a Chicago diamond importing firm of absconding with $30,000 worth of diamonds which she smuggled into the country for them. It is said that in her career as a smuggler she has defrauded the Government of duties on $1,000,000 worth of diamonds. The diamonds are said to have been concealed in the mouth or pouch of a pelican which the woman always had with her, ostensibly as a pet.

Boynton Retires from the Commercial-Gazette.

A special from Washington says: The announcement on newspaper row that Gen. H. V. Boynton is about to sever his connection with the Commercial-Gazette, of Cincinnati, created quite a commotion in newspaper circles. In answer to inquiries, Gen. Boynton said: "My connection with the Commercial-Gazette will end next week. Of course I shall remain in Washington, where all my interests center, and continue in journalism at the old stand on newspaper row.

Found in the Old Men's Home.

Cincinnati special: Fifteen years ago Charles Cist, a leading attorney, disappeared, leaving about $30,000 of unsettled claims. Not a trace of him was found until recently, when he was found in the Old Men's Home here. He went from here to Chicago, remained there until recently, when, through the good offices of ex-President Hayes and ex-Governor Hoadley, his liabilities were squared and he was given a place in the Home here. He was once a leading real estate attorney of this city.

Hanging on the Rocks.

The United States steamer Dispatch went ashore in a heavy gale on the Assateague shoals on the east coast of Virginia, about sixty miles northeast of Cape Charles. It is impossible to reach the ship from the shore at present. The Dispatch was on her way to Washington. The Yantic will be hurried down to the scene of the accident from the Brooklyn Navy Yard as soon as she can be got under way.

A Spider's Bite Killed Her.

Several days ago the infant daughter of Thomas Davidson, the stove merchant of Madison, Ind., was bitten upon the finger by a spider. The mother brushed the insect away, and no evil effects were noticed for several hours, when the hand began to swell and a physician was called. The member continued to swell, and blood poisoning set in, from the effects of which the child died.

A Burning Cat.

At North Birmingham, Ala., some boys saturated a cat with coal oil, set fire to it and turned it loose. The cat ran into the residence of a man named Lindsey and set fire to the house, burning it to the ground. Mr. A. M. Rydell's house also caught, and that was burned, too. Total loss between $3,000 and $5,000.

Carter Harrison Buys the Times.

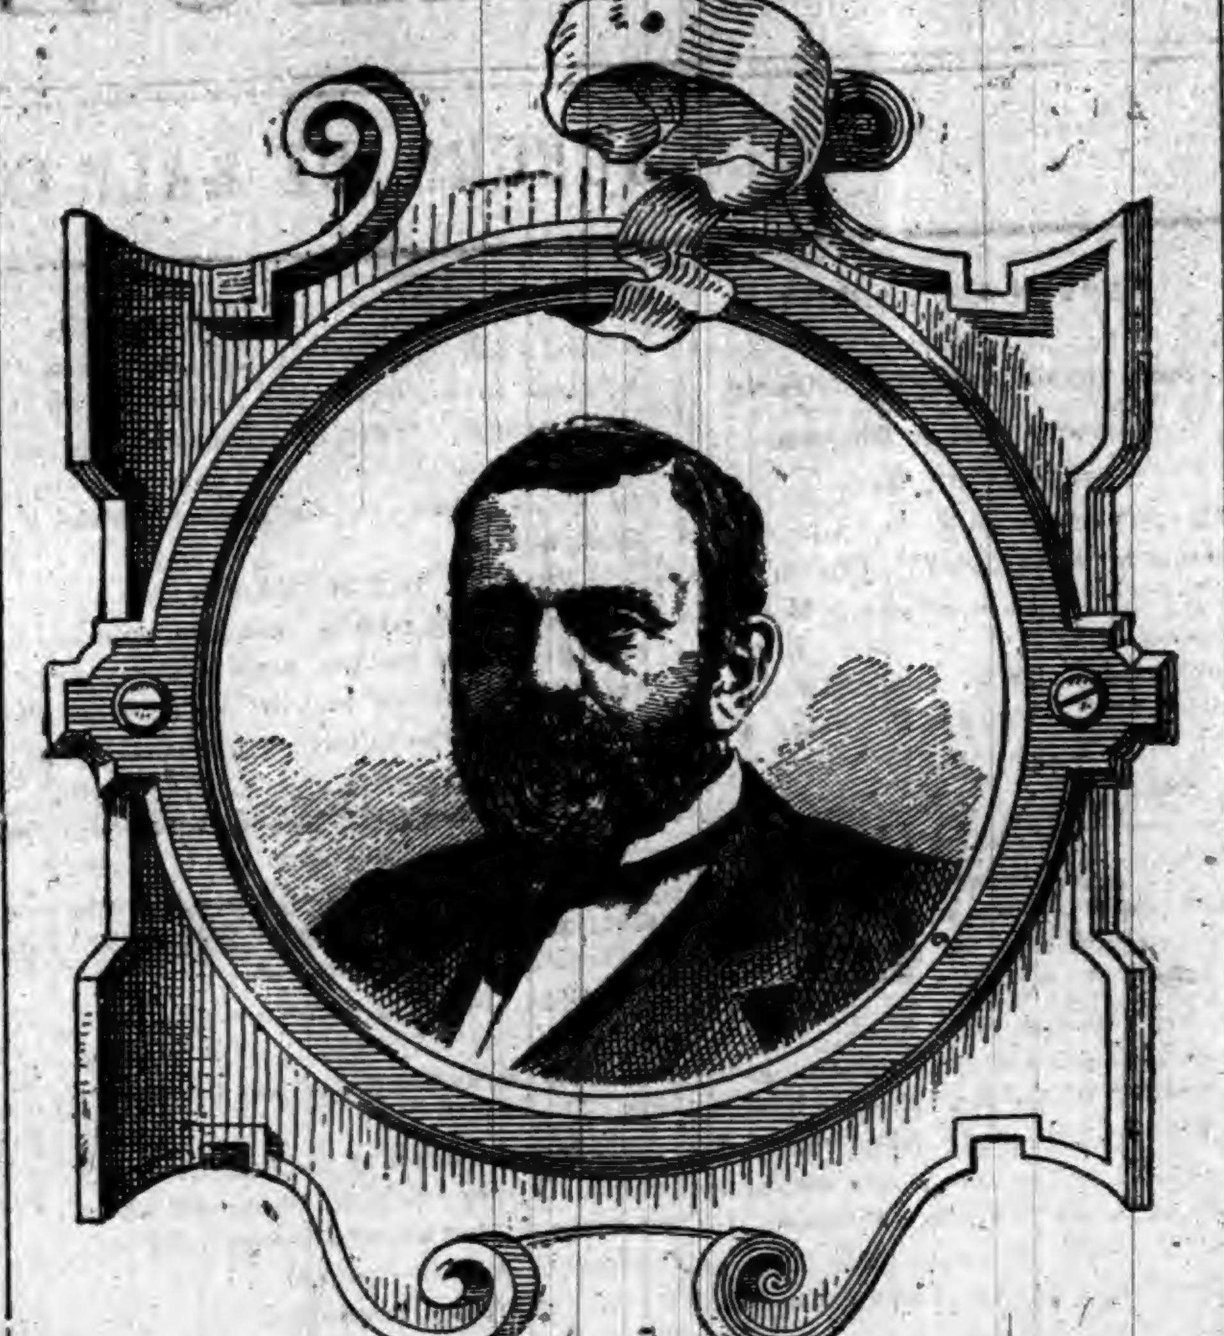
TRIBUTE TO GEN. GRANT

THE STATUE OF THE DEAD COMMANDER UNVEILED.

The Ceremonies Preceded by an Imposing Street Parade—Citizens and Soldiery Unite in Doing Honor to the Hero of the Rebellion—Great Naval Display.

Grant Day in Chicago.



Sunshine and rain warred fiercely and unremittingly with each other in Chicago to determine which would have the mastery when it came to unveil the Grant statue. And Phœbus won a dazzling victory, and all the people rejoiced. It would have been a bitter disappointment had it been ordered otherwise. The silken cord was gently pulled by the fair hands of the daughter of Gen. William E. Strong, and responsive to her timid action the white drapery was loosed from the figure beneath it, fluttered a moment in the breeze and fell, disclosing in all the majestic calm of a heroic man sculptured in bronze by a master hand. For a moment admiration held the multitude spellbound, incapable of uttering an exclamation. Then, glowing with pride and patriotism, from a hundred thousand throats went up such a mighty shout as is rarely heard. It was the apotheosis of their admiration—they were aflame with enthusiasm.

One minute before the unveiling a signal gun was fired to warn the gabbling, excited and expectant throng that everything was in readiness for the ceremony. Slowly the seconds ticked by and there was a vast hush. Scarcely a sound was heard save from the far distant center of the city, from where the roar of commerce was plainly audible. The statue was bared to the eye and the tumultuous murmur of approval had hardly subsided when from the United States steamer Michigan there blazed forth a salute of twenty-one guns. Bishop Newman patiently waited for the reverberation of the last gun before he delivered the invocation, and Emil S. Dryer had to be correspondingly patient before he could introduce the Bishop. Reverently the last syllable was heard, and, released from the first strain of eagerness, the spectators leisurely awaited what was yet to come—the speeches of presentation and acceptance and Judge Gresham's oration.

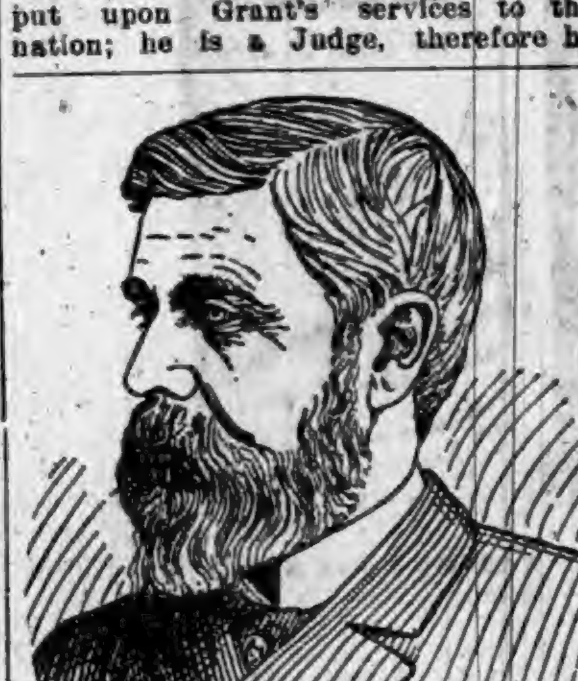
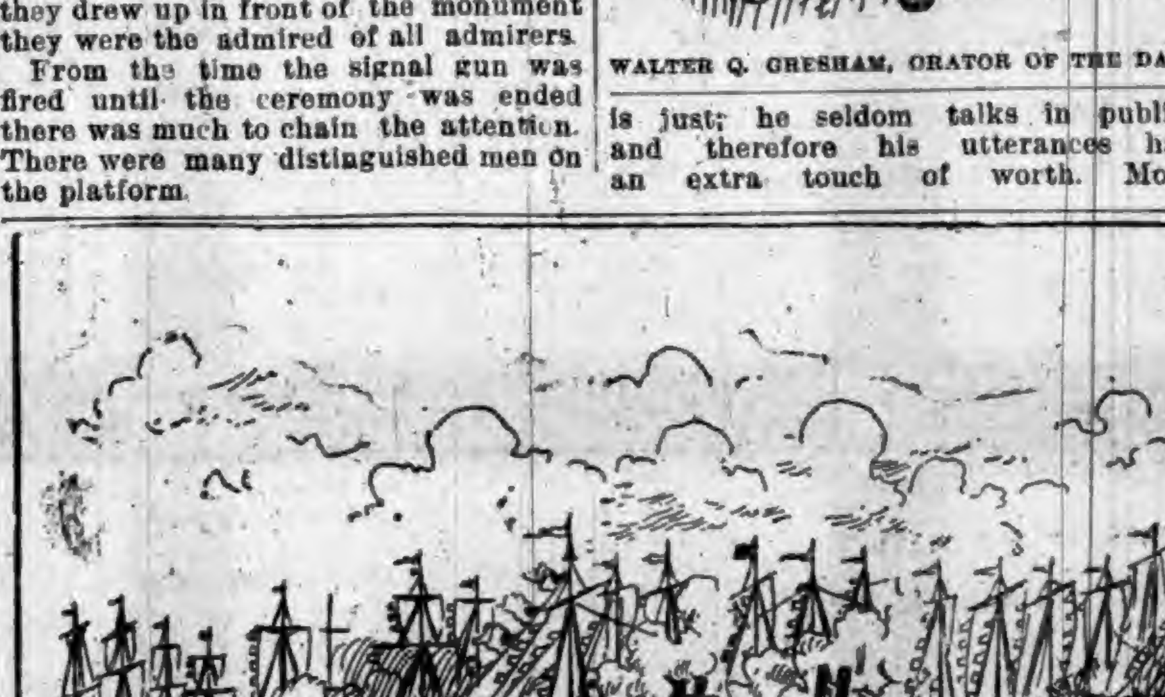
THE GRANT MONUMENT—VIEW LOOKING WEST.

Twenty thousand men marched from the heart of the city to Lincoln Park. Twenty thousand more were willing to do so but that it would have made the parade too cumbersome. Soldiers and civilians, old warriors and young ones, knights without end and societies without number, all anxious to do honor to the memory of the greatest military chieftain of his age, marched in solemn procession. Many an old comrade of Grant was there; many a one who, though knowing him but slightly, had magnified that trivial acquaintance until it seemed to blossom forth to intimate relationship and friendship. Memory knit those sturdy fellows with their god. It was nothing to them that at any moment the heavens threatened to open and deluge them and transform their sober parade into mincing steps, for dry ground. They had splashed through many a country road and not felt half so proud. And when they drew up in front of the monument they were the admired of all admirers.

From the time the signal gun was fired until the ceremony was ended there was much to chain the attention. There were many distinguished men on the platform.



WALTER Q. GRESHAM, ORATOR OF THE DAY.



FIRING THE NAVAL SALUTE.

Once the statue was unveiled the exercises were hurried to completion, for the fear that rain would mar the occasion haunted the Executive Committee. Mayor Washburne accepted the monument on behalf of the city after Edward S. Taylor, for the Park Commissioners and the Monument Association, had presented it. Lawyer William C. Goudy followed in the wake of the Mayor, accepting the monument for the Park Trustees.

And then came the turn of Judge Walter Q. Gresham, who in his oration honored Grant, honored the people and honored himself. The Judge was a close friend of the dead hero in his lifetime, had his confidence and respect, and was charged with much more of either than many of those who vaingloriously make capital out of their acquaintanceship with the General. Gresham was a soldier, therefore he knows the value to put upon Grant's services to the nation; he is a Judge, therefore he is just; he seldom talks in public, and therefore his utterances had an extra touch of worth. More than all, he is an admirer of the military genius and human qualities of Grant and he was fired to eloquence in speaking of him. When he ended his speech a scene was witnessed like unto that which was observed in the summer when Chauncey Depew thundered out the closing sentence of his oration on the occasion of the unveiling of the Grant monument at Galena. Approval of the spoken words took form in a hundred wild varieties, and for the moment the greatness of the orator seemed to overshadow the memory of the man that quickened his tongue to words of eloquence.

Much moved as were the people, there was yet one who was influenced more than all. A figure in mourning; an old lady with silvered hair and a glance of melancholy that dimmed her mien of stately pride. She was Grant's widow, uncertain whether to mourn anew or show her gratitude. Surrounded by her friends, she calmly surveyed the scene and resolutely stifled her thoughts as best she could. And the moment of bitterness which may have flashed across her soul must also have been felt by her son, who sat by her side.

It was a bad day for the naval parade. During the night a heavy sea washed the shores of the lake, and a stiff northeaster did not help to mend matters, and for a time it looked as if the naval display must be abandoned. About 10 o'clock, however, the wind had changed, and the outlook was much more favorable.

The Michigan steamed slowly out of the basin and headed for Lincoln Park. She was followed by the Fessenden and Andy Johnson, with several excursion steamers and the two fireboats covering the rear. On board the cutters were many invited guests, mainly wives of army officers in the parade. When the Michigan came abreast of the monument, 1,500 feet from the sea wall, the order to drop anchor was given. The cutters formed the line, with a fireboat to north and south.

The steamers fell into line outside the warships, and their anchors were dropped on the sandy bottom. The tugs, which had been hurrying to and from the harbor with tows, found places between the larger boats. The lifeboat of the live-saving crew, rowed by sturdy hands, next came, and lay at rest near the Michigan.

The scene from shore was one of striking beauty. The monument was in a noble setting. The lake, always Lincoln Park's greatest beauty, was never half so beautiful before.

As the veil was pulled from the monument the guns on the warships joined with the battery on shore in the Presidential salute of twenty one guns. For the moment there was silence. Then the flag at the Michigan's foremast was run down. It was the signal for a hundred whistles. The fireboats sent heavenward a score of streams. The flag reappeared at the Michigan's foremast and the noisy salute ceased.

The Michigan then weighed anchor and bore to the northward. The revenue cutters followed her and the steamers followed in their wake. Off the Marine Hospital the fleet turned backward and formed a procession down the lake shore past the monument.

Two Good Schemes.

Two farmers recently laid a wager that one could hold a wasp longer in his hand than the other. The man who rubbed chloroform on his hand expected to win, but the other happened to know that the male wasps do not sting, and accordingly got one of that sex. They sat and smiled at each other, while the crowd wondered, until the chloroform evaporated, and then the man who used it suddenly let go his wasp. The other man got the money.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE,

OR

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XXII—Continued.

"I—I would never mentioned it—but it's the only way out of this scrape. They'll take you, sure."

"They never will," said Joe resolutely. Then she pondered, hanging her head. The poor child had no more conception of what marriage was than a babe. She knew people who lived in houses and had servants and children were married people—what made the difference between the bachelor and the head of a house—between a maid, wife, or widow, she did not know."

At last she looked up smilingly and said, "You are my friend. You mean you will marry me; then we can laugh at them."

"That's it, exactly," said Jenks.

"I'll agree—if you can be sure you can marry me. I don't know how—how to get married."

"Why, I'll explain all that to you. You see, all we've got to do is to go before an alderman, or notary—or bring one in here slyly—or a preacher, and he asks us if we are ready to marry each other, and if we say yes he tells us that we are married, that's all."

"But how can we ever manage that?"

"O," said the lawyer's clerk, "you trust me to manage it. I'll tell them you won't make any trouble, that you've found out there's no use; but you want to see a friend before you go away. Then I'll go to a notary I know—there's lots of notaries lawyers—and tell him just how it is. He'll come and marry us and give me a certificate. I'll flirt that in their face—then you and I can go. They'll see the jig's up, and won't they be disgusted!"

"Very well, Mr. Pratty," said Joe, very soberly; "you can do just as you have said, and I'll never forget you as long as I live."

"Then I'll go—the sooner the better," said Ike Jenks, with a smile as he hastened away.

When he re-entered the adjoining room, there was a louder burst of merriment than usual, but Joe paid no attention to it. She was thinking how angry Zeke Caper would be when he discovered he could not take her back to Barnesville Poorhouse. She was absorbed in thought so deeply that she did not observe the door of the room she was in opening. Her attention was drawn to it by a peculiar sound.

Joe turned quickly as a hand was withdrawn; at the same instant something fell on the floor at her feet. She turned swiftly and picked up a ball of paper. It was pressed together, as if it had been held closely between a person's hands. Joe unfolded it rapidly with trembling hands, and holding it near the light read:

"You are all right. Don't fret. Friends are near. Don't do anything, nor say a word. Trust to DICK."

When Joe read this she gave a little cry of joy. Then she recalled Ike Jenks' warning.

What could all the friends do for her? Caper could take her back to Barnesville, spite of them.

And yet, it was comforting to know that Dick was near. Dick! Dear Dick! What did it mean? How did they find where she was? And what hand was it tossed the paper to her?

These were the questions that puzzled poor Joe's brain, as she concealed the note, and composed herself to reflect upon her strange experience.

Meanwhile the lawyer's clerk was enjoying the situation he had created. Wasn't he smart, he asked himself. How his uncle would fume and swear. How everybody would applaud his adroitness when the story came out? Why, it was better than any play he had ever seen, and—well, he'd seen all of 'em, had the smart lawyer's clerk. Why, it would make a column story in the papers. To be sure, it would—nothing less. And her likeness was sure to be in all the papers—yes, and so would his. But he'd take precious good care somebody paid him handsomely to talk.

Whew! A thought struck him. Why, he would write the story out himself, and sell it to the most enterprising newspaper. Why, there was oceans of money—and no end of notoriety in the scheme that Ike was working out rapidly.

Ike's friends were not taken wholly into his confidence. Ike was "not that kind of a hairpin." Oh, no! He told them all he thought necessary. They would pretend to be duped by him; they would let the notary come in—"a real notary, and no humbug about it." Ike said there would be a real wedding, and by and by, when he had his money, he would give them a hundred dollars apiece, "and such a lay-out as would make their mouths water every time they thought of it as long as they lived."

Now he was really off for a notary who would be taken into his confidence "just a little bit," enough to induce him to take a nice fee for marrying them.

"Oh, everything is working lovely!" said the precious clerk, as he darted off in quest of the notary. "Won't I give New York something to talk about—yes, and old England, too; won't I before I'm a week older!"

CHAPTER XXIII.

DOUBLE DICK'S DETECTIVE WORK.

I will return to Dick, now, and note his movements, since so much depends upon them.

Dick realized the difficulties in the way, but his experience had sharpened him. He knew human nature. He was honest, direct, unaffected. He made friends and retained them. The boy reasoned thus:

"As long as I do what's right I need never be ashamed. And why should I ever be afraid?"

Very simple. It looks like a short creed, but it was all Dick had to guide him. It must have been printed on his face, for nobody questioned his statements. His manner was so direct and straightforward, it impressed everybody favorably.

Besides, he had a peculiar way of attracting boys. They took to him instinctively. Dick seemed to realize his power over boys of all ages. He resolved to test it now. He accosted a lad near Monsieur Dufaur's immediately after he left the door. The boy was very well dressed. He was, it was clear, a rich man's son.

"Excuse me," said Dick politely, accosting the well-dressed lad. "Do you live in this neighborhood?"

"Yes; just round the corner."

"Do you know Monsieur and Madame Dufaur?"

"O, well enough to speak."

"I want to do them a good turn, may be you can help me."

The boy looked at Dick curiously. The language was curious—good Samaritans and saints were scarce, and the well-dressed boy was surprised to find one on the market ready to be bid in. He felt like saying as much, but he listened.

"I'll tell you just how it is. One of their servants has lost herself—or somebody has carried her off—that's all the story, but I know the servant, and I'd like to find out what has become of her. All I ask of you is—well, I'd like to know where the worst crowd of boys are to be found in this part of the city. If you'll tell me that I'll be obliged to you. You'll know I'm telling you the truth—it will be in the papers unless the girl comes back soon."

"I didn't think you was lying," said the boy. "What do you want to do with a lot of thieves and jailbirds, eh?"

"Why, if I can get some of them to talk, I may learn something."

"That's a good idea, too. Well, I'll tell you now how you'll find out about the worst gang in the city. They are a bad lot. I know 'em. You go—see here—what's your name?"

"Dick—Richard, I suppose—my other name is Dick too—I'm called Double Dick sometimes."

The boy smiled. He "took" to Double Dick at once.

"Well, you go round to Mother Pitcher's little shop, you'll find it next square. Near there you will see a lot of men loafing, that's a livery. And around there you'll see some boys. Say—if they ask you who you are—that Tom Gerald sent you. That's all. They know me—most of 'em. You can pump 'em then—and may be they will know something. There's a second-hand store there—old Isaac's—you'll see somebody in that block you are hunting."

"I'm obliged to you," said Dick.

"You're entirely welcome—what's the servant's name?"

"Joe."

"Just Joe?"

"I don't know her other name."

"Well, go round there—you'll find some of the rascals—they're always around, trying to see what they can steal."

Dick thanked him and hurried away. The boy looked after him, saying to himself: "There's a fellow that will fool whoever takes him for a greeny, and he has a kind of a fresh look, too."

Dick resolved a plan as he left the boy. The mention of the second-hand clothing store gave him the germ of an idea, which he was working out. By the time he reached old Isaac's, he had remarked two things. One was the suddenness with which he left elegant buildings at his back, and the rapidity with which evidence of a different life accumulated as he noted the dingy buildings. Scarcely a hundred yards intervened—and here was wealth and elegance on one side and squalor, or at least poverty, on the other. Far away off to the left he observed an alley, and even the main thoroughfare was contracted; the houses, too, had a cramped appearance.

He observed the second-hand store near at hand. There was a name—the lettering was very dingy—the store dingier. He could not see through the windows, they were so dirty.

Dick entered boldly, The proprietor looked at him sharply.

"I want to look at some old clothes—about my size."

"Ah—you want old clothes—I have no old clothes."

"Well—some clothes that are not as bright as these."

"Oh—h! Yes—low in color. Why didn't you say so. Step this way."

Dick followed him to a little back room where Isaac had hanging up, lying on boxes, and tossed everywhere in confusion, all sizes and styles of old clothes. They were low enough in color, as Dick laughingly said to himself. There were pantaloons he would scarcely pick off the street—queer dented hats, caps, overcoats—a little of everything.

"I needn't waste time looking over these."

"No waste of time—no trouble to show goods."

"See here, sir, I want the worst old clothes you've got, sir. The worst a boy my size can wear. I'll pay you for the loan of them—if you'll let me put them on here—and come back and change for my own again."

"All right—just you rummage around back of them boxes. I'm pretty sure I put some boys' clothes back there a week ago—he was an Irish boy. I'll charge you a dollar for them for—how long do you want them?"

"Until you close up tonight."

"That is two hours—you can rap on the door—I never go to bed till two. Well—you pay me now."

"Won't it do when I come back? I'm leaving these good clothes until I come back, ain't I?"

The proprietor elevated his hands.

"How could I do business that way? I would go to the poor-house, sure."

"Well, I'll give you half a dollar now, and, yes, a dollar when I come back, if you'll promise not to mention my coming here."

"Me? me mention it! Ha, ha, my boy, you don't know old Isaac; you don't know me. See here, my boy, I'm a poor man, a very poor man; but I'll give you a hundred dollars, cash money, if you can find one person in New York who will say Isaac ever mentions his customers."

Dick handed him a half dollar and speedily found a dirty pair of torn pants and a jacket with frayed elbows and wrists. An old plush cap that almost fell over his ears was his next find. Then he was ready for the transformation he speedily effected.

As he emerged from the back room the proprietor started. "My, I would not know you. You will deceive your own father!"

Dick smiled and hastened out and soon found the boys he had been told he would see lounging in the neighborhood. Although he had never heard of the methods pursued by detectives—had no knowledge of their arts—he was in a fair way to accomplish as fine a piece of detective work as could be conceived.

Accosting a rough-looking boy, larger than himself, he inquired if he wanted to "make a little money."

"Eh! What ye given me?"

"I mean just what I say. I think I can make a trifle for both of us."

"Look here, Pete," said the boy addressed, hailing an associate near him. "Listen to the guff."

"What is it?"

"This here duffer's a rollin' in wealth, he is. Wants to divvy."

"I mean it," said Dick.

"What d'ye mean?" demanded Peter surlily.

"Well, I can't take you into my confidence unless you both promise to keep it to yourselves."

"O, that's all right. We ain't goin' round blowin' like brass-bands: are we Tom?"

"You bet."

"Well, it's just this. I want to find where Dufaur's girl is."

"Dufaur's girl?" Tom looked at Pete and winked, and Pete stuck his tongue in his cheek as he winked at Tom.

"Ax us something easy. Maybe she's sleeping in her little bed—or maybe she's sittin' up with her feller—or maybe she's at the theayter, or hasn't come home from the circus. There's plenty of room for imagination before you're just precious sure where any girl is, and as for Dufaur's girl—ef I wanted to know precious bad, do you know, young feller, what I'd do. I'd go round and ring the bell and ax at home."

"I see you don't understand me," said Dick.

"No, we are very slow of comprehension—me and Pete, here."

"Maybe that will help you."

Dick quietly handed each a dollar note. The change that came over the faces of the two worthies was rare to see. Their eyes snapped as they looked at the money and crammed the notes in their pockets.

"He means biz," said Tom.

"I believe yer," said Pete. "Now, young feller, fire away. I like your beginning first-rate."

"You'll like my ending, too—yes," said Dick very deliberately, as he looked from one to the other with eyes that seemed to search their souls, "twenty times better, if you'll simply tell me how to go about what I want, or help me do what I want."

The boys whispered, and looked at the newcomer askance. They were comparing impressions. Evidently they believed it was a paying thing to accept him at his word.

"Well, now, what is it?"

"Just this," said Dick shortly. "There's a girl missing from Dufaur's in the next block."

"Yes, we know where it is."

"Well, she has been missing over two hours. There is reason to think she has been carried off. If she has and there is anybody you two know who would do it—for big pay—if there is any place handy where they could hide her, you two ought to know just where it is."

"I'm a listenin'. What d'ye think, Tom?"

"What do you think?"

The worthies whispered. Then Tom demanded abruptly, "Do you know the gal—say, what does she look like—which of the gals is it? There's three or four at Dufaur's—Pete an' me seed 'em often."

"The girl I mean is small but very pretty, with very small, black eyebrows——"

"Jet black?"

"Yes, and a clear, white forehead."

"Dimples in her cheeks—shows very white teeth when she laughs?"

"Exactly."

"That's the one, Tom—the one we seed——" Here the boys whispered.

"Well," said Dick, coolly, "you know who I mean. Now, you've seen some one talking to her—going with her?"

"No. No matter; you're off the lay altogether. See here, you're not giving us guff."

"You may believe me or not. These are old clothes I'm wearing just to keep people off the scent until I learn something. I'm not as poor as I look. I've got that much money myself, but there's others will give you all I've promised if you'll only put me in the way of finding where she is. I won't ask either of you to betray a friend."

"He talks right, Tom."

"Yes, them's the right sentiments. Well, we—that is, Tom and me—don't never go back on our friends. But there's a dude comes round here who thinks he knows it all; and we've got it in for him, hain't we, Tom."

"A little—yes."

"And if our guess is right, why maybe we can put you in a way to find the gal."

The truth was that these boys had witnessed the lawyer's clerk rescuing Joe from the loafer's insults a few evenings before—and they marveled much at the scene, knowing how intimate the scoundrels were. They surmised at once that Ike Jenks had a hand in Joe's abduction, and they knew where she would be conveyed, or induced to go.

And then, there was twenty dollars apiece for them. Four times the amount of money either ever had, at one time, to call his own. It was a windfall—a little fortune,

HE WILL LISTEN TO THE SUN.

Edison's Cosmical Telephone to Hear Sunspots Roar.

One of the most curious arrangements contrived by this most curious man for his personal amusement and gratification is the arrangement which Mr. Edison calls his "cosmical telephone." Edison owns an iron mine at Ogden, N. J. There is a bed of magnetic iron ore about a mile long and 450 feet wide, which he says runs down into the earth for five or six miles. He estimates the amount of iron in the mine at 2,000,000,000,000 tons. Around Ogden there is an enormous intensification of the magnetic forces of the earth. It is a well-known fact that the daily variations in these magnetic forces, as shown by the needle, are directly influenced by the disturbances in the sun's spots. These variations are regularly recorded every day at Kew, near London. Mr. Edison says that at his iron mine near Ogden he has more than a million times the concentration of magnetic lines than there is at Kew. To record the daily variations in his own magnetic lines at Ogden, Mr. Edison has constructed his cosmical telephone.

"There are the most wonderful things going on in the sun's spots all the time," he says. "Didn't you ever see them? Why, they are beautiful. The disturbances are tremendous. Bursts of hydrogen fly out of these spots 600,000 miles long. Awful things happen up there. You can see them every day with my telescope."

To construct his telephone he has surrounded the whole bed of magnetic iron with poles. On these poles he has strung a cable of fifteen copper wires. The ends of this cable are run down into a little house, and are connected with the ordinary receiver of a common Bell telephone. The idea is that the surrounding of this enormous bed of magnetic iron with the copper wires will operate for the formation of a gigantic magnet such as is used in the receiver of the every-day telephone. Through this tremendous receiver Edison says he will be put in direct telephonic communication with the sun, only the communication will be one-sided. He can hear everything that goes on up there, but he can't do any transmitting. He believes that every disturbance in the sun's spots will cause a corresponding variation of the concentrated magnetic lines at Ogden, and that this variation will be at once detected in some way by the receiver of his cosmical telephone.

"Yes, sir," he says, "I can hear them with this telephone. The next time there is any violent change in the sun's spots which disturbs the magnetic lines on earth I shall know it, and if 600,000 miles of hydrogen go chasing away from the sun, I shall hear it."

The cosmical telephone is not yet completed, as the wire stringing is not finished; but scientific people other than Mr. Edison will watch with curious wonder to see what success he will achieve.

For the Baby.

The pusher is a table utensil with whose use the majority of bachelors may be unfamiliar, for it is used only by small children. Even the best-bred youngster is apt at first to help himself with the tools that nature provided—to push refractory bits of food upon his spoon with his fingers. The pusher has a handle like that of a small spoon. Instead of a bowl it has across that end and at right angles with it a little shield-shaped piece of silver with the ends curved slightly forward, so that the food cannot slide off at the sides. With a spoon in one hand and a pusher in the other some children can do wonderful things.

The suicide of Boulanger removes the Diss Debar of French politics.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

At last Boulanger has attempted something in which he has succeeded.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

His suicide, like Balmaceda's, was the only way in which he could save himself from a worse fate.—Boston Herald.

When he stood over the grave of his mistress and decided to solve the mystery of the future, perhaps he made no mistake.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Balmaceda-Boulanger. These are alliterative examples for you, Barillas. The world will not complain if you follow where they have led.—Detroit Free Press.

Boulanger, the man of destiny, is dead, and it may be said of him as of another, "the last state of that man was worse than the first."—Baltimore Herald.

It will be fortunate if France profits by the exposure of Boulangism. But it does not take much to make a hero in France, as this man's life shows.—Philadelphia Press.

The assertion that "General Boulanger's death will strengthen France" is bosh, of course. For more than a year past he has had no following.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

His death marks the end of the last and greatest attempt under the Third Republic to turn the progress of events backward and make France again a monarchy.—Buffalo Express.

The real lesson of the career thus pitifully ended is a simple one. It is summed up in Wolsey's familiar advice to Cromwell. Boulanger could not fling away a mean ambition for a noble one.—Boston Post.

With one sentiment in Boulanger's "political testament" there will be a general agreement—the expression of regret that he did not die on the field of battle fighting for his country.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

The suicide of Gen. Boulanger by the tomb of his former mistress seems to be a not inappropriate termination of the career of a Frenchman who had been a sham warrior and a sham statesman.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

He was selfish, mean, and cowardly, a slave of ignoble ambitions, and a victim of well-earned failures. Even charity for the dead should not conceal a lesson so powerful in the discouragement of arrogance and vice.—Troy Times.

He was an opera bouffe hero from the beginning, and never did anything either as a soldier or as a statesman to justify the hold which he gained over the affections of his admirers, or to explain the dread which he aroused in the minds of his enemies.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

He was selfish, vain, and unprincipled. He was a brilliant soldier and a capable commander, but he never had any higher motive than self-glorification and self-advancement. The manner of his death was a fitting end to a sensational and dishonorable career.—Indianapolis Journal.

He overreached himself in his attempts to attain the height of his ambition, and instead of becoming the dictator of France and a second Napoleon, he ended his life miserably on the grave of the woman for whom he deserted his family and disgraced himself.—Philadelphia Call.

The mob of Paris and the aristocracy of France might have forgotten the wound in Boulanger's neck; they might have overlooked the liaison with Bonnemain and the desertion of the wife; but they could not conceal their disgust at the cowardly flight from danger. This disgrace, added to the others, marked the end.—Rochester Post-Express.

Grover's Little Girl.

Baby McKee to Baby Cleveland: "Keep off the White House grass."—Washington Post.

Papa Cleveland feels "a heap bigger" now than when he was elected President.—Omaha Bee.

There is no use in talking. Grover Cleveland's girl ought to have been a boy.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

President Harrison can send hearty congratulations to Mrs. Cleveland's husband—it's a girl.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Baby McKee will turn green with envy when he fully realizes what has occurred in the Cleveland mansion.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Everybody is wishing Mrs. Cleveland and the baby well and some people are interested in the old man's welfare.—Toledo Commercial.

Grover Cleveland is still in the shadow of his bad luck. It was a girl, and Baby McKee is a boy and has the innings.—Petersburg Index-Appeal.

After all, if Baby Cleveland had been a boy there would have been just as many people disappointed. It is an even question.—Kansas City Times.

If Mr. Cleveland is happy, nobody else has any right to complain; but, all the same, about 5,000,000 Democrats wish it was a boy.—St. Louis Republic.

Baby McKee has a rival in Baby Cleveland, and the paragraphers have a brand-new and inexhaustible source of inspiration.—Wheeling Register.

Grover was gently humming to himself "Papa's Baby Boy" when the nurse entered and told him it wasn't that kind, and then his smile was "out of sight."—Columbus Journal.

If Harrison and Cleveland are the nominees of their respective parties for President in 1892, Baby McKee is knocked out as a factor in the campaign.—New Orleans Delta.

Grover Cleveland has been President of the United States, and now he is a father. What has he left to live for? The world can have no richer honors in store for him.—Buffalo Express.

The advent of little Miss Cleveland has conferred on the ex-President the full dignity of a bendict, and will enable him to realize more fully what is "the true pathos and sublime of human life."—New York World.

The House of Lords.

Evidently Gladstone doesn't expect to enter the House of Lords unless he does so with a broom and sweeps the interior from woolsack to entrance.—Minneapolis Times.

If as statesmen there is reason in the suggestion to pay members of the English Parliament a salary, who is there that can conscientiously cavil at similar financial recognition of our able but just now overworked city councils?—Philadelphia Times.

The "Grand Old Man" tells the people of the United Kingdom that Parliament could get along nicely without the Lords. But how would the Lords get along? That is a part of the problem that Mr. Gladstone does not appear to have solved.—Milwaukee Journal.

Mr. Gladstone's speech at the Newcastle congress indicates that the Liberal hosts of England will not lack vigorous leadership in the approaching conflict. The Grand Old Man's brain has not lost its power nor his tongue its cunning.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon; if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Delicate ladies, do not fail to use this great cure, because it will put the bloom of freshness and beauty upon your lips and in your cheeks, and quickly drive away your disabilities and weaknesses.

At the Schaab Furniture Opening.

The Schaab Furniture Co., opened out their new stock Saturday, and quite a crowd was present to inspect as lovely a lot of furniture as was ever seen in Auburn, or in this section. All is of the latest patterns and of the best workmanship. The designs are most beautiful and the work shows the highest degree of skill. There are bureaus of the latest kinds, beds of all improved makes, chairs, sofas, tables and hundreds of other articles, all tastefully arranged, and the visitors were profuse in their expressions of admiration. Sales had already begun, and on this day business opened in earnest. And sales are now increasing daily. It is found too, that in connection with the carpet business in the other room, that it is very convenient for people who are furnishing their home, for carpets and furniture go along nicely in the same channel. We can't name all the fine things, or all the useful things they show, nor can we give the prices, but each must go and see as that alone will give one an idea of the big business they are opening up.

Geo. H. Hoffman, now Lieutenant Governor of South Dakota, came back last week to see the old neighbors. He is in excellent health and reports everything prospering in the new state. It was a fortunate venture, when he went to the new territory, that he has seen become a prosperous state in so short a time. Besides it is another illustration of the success that so often crowns the citizens of DeKalb county where they have a chance to spread themselves.

The COURIER generally hits it in some way even by accident. Last week we spoke of the special train returning from the Waterloo fair, and said it would leave that place at 6:20, get to Auburn 6:15 and the Junction at 6. The time as given by the company was just the other way, but that Thursday's special from the fair has always run any way, in the world but the way the company announced. So it turned out in this case, for it will be seen that the direction was exactly wrong, and true to the history of that special train, at a short time past six, she started north and was soon out of sight, making the direction and time, about the way we had tinkered it up. In about an hour, back it came, as if it had forgotten something. Then we all got aboard and returned to Auburn on the COURIER's special time, getting here about 8:30.

Cedar Beach Club House, the big hotel on the lake, burned last week. Loss about $10,000; insurance of $7.000 on building and $2,500 on furniture. Supposed to be work of an incendiary.

Salyer's "ready roaster" for peanuts is always filled with nice hot "Goobers' the very fragrance of which will make one's mouth water. It don't cost any more to get nice warm peanuts than cold raw ones. Try them.

Gates Saxton, wife and daughter, of Antigo, Wis, have been here a few days, the guests of L. J. Saxton, who is a cousin. They are on their way back to their home after a visit with relatives in old York State, including Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse. Mrs. Failing, who has been with Mr. Saxton here for several weeks, will probably return to New York after this week, as she wanted to have a visit here with the Wisconsin friends.

GREEN MOUNTAIN SALVE: Is unequalled as a cure for all rheumatic pains, weakness in the side, back or any other place, and is unexcelled for cuts, bruises, corns, etc. It is the uncompromising enemy of pain in whatever form, or wherever manifested, and has never been known to fail in a contest with this dreaded foe of human happiness. If you would live a peaceful and painless life, try this great remedy and you will never regret it.

Broke Both Arms.

There was a bad accident in the north part of town Saturday night. Old Mrs. Shilling, mother of Bent. Shilling, had been having an attack of cholera morbus, and about midnight she arose intending to go across the hall, in which was the stairway. But as she reached the stairway, she became dizzy and lost her balance, falling over the banisters and clear down to the foot of the stairs. Her head struck heavily against a door, bruising her face and cutting great gashes in her lips. Both arms were broken at the wrist, and she received, probably, internal injuries, as she spit blood for some time. Drs. Casebeer and Matheny were promptly called, and dressed the wounds on the face, set the broken arms, and did all they could for her, but her injuries are serious, and for one of her age, doubly so.

He Left Some Poetry.

But that was about all. Our people will remember that about six weeks ago, a man from Ohio, rented the room formerly occupied by Mr. Post, and established a restaurant. About one month was enough to show him he could not succeed, and about a week ago, he folded his tent and left. But on the part of the south window facing the entrance, he leaves posted up a big brown paper on which the following "pome" is scrawled:

Farewell to Auburn,
I'll bid you all adue
I may emagrant west some day
But never back to you.

From this it appears that Auburn has lost a genius and has for a brief time entertained a poetical angel unawares.

Court.

Considerable "getting ready" has been done and many cases set for a certain day. Among these is the case as to the pay of surveyor's deputies which is set for Tuesday Nov. 3. Bodine vs Snyder is for Nov. 5; Keller vs Kennedy, ditch case, Oct. 27, and a similar case of Beuchat vs Zonker, same day. Bruce vs town of Butler, Nov 10. Letitia Murray was divorced from Henry and takes her maiden name of Topper. Richard Haskins from Estella. Matie Wolf was adopted by Levi and Mary Till. John H. Baker was here to attend to the Lake Shore case, in the killing of Mrs. Anthony near Pleasant Lake, and the young man at Waterloo lately. Several judgments on notes have been taken.

Dedication at Rome City.

WHAT a fortunate escape it was for some man that Phœbe Couzins never married.

THERE are so many cures for baldness that people are losing their hair from thinking about them.

SMOKELESS powder and war balloons will make the modern battlefield a literal chess-board, on which everything is seen except the small-bore bullet which removes the pawn.

MISS KATE FIELD's suggestion about knee-breeches for the women will not bear thinking about. How are the sidewalks to be kept clean if there are no long dresses to sweep them?

SURGEONS in Pittsburg are trying to make new eyelids for an unfortunate man whose natural and proper eyelids were burned off. It must seem a long time between winks for the poor fellow.

A MICROSCOPE will be exhibited at the Fair which magnifies 16,000 diameters. It will be very useful as a means of discovering the friendliness of the average New York editor for this great national enterprise.

AMERICAN boodlers flee to Canada, and now Canadian boodlers are escaping to the United States. McGreery heads what, it is said, will be a long procession from Ottawa to New York. Even exchange in robbers is no robbery.

ANOTHER idol has gone to clay. The poet laureate of England has a milk route, and the cans are marked "Alfred Lord Tennyson," just like any other milkman's wares. It may even be possible that he owns a pump in connection therewith.

EMPTY stomachs make poor fighters. If Russia spends $60,000,000 to make up for bad crops this year, and has trouble raising a loan for the emergency, there won't be as much war in the next twelve-month as some alarmists make out.

A MAN by walking day and night could circumambulate the world in 485 days, if it were all land and he covered his five miles an hour. Every effort should be made to induce George Francis train to adopt this method of locomotion when he next goes globe-trotting.

IT is denied that Emperor William has promised to come over to the World's Fair, but it is believed he can yet be induced to lend the center of gravity and a few of his other attractive trinkets to the show, provided he doesn't happen to be using them personally at the time.

SOME coffee that lay in the lower story of a burning building in New York was thoroughly soaked with a combination of arsenic, vitriol, paris green, cayenne pepper, and water. The resulting beverage would make a comparatively harmless substitute for ordinary whisky.

KATE FIELD'S WASHINGTON proposes a tax on bachelors, graduated according to the persistency of the cases. But what does the brilliant Kate think should be done by way of collecting revenue from confirmed o——d m——s like the editor (Kate doesn't like editress) of Washington.

AN old lady who died recently at Paris, France, left a legacy of $20,000 in care of the Institute de France, to be presented to the person who shall within the next ten years "successfully communicate with the stars and get an answer." George Francis Train should pause in his rush across Europe long enough to collect the bequest.

THE claim set up for Philadelphia that the first ice cream was manufactured in that city is absurd. Ice cream was eaten at the installation of Charles II. at Windsor in 1667. The King had the first ice-house built in England. Daines Barrington, an antiquarian, notes the fact in a tract published by the Society of Antiquaries of London in 1785.

HUMANITY is waiting to rise up and bless the man who will establish an odorless barber shop. It will not treat unkindly the one who will, at least, create a wholly new and different smell from the one that now lingers around the sufferer who permits a barber to touch him with any kind of moisture or liquor now used around such shops. The man who is shaved in a barber shop usually smells to heaven.

WE have noticed that when a good-looking man marries a good-looking woman, they are not so happy as homely people are. Each one does not admire the other as much as is demanded. The happiest marriages are those contracted by the homeliest people. Those who have received all their lives the admiration of a great many, very seldom settle down content with receiving the doubtful admiration of one.

IF a man owes you a dollar, don't try to collect it on a rainy day. When the sun is not shining, the most cheerful man becomes despondent and sees starvation and the poor house staring him in the face. Let the sun show itself bright and clear, and in five minutes he feels rich enough to afford anything. The women understand this peculiarity of a man's disposition. If a wife asks her husband for money on a rainy day, it is sufficient proof that she is a poor student of human nature.

ON the Atlantic coast the patrol of the life-saving crews has commenced, and now all night long their tireless lanterns will go up and down along the rocks and the beaches through storm and through starlight until the winter is passed. There is not half appreciation for the hardships of these poor fellows and the importance of the work which they do. The lives and the property which they save is greater than any one who has not investigated the matter is at all likely to appreciate and their bravery worthy of the highest praiese.

THE reappearance of the train-wrecker is not surprising. He will continue to reappear until legislation in all the States furnishes the appropriate penalty for his offense. A man has just been arrested in Pennsylvania for trying to wreck a passenger train with dynamite. On looking over his record it is found that he was imprisoned a few years ago for blowing up a train in that State, and causing the death of several passengers. Here is the case of a train-wrecker who was not reformed. If the capital penalty is ever justifiable, it certainly is in cases of men like this one.

THE Indians who have been enlisted in the regular army seem to be making good soldiers. Secretary of War Proctor reports that the six companies of red men so far enrolled show great ambition to become proficient in military drill, that they are very neat, obey orders faithfully, and take much pride in wearing the army uniform. This result is an agreeable surprise to most army officers, who have held that while the Indian made a highly efficient scout, he would never make a trained soldier. It may be that the final solution of the "Indian question" will be yet reached by enlisting the warlike young men in Uncle Sam's army.

IT must be manifest to any close observer that the time is ripe for a new national bird in this great and glorious land. The eagle, as has been said before, does not represent us and should not be permitted to perch upon our banners. He belongs to the Indian and the Indian is no more, and it is noted with pleasure that the General Government has taken up the matter and begun to send out campaign literature in favor of the hen. The latest statistics from Washington show that the value of eggs produced in this country surpasses even the value of the corn crops, and in this country money not only talks but is positively garrulous.

THE actress or comic singer who continues to lose her diamonds as a good advertisement of her business is behind the times. The trick is an old one and no longer works. A new one has taken its place. When eager for newspaper mention she must now find some one else's diamonds instead of losing her own. The new idea originated with a clever young actress playing with a company in Chicago. On her way from the theater to her hotel she saw a small package on the sidewalk, which she picked up and found to her great surprise that it contained $1,500 worth of diamonds. The idea is a good one and it will doubtless "catch on." Actresses, ballet girls and comic opera singers have lost more diamonds than were ever taken out of Golconda and all the rest of the mines together, and they will now begin to find them in just as great abundance.

Girls Who Make Poor Wives.

I never see a petted, pampered girl who is yielded to in every whim by servants and parents, that I do not sigh with pity for the man who will some day be her husband. It is the worshiped daughter, who has been taught that her whims and wishes are supreme in a household, who makes marriage a failure all her life. She has had her way in things great and small; and when she desired dresses, pleasure or journeys which were beyond the family purse, she carried the day with tears or sulks, or posing as a martyr. The parents sacrificed and suffered for her sake, hoping finally to see her well married. They carefully hide her faults from the suitors who seek her hand, and she is ever ready with smiles and allurements to win the hearts of men, and the average man is as blind to the faults of a pretty girl as a newly hatched bird is blind to the worms upon the trees about him. He thinks her little pettish ways are mere girlish moods; but when she becomes his wife and reveals her selfish and cruel nature, he is grieved and hurt to think fate has been so unkind to him.

STEEL RAIL COMBINE.

HOW IT HAS REDUCED WAGES THIS YEAR.

Meeting of the Combine in Philadelphia to Arrange Particulars and Prepare for a Future Boom—Free Trade in Labor Only—Plate Glass and the Tariff—Socks for McKinley.

How It Works.

The Iron Age, under the heading of "The Coming Boom," says: "A discussion of the situation with many thoughtful and experienced members of the iron trade leads to the conviction that a notable rise in the prices in the leading lines of iron and steel must be expected. A consideration of the condition of affairs in the rail trade would point to the conclusion that a notable rise in prices cannot well be expected during the balance of this year, but the anticipation of requirements for 1892 may lead to the beginning of a boom before this year is closed."

In order to take complete advantage of the coming boom, the "Steel Rail Trust" held a meeting last week in Philadelphia, at which arrangements were made for the admission of the Maryland branch of the Pennsylvania Steel Company into the combine. In consequence of this a new allotment was made.

The year now drawing to a close has shown the great strength of the combine. It has been able to maintain the combine prices of $30 per ton at Eastern mills and $31 per ton at the Western without a break, and in spite of the fact that the price of rails has been maintained, and the raw material has fallen, it has been able to reduce wages.

There are six companies in the trust, which, in fact, embraces all the mills in the country. These are the Illinois Steel Company, Carnegie Bros. & Company, the Cambria Iron Company, the Pennsylvania Steel Company, the Bethlehem Iron Company, and the Lackawanna Coal and Iron Company. Since January last, all have reduced wages as follows: The Bethlehem Iron Company reduced wages 10 per cent. Feb. 7. The Lackawanna Coal and Iron Company reduced the wages of its workmen an average of 20 cents per day, Jan. 1. The Pennsylvania Steel Company reduced wages on an average of 8 to 10 per cent. Feb. 1. The Illinois Steel Company reduced the wages of its workmen on March 6. A strike ensued. Carnegie Bros. & Company cut down the wages of their workmen 10 per cent. Thus all but one member of the combine have cut down wages since Jan. 1.

Immediately after the meeting of the combine in Philadelphia Carnegie Bros. & Co. published the following notice in their mills:

"To our employes: As provided in our agreement, we hereby notify you that we desire to end it Dec. 31, 1891, and that we will be ready to make a new sliding scale agreement with you at any time after Oct. 10, 1891, to take effect Jan. 1, 1892. The contemplated changes are rendered necessary principally by the introduction of many mechanical improvements and advanced methods of manufacture, by which the output has been very much increased since our agreement went into effect.

"(Signed) CARNEGIE BROS."

That the above means a "sliding scale" downward seems evident. It shows, also, that the trust is resolved that its workmen shall have no share in the new boom anticipated by the combine.

Protected by a prohibitive duty on rails and closely united to maintain prices, the "steel rail trust" has absolute control of the consumers of its products and of the workmen employed by it.

Ohio Wool-Growers Revolt.

S. B. Carlton, a prominent farmer and wool-grower of Ohio, is one of many Republican farmers who declare they will not vote for McKinley. He says:

"The McKinley bill is ruinous to the interests of the wool-growers. The depression in the wool market is due not so much to the change in the schedule of the wool tariff as it is to the increase of the duty on woolens. The shoddy manufacturers are protected by this duty and the wool market is depressed.

"I would not favor free wool with a high tariff on woolens, for that would be injurious to the wool industry. I would, however, favor free wool if the duty were taken from woolens.

"I sold my wool this year for 28 cents, and it was of a better grade than wool which I sold, before the McKinley bill went into operation, for seven and eight cents more per pound. The cause of this depression in prices is due to the McKinley bill. I have always been a Republican, but will vote against McKinley because of his infamous bill."

How will Senator Sherman be able to explain his vote on the McKinley wool tariff to Mr. Carlton and other Republican Ohio wool-growers? During the debate on the tariff of 1883 Senator Sherman said: "In 1867 the price of wool was 51 cents; in 1870, 46 cents; in 1875, 43 cents; in 1880, which was an abnormal year, 48 cents per pound. This was the result of the policy of protecting the wool-growers, as it is in all industries, to gradually reduce the price. Under the operation of the existing law (the tariff of 1867) the price of wool has gradually gone down."

Lest the Senator might feel tempted to deny that he said anything like this, let him turn to his file of the Congressional Record, where he will find it on page 2201 of part 3 of volume 14.

Free Trade in Labor Only.

When manufacturers go to Congress and advocate high duties the interests of their workmen are predominant. They do not ask for the increased duty for themselves, but solely for their employes. When the duty is increased the mask drops off and their true aims are revealed. This fact is well exemplified in the case of glove manufacturers who secured a large increase in the duty on gloves. Where the workmen come in is shown in the following advertisement which appeared in the Berliner Bericlite, a leading German newspaper last March: "A long-established, large glove manufactory in Gloversville, State of New York, wants ten glove makers. Price for cutting one dozen gloves (Dollirtis' Leder), 3.50 marks. Funds advanced for passage. Further information of R. A. Wirbel and Co., Haynau i Sihl."

Verily, Wm. D. Kelley, the leader of the high-tariff party in Congress, told the truth when he said in 1872: "Yes, men are on the free list. They cost us not even freight; we promote free trade in men, and it is the only free trade I am prepared to promote."

Political Reciprocity.

The political "reciprocity" of the high-tariff advocates is working out its legitimate results. It has been lauded by high-tariff organs as the means by which our merchant marine is to be rejuvenated and new markets for our surplus farm products are to be provided.

Its sham character has, however, begun to show itself. It was never intended, even by its author, to be anything but a political dodge by which attention was to be drawn from the real object of the McKinley tariff, which was the protection of the "trusts" and combinations from foreign competition.

Soon after the Brazilian reciprocity treaty went into effect a line of steamers was put in operation between Baltimore and the most important Brazilian ports. At the time the high-tariff papers published this fact with flaming head lines as the first fruits of reciprocity. After six months' trial the company has discontinued its line for the reason that it does not pay. Its whole history is but another illustration of the difference between political and practical commercial undertakings.

SOCKS FOR MR. M'KINLEY.

His Tariff Leads an Irish Lad to Make Him a Present.

Samuel D. Frew came to this country from Belfast, North Ireland, six years ago. He liked the American climate and the American people, but he could not endure American stockings. He longed for the comfortable, home-knit hosiery of old Ireland. And so finally he wrote to his mother in Ireland to send him some stockings. She was glad to please her boy, and so she knitted six pairs of Irish stockings and sent them to her son.

But she didn't write about them, for she wanted them to be a surprise, and the first young Frew knew of the matter was when a bulky document arrived from the custom-house. It was as follows:

Samuel D. Frew to the Marris European and American Express Company, custom-house brokers and forwarding agents, Dr.:

To specific duty on one pound manufactured wool at 49½ cents	$ .50
To ad valorem duty on articles valued at $2, at 60 per cent	1.20
Reimbursements, charges, and freight	.50
United States bonded storage and labor	.21
Cartage, shipping, or delivery	.25
Postage, etc.	.05
Custom-house entries, etc.	.50
Total	$3.21

When Frew looked at the bill he thought the custom house was at fault; so he went home and hunted up a tariff book and figured out just what the tariff ought to be. Here is the way he made it:

Ad valorem duty on articles valued at $2, at 40 per cent	$ .80
Specific duty on one pound manufactured wool at 35 cents	.35
Total	$1.15

Frew went back to the express office indignant at the thought of being so imposed upon, and handed the clerk the bill as he made it out. The clerk looked at it and laughed. "Oh, that was under the old tariff bill," said he. "This other bill is made out according to Mr. McKinley's new tariff laws."

"You won't accept my bill, then?" said Frew.

"No," answered the official.

Frew thought for a moment. Then he called the clerk aside and whispered confidentially:

"You tell that d——d McKinley that he can have my stockings."

The stockings are still at the custom house, and after the expiration of the required time they will be sold at public auction same as the Astor dresses were.—New York World.

Plate Glass and the Tariff.

The plate glass industry is a striking illustration of the fallacy of the Republican party's promises. For the last ten years the magnates have gone to Congress at each session of that honorable body and pleaded for an increase in the duty on that article. At each session it was granted, Congress no doubt thinking that the plate workers received handsome wages for their skill, and, of course, the pleas that these magnates gave strengthened this belief. If a commission could be appointed by Congress to inquire into the condition of the plate workers and the wages that are paid them, it is likely enough that Congress would reduce the tariff. * * *

The time is coming when the men that work at this industry will be given an opportunity to go before Congress and give their own testimony. If this doesn't have the effect of reducing the tariff, it will have one good effect, and that is it will show Congress that the plate-glass magnates are the biggest liars in the country, and it will also be able to furnish that body with the wages paid in this country and the amount of work that is done. It will also be able to furnish the wages that are paid to the men engaged in this industry in Europe, with the amount of work done. * * *

If there is anything more wanting to convince Congress of the injustice of the plate-glate magnates, or if they are influenced by their arguments, let this fact be borne in mind, that plate glass can be made cheaper in this country than it can be made in Europe. * * *

In America the supply is a little short of the demand. Under this state of affairs competition is shut off. The glass trust is able to charge what they please for plate glass. Now, if there was any fair reason why the war tariff should be continued, it would be all right, or if the American manufacturer could not compete with the European manufacturer, there would be some excuse for this tariff; but when we have every advantage over our competitors, there is no excuse for us to fear them. When we have new machinery that turns out nearly double the amount of plate glass made by the old-style machinery, aided by natural gas, low wages, long hours, and getting more work out of our men, it ought to be apparent that we could outsell the European in any market in the world.—National Glass Budget, official organ of Flint Glass Workers' Union.

Predictions and Reality Regarding Tin Plate.

During the debate on the tin plate duty Senator Allison assured his fellow Senators that as soon as it was certain that the duty would be increased mills would be erected to make tin plate. Said he: "There are a number of establishments which could immediately enter upon the production of these tin plates, or at least within a very brief period, probably within thirty days, and we have assurances, and believe from examination and investigation, that within the time fixed for the taking effect of this new bill [less than one year] there will be in this country a sufficient plant to manufacture all the tin plate that we use. I have no doubt of it."

A whole year has passed since the McKinley bill became law, and the only tin plate mill claimed by the advocates of the duty to be now turning out tin plate for commercial purposes is that of the Apollo Sheet Iron Company. What this mill amounts to is shown by the following letter to Gov. Campbell, of Ohio, from a resident of Apollo. He writes as follows:

"DEAR SIR: You of course have heard of the great tin-plate manufacturing establishment at Apollo. By an effort I have secured a couple of samples, and will inclose you the same. There are two qualities, as you will discover, and not a particle of tin in either. Their building is 7x9, with a high board fence about it. With a couple of other gentlemen, I tried to get in, but was told that they did not allow any one inside the mills. I asked for a sample of their tin, which they could not refuse."

A LARGE manufacturer of grain bags made from imported burlaps has stated that the enormous wheat crop in the great West and Northwest has caused an unusual demand for bags in which to carry wheat and corn from the farms to the market. He is now shipping a carload of grain bags every week to Kansas City. Here the tariff gets in its work. A carload of bags weighs 24,000 pounds, and the duty of 1⅝ cents a pound amounts to $390 on the carload. This has, of course, to be paid by the last man who buys the bags—the farmer.

MR. PARNELL IS DEAD.

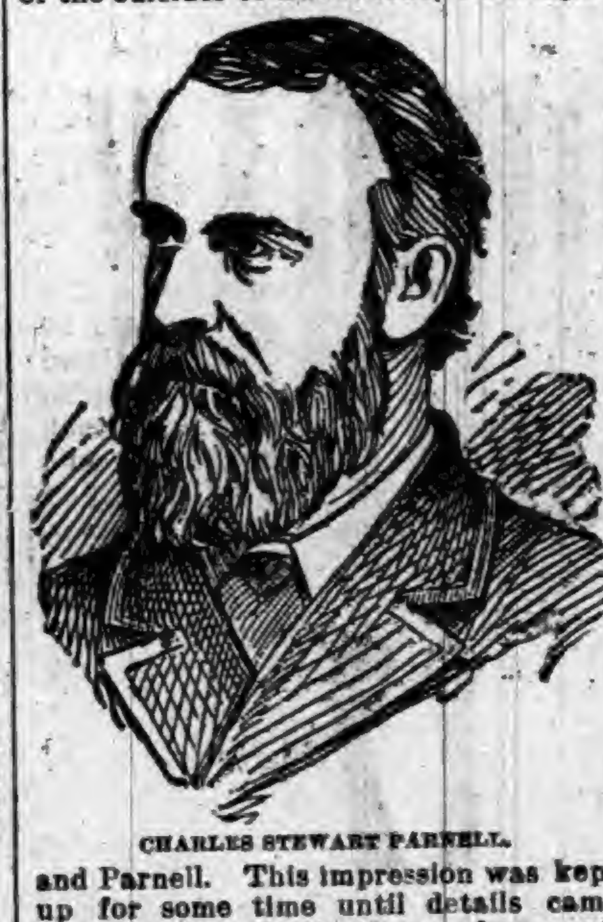
SUDDEN DEMISE OF THE GREAT IRISH LEADER.

London Greatly Excited—A Cold Caught While Speaking in Public Hastened the End—The Startling Event Causes Intense Surprise.

Another Political Figure Gone.

Charles Stewart Parnell died suddenly at Brighton. Death was the result of a chill with which the great Parliamentary leader was attacked last week. He gradually became worse and was compelled to take to his bed, from which he never arose. Shortly after Mr. Parnell had been induced to retire to his bed his condition became so grave that Mrs. Parnell and the attending physician decided it advisable to at once summon additional medical advice. Two other physicians were at once called in, but notwithstanding their efforts Mr. Parnell continued to grow steadily worse, and it soon became obvious that the Irish leader was gradually sinking and that death was but a question of few days, perhaps hours. Since then it appears to have been simply a matter of awaiting the arrival of the inevitable.

The announcement of Mr. Parnell's death caused a tremendous sensation here, says a London cablegram, the news coming while the public mind is still agitated by the deaths of William Henry Smith and other distinguished men. At first it was feared that it was another suicide, and this was fully believed in by many in London, by whom there was a frequent grouping together of the suicides of Balmaceda, Boulanger and Parnell. This impression was kept up for some time until details came showing that the death was from natural causes, the result of a severe cold. Expressions of surprise were at first more numerous than of sorrow, although now that the facts are learned these are succeeded by a feeling of pity. The death was a great surprise. Nobody was aware that Mr. Parnell had been ailing and it is no wonder that rumors of suicide took possession of the public mind, but it seems that his physicians had frequently warned him that he was not strong and that he ought to cease public speaking for a time. He made his last speech in Ireland a week ago. It was noticed at all recent meetings that he worked himself up to a high pitch of nervousness, the tension of which lasted for days after. Despite the entreaties of his wife he persisted in talking, although he promised soon to take a rest.



CHARLES STEWART PARNELL.

Mrs. Parnell is prostrated by grief and fatigue, and the physicians are apprehensive as to her condition. She has been nursing her husband constantly since the cold settled on his lungs. Both were hopeful of recovery until nearly the last, when death came with terrible suddenness.

The effect of Mr. Parnell's decease on the political situation is already being discussed. The healing of dissensions in the national party is looked for which will immensely help the cause of home rule, removing all obstacles to its progress in Ireland itself. The literals in England have reason to hope for the restoration of harmony with the entire body of Irish nationalists and for the assistance of its undivided vote in the next general election.

Mr. Parnell had only just reached his forty-fifth year and there seemed no reason why he should not have lived to attain a ripe old age and to enjoy the full realization of his political aspirations. His death, occurring just at the present critical period of Irish affairs, is calculated to produce a complete change in the disposition not only of the Irish political forces, but to bring about at first a disintegration and then a reconstruction of two political parties of Great Britain. Under any circumstances the Tory coalition with the followers of Mr. Parnell is now at end, and, curious as it may appear, there can be little doubt that his decease will have furnished the occasion for uniting all Home-Rulers under one leader, thereby putting an end to the chaotic confusion which has now existed for nearly a year.

The death of Mr. Parnell calls up to any person who is interested in and has closely followed the Irish movement since 1875 memories of a period into which have been pressed more events of first importance to the Irish people than had occurred during any previous century in the history of that race. All those remarkable struggles and episodes cluster around one striking personality, the story of whose development will constitute a long and pregnant chapter in the narrative of modern society.

Winnings on the Turf.

Judging from turf winnings in England it must pay to keep a first-class racing stable, even as a speculation, although the wealthy owners probably care but little for the financial return. The leading winner for several seasons past has been the Duke of Portland, who has taken in over $600,000 on his horses in three years, and during ten years' ownership of horses has averaged winnings of $80,000 annually. With a small stud he has won the Derby twice, the St. Leger twice, the Two Thousand Guineas, the Oaks, the One Thousand Guineas, the Lancashire Plate, the Eclipse Stakes, the Ascot Cup, the Middle Park Plate, and nearly all the principal two-year-old races. Of these, the One Thousand Guineas, the Oaks, and the St. Leger were won during the past year, the Duke's winnings for the season being about $120,000. Memoir was the most profitable of his horses, contributing to the Duke's gains the handsome amount of about $78,000. St. Serf won six races worth nearly $30,000, and Semolina took the One Thousand guineas and $17,000. The Duke has been an easy leader in English races for some time, but there is a doubt as to whether he can retain his supremacy next season. Indeed, his winnings the past year were not half of what he took in in 1889, when he astonished the racing world and beat all records of the kind in England by winning $370,000. The running of his two-year-olds will have to be improved if he keeps the leadership in 1891.

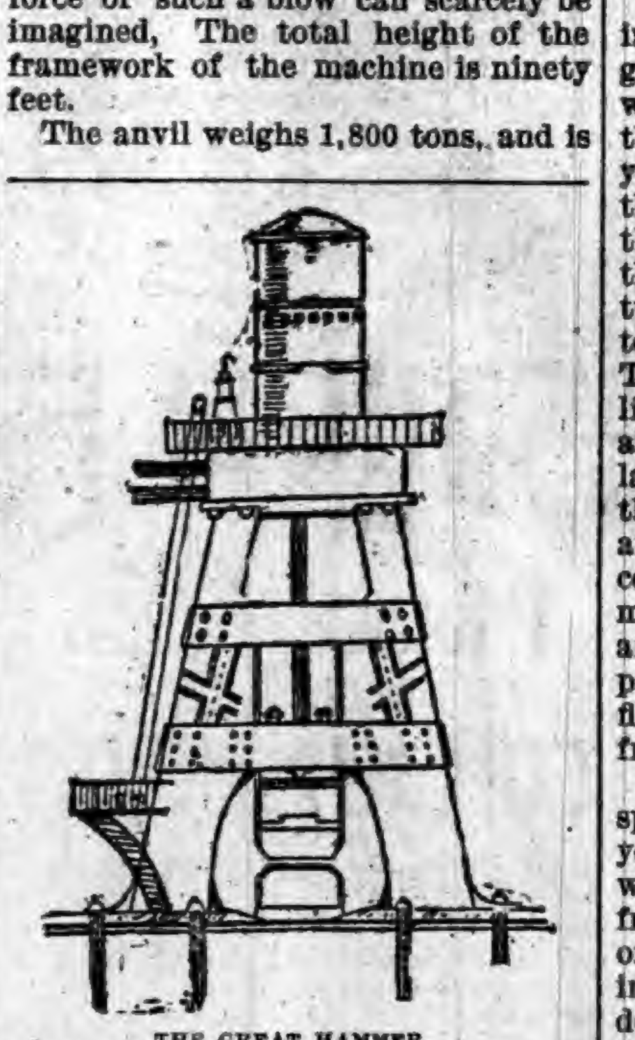
AN IMMENSE HAMMER.

The Largest One in the World Built at Bethlehem, Pa.

There has recently been completed at Bethlehem, Pa., the largest steam hammer in the world. It is to be used for forging armor plates for the new men-of-war, and two years have been employed in its construction. The total weight of the hammer itself, that is, the portion of the machine whose impact is felt, is 125 tons. This weight by the use of a steam piston, is raised sixteen and one-half feet, and from that height drops upon the object that is to be forged. The force of such a blow can scarcely be imagined. The total height of the framework of the machine is ninety feet.



THE GREAT HAMMER.

The anvil weighs 1,800 tons, and is made of twenty-two immense blocks of cast iron, with a steel face upon which the metal to be forged is laid.

The only hammer in the world which approaches this in size is at La Crensot, in France, where there is one that weighs 100 tons.

Mistaken Identity.

An American lady visiting in England one day rashly alluded to fleas by their common name, and it was only when her English listeners looked slightly horrified that she realized that she should have spoken of those offensive insects as "f sharps," or applied to them some equally euphonious title. That unfamiliarity with them is confined to their names, rather than their persons, may be guessed from the following story, which is told about a proposed entertainment of performing fleas, a long while ago, before the King of Prussia.

All the royal party had assembled about a platform, on which the exhibition was to take place. The entertainment was called "Napolean and his Generals."

The court sat in expectation, but the "professor," who was manager of the affair, shook his bushy mane and rolled his eyes in anguish, while he wrung his long hand, and marched up and down his little cage. At last he gasped:

"Napoleon is missing!"

He paused, and cast his eagle eye over the distinguished company. He observed that the princess royal fidgeted a little. Throwing his whole soul into his eyes and voice, he approached that august lady and the King.

"Sire, madam," he cried, "this exhibition is a poor man's all! Without Napoleon, his generals are valueless. There can be no entertainment without him. An unfortunate entreats. Allow me."

The princess wore an old-fashioned fichu. In the fraction of a second the professor had turned back several of its white folds, made a capture, and proudly returned to his troop. Arrived on the stage, he ventured to relax his hold, and examine the captive.

"Oh," he groaned, in despair, "it is a wild one!"

In a Chinese Printing Office.

One of the most interesting places in Pekin is a Chinese printing office, conducted just as it was centuries before the barbarous world outside of the Flowery Empire had dreamed of the art of typography. The office contained a score of plain square tables, on which the cases of type were spread out, much after the English method, only taking up much more room. One man was engaged in setting up type; another was printing. The former stood before a table on which was what may be called the Chinese "case." It was a solid block of wood about twenty-two inches long by fifteen inches broad, and perhaps three inches deep. The inside was hollowed out to a depth of about a quarter of an inch, this depression being still further hollowed out into grooves about three-quarters of an inch deep. The block has twenty-nine of these grooves, each filled to a depth of a quarter of an inch with ordinary stiff clay.

With his copy before him, armed with a small pair of iron pincers, the compositor began his work; character after character was transferred from the case and firmly pressed into the clay. When the "form" was complete a flat board was placed on the top and the characters pressed perfectly even and level with the surface, and the wooden edge was cut to form the border found round every Chinese page.

The printer now received the form and carefully brushed the ink over the type. Taking a sheet of paper, he pressed it down all over the form so that it might be brought in contact with every character. He then removed the sheet and examined each character, carefully adjusting those which were not quite straight with the pincers, and apparently never touching the type with his fingers. After sufficient copies had been struck off the type was distributed, each character being returned to its particular box. The type in the form was of three sizes, each character being kept in place entirely by the clay in which it stood. They were cut out of some hard wood and were perfectly square.—New York Tribune.

Japanese Marriage Customs.

It is extremely difficult for a foreigner to see a wedding in Japan. In China guests are freely invited, but in Japan they consider it too serious an affair for any one to witness who is not a blood relative.

The bride has no dowry, but a very extensive trousseau. Great stress is laid upon her disposition and ability to manage household matters.

When a Japanese of the middle class has no son he adopts the husband of his eldest daughter, and the son-in-law takes the name of the father-in-law and inherits his business or patrimony.

The betrothal is an affair of great importance, and often the bride and groom meet for the first time. The wedding is celebrated on the night that the bride reaches her sixteenth year or the groom his twentieth. On the eventful morning the trousseau of the bride is carried to the house of the groom and such articles of furniture as she may possess are arranged to give elegance to the coming fete. The images of the gods of both families are brought and placed before an altar ornamented with offerings. A lacquer table holds a dwarf cedar and the figures of the first pair and the ancient tortoise and stork. Then to complete the picture by a lesson of morality and patriotism they mix among the presents of the fete some packages of edible sea weed and dried fish, to teach the young people the frugal habits of the ancient Japanese.

Toward the middle of the day a splendid cortege approaches. The young wife, veiled and dressed in white, advances escorted by two friends and followed by a procession of relatives gay in costume and rich in embroidery. The two friends who do the honors are called male and female butterflies. In their dress they imitate this charming insect, which the Japanese consider an emblem of conjugal felicity.

Excepting a few Buddhist sects, in no part of Japan do they employ a priest to bless the nuptials. They do not publish the names or go through any of the formalities with which other countries surround the civil contract. The officer of the police in whose quarter the marriage takes place writes to his chief announcing that a couple intends matrimony and naming the day.

It is worthy of remark that in all the ceremony there is no written contract. It is simply verbal. This gives all the advantage to the husband, who can divorce his wife if she talks too much. The most holy part of the ceremony is a touching symbol of union. Among the objects in the center of the circle is a metal vase in the form of a drinking vessel with two mouths. This is beautifully ornamented with bands of colored paper. At a given signal one of the ladies of honor fills with saki, a Japanese drink, this metal vase; the other takes it and places it at the lips of the kneeling couple, first the husband and then the wife. It is thus that they begin their married life and drink equally of the joys and sorrows of this new life.—Hearth and Hall.

A Waste of Raw Material.

How sad it is to contemplate the selfish indifference to the welfare of others that marks the average human being. In how few breasts the golden rule of doing as you would be done by finds a place.

Not long ago a worthy granger rushed out of his house to warn off a lot of hunters he saw tramping over his just sprouting wheat.

"Never mind your wheat, old Hayseed," said one of the party. "We ain't after quail this time—we're business from way back. A fellow held out four aces on us down at the saloon last night, and scooped the entire gang. He lit out before we tumbled, and as we have a suspicion that he's hiding in the brush round here, we've come out to bag him."

"Oh, is that all?" said the hard-worked farmer. "Well, boys, I'll tell you what I wish you'd do when you drop your man—just prop the stiff up agin that stake in the field yonder. I can't find time to make a scarecrow, and the geese are comin' in powerful thick these moonlight nights."

The "outraged community" promised to comply with this very reasonable request, took a pull at the old man's flask, and passed on.

And now for the contemptible sequel. Nearly a month afterward the granger discovered the remains of the four-acer lying in the midst of the chaparral, right where he fell, where not even a buzzard could have seen them—where he was of no sort of good to anybody on earth.

It is occurrences like these that shake our faith in human nature, and may well cause the moralist to ask, "Whither are we drifting?"

An Unexpected Downpour.

A venerable preacher of the United Brethren Church named Eberly has been conducting revival meetings in a school house near Huntington, Pa., and deep interest has been manifested. The minister has shown a partiality for the phrase, "O, Lord, shower thy blessings down upon us!" which is incorporated in all his prayers. When this period of his invocation was reached, the other night, the congregation was thrown into a state of consternation by a copious fall of water from a trap-door directly over the minister, drenching him through and through. The services were checked by this extraordinary fulfillment of the preacher's supplication, and tranquillity was not re-established until an investigation revealed the cause of the unexpected downpour. A 15-year-old boy had secreted himself in the attic of the school-house before the meeting and given practical effect to Rev. Mr. Eberly's prayer with two buckets of water.

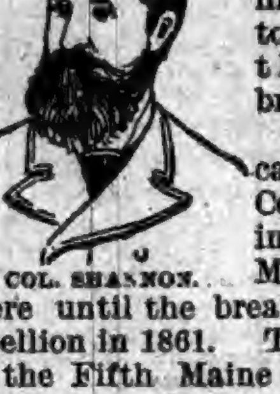
MINISTER SHANNON'S CAREER.

His Fine War Record and Long Residence Abroad.

Col. Richard Cotts Shannon, who has been designated by the President to be the United States Minister at Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Salvador, was born in New London, Ct., Feb. 12, 1839. While he was very young his parents moved to Saco, Me., and there he was brought up.



COL. SHANNON.

In 1858 he became a student at Colby University in Waterville, Me., and remained there until the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861. Then he enlisted in the Fifth Maine Volunteers as a private of Company H. He was Major and Lieutenant Colonel by brevet when mustered out of the army in 1865.

Most of the next eighteen years of Col. Shannon's life were spent in Brazil. When James R. Partridge, of Maryland, became the United States Minister to Brazil in 1871, Gen. Grant made Col. Shannon Secretary of Legation, which place he held, acting nearly a year as Charge d'Affaires, until 1875, when he resigned. He engaged with profit in building and operating horse railways in Rio de Janeiro, and returned to this country in 1883. He entered the Columbia Law School in New York, was graduated, and was admitted to the bar in 1885.

Col. Shannon is a trustee of Colby University, to which he recently gave a building for scientific purposes; a member of the Loyal Legion, and of the Fifth Maine Regimental Association, of which he has been president.

Preaching Against Fortune-Tellers.

The Rev. Father Wall, rector of St. Paul's cathedral, scored the people of his parish the other day, particularly the married women, on the practice of patronizing fortune-tellers and wizzards who read the past, present and future,

"When a person visits a fortune-teller to ascertain his fortune, he goes to find out what God alone, and no one else, knows. When you give to a fortune-teller your presence, and make him or her believe that they have a fore-knowledge of seeing the inside view of the future, you adore him and make him believe he has power not given to the devil. If you think he can peer into the future, you make him the equal of God. Therefore, you have strange gods before Him, and violate the first commandment.

"We find youths, young girls, and especially married women, making a practice of this sin. If you deliberately visit a fortune-teller you are indulging in a mortal sin. If you go out of pure thoughtlessness, it is not so bad; but it is a sin, nevertheless. It is the same thing as going to an idol and giving your heart to it. This is idolatry of the worst kind. I would like to impress on your minds that fortune-tellers compose the worst characters in the community. One class of the business is fortune-telling and the other is the seduction and ruin of youth. To my own personal knowledge I know of persons who have been ruined by consulting these people. I warn all persons of the congregation, and hope you will extend this knowledge, that it is a mortal sin against the first commandment. Avoid them and their nefarious business for the designs they have on the morality of youth."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

He Knew His Friend.

Two wealthy retired lake captains and vessel owners, one living in the city and the other in a suburban village, recently met. The city man was interested in a church building enterprise, and he handed his old chum a subscription book. The recipient of this attention demurred, saying he was not interested in that particular church.

"Never mind," said the city captain in a bluff manner. "You must give something."

"How much have you given?" asked the suburban captain suspiciously, for he knew his friend.

"Nothing yet," a trifle uneasily; "but I expect to."

"Now, look here, you don't expect me to do more than you are willing to do."

"I simply haven't made up my mind yet. You can't get out of it that way, and must put your name down."

"Will you give as much as I do?" looking the solicitor straight in the eye.

"Yes—that—is—yes—why, yes, certainly." Be it known that the city captain, while active in all good works, is reputed to be, like Barkis, "a little near."

"All right," promptly replied his friend, with a suspicion of grimness about the smile on his lips, and taking the book he put his name down for $500.

The city man gasped, but he was too much of a sailor to flinch, and down went his name for $500 also, a sum which he was abundantly able to give. The church building fund is about $900 richer by reason of that little encounter.—Cleveland Leader.

Different Shades of Gold.

Gold in use, either in coins or jewelry, is invariably alloyed, and this changes the color to so marked an extent that the pure article is not considered properly tinted or just the correct thing. Even pure gold varies in shade very much, the Australian article being many shades darker than the Californian, although neither approaches the Asiatic product in point of redness. The Australian sovereign, worth about $5, is the reddest coin in circulation, while European coins generally are lighter than ours. In America the alloy used is much harder as well as darker than that used in Europe and the difference between the loss from abrasion or rubbing amounts to thousands of dollars every year in favor of the shipments across the Atlantic east as compared with the shipments west. An absolutely pure gold $5 piece would wear away to an alarming extent and would be objected to as light weight before it was many weeks old.

Millions in Sight.

There's millions in it—millions of solid, solid gold and silver; not the figment—so to speak—of the thriftless visionary, but the tangible lucre that makes men opulent, that makes nations powerful, that moves all that is movable by human agencies in the universe. There's millions in it—in the vault that underlies the sub-treasury building. The doors are opened; the expectant visitor takes his hand from over his eyes; he peers in, enters, and Aladdin's cave is changed into the store room of a retail grist-mill. He sees nothing but a solid mass of little canvas sacks, piled from floor to ceiling, homely as a grocery overstocked with breadstuffs. This is the principal vault, and each of these little sacks contains 1,000 silver dollars. There is no gold here. The vault is thirty-six feet long, seventeen feet wide and eight and a half feet high, yet it holds only 13,000,000 of silver dollars. The gold vaults are about as prosy, the money being sacked and piled in the same manner, each sack containing $20,000. It is asked, Where does all this money come from? The answer is that the sub-treasury—this mean, little, inadequate building—is the receptacle for the entire revenue of the Government from the Pacific coast west of the Rocky mountains; from British Columbia to Mexico.

The business of last year amounted in round numbers to $38,000,000. Naturally it may be asked, why is all this money hoarded instead of being out in circulation? Paradoxical as it may seem, a great deal of it is in circulation. To all intents and purposes it is passing from hand to hand every day, doing its part in the great game of financial shuttlecock and battledoor. It is represented by silver and gold certificates—a form much more convenient for business purposes, while the coin itself is stored in the vaults, away from the depreciating effects of abrasion, and from loss by other causes. A majority of the twenty-dollar gold pieces in circulation have lost so much by abrasion that they fall below the standard weight. There are in the sub-treasury over 7,000 half-dollars that have become depreciated simply by ordinary abrasion while in circulation. This depreciation sometimes amounts to as much as twenty-seven dollars on a thousand. Gold being a softer metal suffers more from the same treatment. Hence, for this reason, and also because they save time and trouble in handling, and are more convenient to carry, gold certificates are fast growing in favor. Beside there is an advantage to the Government in issuing silver and gold certificates.—San Francisco Call.

Aluminum Motor.

J. W. Hanson, a jeweler in St. Paul, Minn., and formerly a resident of Cincinnati, is having an electric motor made out of aluminum by a Sixth street model making firm. It will be the first motor ever made of this new metal. It is gotten out on an entirely new design, occupies a small space, and is very light, yet accomplishes as much as an ordinary motor. Thus an ordinary motor may weigh 100 pounds or more, yet this weighing twenty or thirty, being a quarter less than the ordinary, possesses great advantage in lightness. A boy can walk off with it.

Help but Don't Coerce.

To help nature in its efforts to throw off the trammels of disease is, of course, the legitimate method of medication. This method is, unfortunately, too often diverged from and help perverted into coercion. Drastic, excessive purging is undoubtedly the most frequent form of coercion of this sort. The bowels are forced, literally wrenched into action. Of course, this is accompanied with much griping pain, and succeeded by exhaustion, which leaves the organs of evacuation in a state incompatible with subsequent regularity and activity. The last state of that man or woman who uses drastic cathartics for constipation is decidedly worse than the first. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the finest laxative in existence, since it produces the needful but no abnormal action, is progressive, not abrupt in operation, and strengthens instead of weakening the organs upon which it acts. Use it for malarial, kidney, rheumatic and dyspeptic ailments.

Irish Puns.

Charles Lamb made some famous puns, and, according to the London Truth, his mantle seems to have fallen upon his namesake, Mr. Charles Lamb Kenney.

The popular journalist just mentioned was dining at the house of a friend, and by chance swallowed a bit of cork with his wine, which gave him a severe coughing fit.

"Take care, my friend," said his next neighbor, with a very brilliant attempt at a witticism; "that's not the way for cork."

"No," gasped the sufferer, "it's the way to kill Kenney."

Duties of a Guest.

While a guest make yourself amenable in a certain degree to the habits of your friend's household. Do not attempt to ride your hobbies or air your special "isms" on such occasions; it is not in good taste. Guests should adjust their taste, sight, smell, etc., to the different conditions of the homes visited. "August Flower"

I had been troubled five months with Dyspepsia. The doctors told me it was chronic. I had a fullness after eating and a heavy load in the pit of my stomach. I suffered frequently from a Water Brash of clear matter. Sometimes a deathly Sickness at the Stomach would overtake me. Then again I would have the terrible pains of Wind Colic. At such times I would try to belch and could not. I was working then for Thomas McHenry, Druggist, Cor. Irwin and Western Ave., Allegheny City, Pa., in whose employ I had been for seven years. Finally I used August Flower, and after using just one bottle for two weeks, was entirely relieved of all the trouble. I can now eat things I dared not touch before. I would like to refer you to Mr. McHenry, for whom I worked, who knows all about my condition, and from whom I bought the medicine. I live with my wife and family at 39 James St., Allegheny City, Pa. LOGAN, Ohio, Oct. 18, 1890.
I used Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic in the case of a 13-year old boy for a case of St. Vitus Dance of two years' standing. His condition was most lamentable, as his limbs were constantly in motion, and at table his hands could not hold knife, fork or spoon. The effect of this medicine was at once noticeable to all, and the boy himself remarked, "I know it helps me," and before the second bottle was used up, he insisted that there was no necessity of taking more as he was entirely cured

The County Teachers' Meeting.

The meeting of the County Teachers' Association at the High School in Auburn Saturday was well attended and very interesting. It must have been profitable, also, as the papers read, and the lectures, were able and right in the line with the live teacher's work. We were not able to attend in the forenoon, but are told, the work was excellent. President French's inaugural address, is spoken of as an able effort. At the afternoon meeting there was singing by Lula Kuhlman, Della Weaver, Nettie Willis and Blanch Shilling, with Lettie Meese as organist. Stella Merica also gave a fine violin solo. The music was heartily cheered. Laura Sawvel, had a recitation, "Angels of Buena Vista," which was nicely rendered. The greatest hit was the "talk" by Prof. Fairfield, of the Normal School at Angola. He is certainly an able and original thinker, and all the brilliant points he made went straight home. He won good opinions of all present, and many were sorry when needed business of the session, compelled him to stop. His speech will be long remembered, and surely it had a good effect. A resolution was adopted which changes the meetings, giving but one each year and that a two-days' session. The next will be on Friday before the second Saturday in October, 1892. There were about 100 teachers present and a few visitors. Mr. Merica was also in attendance, and assisted with his usual energy and earnestness.

Mrs. Wm. Goodwin had her pocketbook taken from her hand bag at the fair. She saw the thief as he got it out, and diappeared in the crowd.

The U. B. church will have a woodchopping at Eli Walker's next Wednesday, for the purpose of getting the winter's wood for the church. Mr. Walker donates the wood, the members do the rest.

The weather, the fore part of last week made the prospects look rather gloomy, but Thursday, brightened up and crowds poured in from every direction. Friday was even more pleasant, and a good number of people were on the grounds. The general verdict seemed to be that we had a good fair, which was a success financially.

Those on the sick list this week are: Bell Melton, Mrs. James Hull, Mrs. Bitha Timmerman, John Timmerman, Richard Ervin and Mrs. Green Brown.

The oyster supper was a success, over six dollars being realized clear of expense. The young people enjoyed it as the ample space in the large store gave them an opportuity to enjoy themselves.

Will Koch and Bert Timmerman have rented houses in Auburn and will move there in the near future. Mrs Koch will be greatly missed as she is a good dressmaker and has done the sewing in this section for the past two years.

The "Kid" band from this place played for the S. of V's. entertainment and bean supper at St. Joe last Surday evening. A few others attended from here and report a splendid time. Allie Guysinger and the Boren brothers, from Jackson Center, composed the orchestra and were highly complimented.

The Concord correspondent for the St. Joe News stated last week that the post-office had changed hands and that Henry Baker was now postmaster. This is a mistake, as G. W. Draggoo is still postmaster, and the Auburn postmaster has no power to change the postmaster here, even if he should wish to do so. We beg pardon for this correction, but no doubt the correspondent was misinformed.

A merchant by the name of Hyatt from St. John's, was here Monday looking up a location for a store, having disposed of his store there. He tried to induce Richard Ervin to sell out, but as Mr. E. is very well satisfied here, he failed. He also stated that he was an accomplished musician, and teacher in voice culture, having followed this profession for 8 years. Sometime this winter he will organize a musical convention here.

The school authorities are fitting up a neat little cottage to relieve the overflowing primary departments.

J. A. Campbell returned last Friday, from his visit to southern Kansas. He reports the weather dry and much colder than here, with good crops.

The authorities are taking steps toward the erection of a building sufficiently commodious to accommodate the town for water works, electric light plant, city prison and council chamber. The wants of the place demand something better in the way of a prison than the very poor calaboose that now does service in that capacity.

A case of accidental or careless shooting occurred Saturday, in the woods west of town. Mrs. Coleman and Mrs. coats, colored, Cora Thompson and two other women, were gathering nuts, and a boy named Charley Cook was hunting with a shot gun. The gun by some means was discharged into the faces of the women. It will no doubt teach the boy a lesson in handling a gun.

The young men on the J. H. C, telegraph line, prepared an oyster supper in honor of Wm Hough, L S & M. S. agent at New Era, at the residence of J. F. Housel, a few evenings since. All seemed to enjoy the occasion so far as festivities were concerned, but many expressions of regret were given at the departure of Mr Hough for his new abode at Mosherville, Mich. He is a young man of sterling qualities and rare business ability, and his many friends here join hands in wishing him abundant success in the new field.

AN ADDRESS.

Welcome to the 100th Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

By Wm. H. McIntosh.

Veterans of the 100th Indiana Volunteer Infantry! Auburn gives you a welcome to her hospitality and greets you cordially and kindly. She trusts that your reunion here may be replete with pleasant incidents and bring full measure of serene retrospection.

Auburn ever desires to express her friendly interest in her soldier citizens and to maintain deserved reputation for heartiness of her receptions of them.

Her citizens cherish honest pride and ennobling, unselfish public spirit in thus manifesting their regard for all worthy veteran soldiers who come to us in a confidence that all reunions, general or regimental have never failed to confirm and strengthen.

Auburn freely and gladly recognizes the claims of our volunteer soldiery to civic and state honors, as from the weighty and many tomes of history their heroism has been confirmed.

Fired with patriotic ardor, you responded to the nation's call for help and gave up all to fight for Union and for that watchword to imperil life, and your record is brilliant as your devotion was sublime.

In memory of home leavings and bitter partings, of wearying marches and tedium of camps, of perilous picket duty and crucial trials in the awful arena of conflict, remembering you never faltered in fealty or courage and that you represent the 100th Indiana Volunteers, as they are known in annals of state and nation, Auburn is proud to welcome your presence and to honor herself in numbering you as her guests at this reunion.

Your honor is largely her honor. In your ranks, marched young men from this county. Your victories were theirs and ours.

Departing southward, you bore in center of your serried ranks our beauteous colors, state and national; and shotrent and weather-worn, returned them unstained and triumphant bearing in golden letters inscriptions of your numerous battle-fields.

Eagerly we watched your progress from state to state; sadly we noted your lessening numbers; in painful suspense awaited tidings of Mission Ridge; triumphed in that wondrous charge and sorrowed in its fearful sacrifice of life.

Permit me to recall that inspired action as the magnificent panorama recalls it to view.

Forty thousand veterans on a day in November, 1862 in battle array, looking silently and gravely at a towering height above the valley where they stand.

The crest, cannon-crowned and lined with veteran marksmen is pronounced unimpregnable by military scientist and the enemy secure, look curiously down upon the maneuvers below.

Suddenly the long blue lines advance, now to the base, now begin the ascent, forward and ever forward they go—on up the heights— wildly pushing on, singly and in groups, smoke of cannon envelop and conceal them from eyes far below, then battle flags and clusters of men in blue come into view all along the works of the enemy, and Mission Ridge is won.

Grim were life's phases when some of the boys, limbs shattered in such warfare, long since left hospitals, hopeless, maimed, vigor drained, to drag out wearisome existence and to drop out of remembrance of the country that had used them. They had given, not life, but all that made living pleasant and desirable.

As Atlanta's long and bloody campaign dragged through the summer of 1864, we ever grew graver, sadder and more resolved to contrast the rigors of war by the helpful ministrations of peace. In the name of equity and gratitude, you appealed by your manhood and the country grandly responded.

In that famed march to the sea, you were of those who punished the foe at Griswaldville, and at Washington were in the grand review.

From near and from distant homes, some of the old boys have gathered here, leaving for a day, their homes and business, to thus revive those inspiring, martial memories, but it is at call of peace and not of war—to commemorate a triumphant past and not a hazardous future, that fife-note and drum-beat suggest the cadence of the old route step.

Our welcome to you, is blent with sympathy, respect, pride and noble selfishness. We find it strikes harmonic chords within our own bosoms to note fraternity of renewed associations, and they responding, vibrate with kindred feelings.

In the far away days of civil war, fancy pictured peace, home and honored name, a united people, a powerful republic, but we congratulate you that fact has outsped fancy and distanced your fondest, greatest expectations.

For perils past and to many for consequent present infirmities, it is just and compensative that you should feel welcome and at home with us, as it is pleasant and obligatory on our part to render you the award of merit and our tri bute of recognition.

In this the beautiful fall time, when all Europe is in arms and war clouds gather dark and portentous, while our own dear country rests serene and from her mighty harvest pours across old ocean a tide of golden grain to embattled corps and famishing peoples; the fruits have ripened and now frosts glisten on the late herbage and the midday sun shines with mellowing softness presaging winter time and rest.

The season typifies to you, soldiers of the 100th Indiana, your past toil and present compensation.

Glancing backward down the vista of a quarter century, you pass successively the stages of youth to manhood, manhood to old age.

In all those years up to this pleasant occasion the fruits of your sacrifices and, hardships, your perils and privations have been garnered by the statesmen of our land in amendments to the constitution and this mighty republic has, known a harvest of peace, progress and prosperity as plenteous and wonderful as your battle-fields were many and sanguinary; and now as you have come to us to be our transient guests, your bodies the worse for your campaigns, your hair silvered with the frosts of age, and your hearts stirred with pride and happiness, we rejoice to bid you welcome to Auburn as tried defenders of our loved country and as men whom the town delights to honor.

Veterans, comrades, fellow-citizens! As such you are thrice welcome. The commonwealth regards and acknowledges your eminent services; the ex soldier sympathizes in soul-trying actions and the civilian contrasting happily your glorious record as soldiers, with your worth and standing as citizens is proud to claim your acquaintance.

Auburn desires that your reunion of 1891, may long be remembered in cheerful retrospection for comrades' fraternity and our good town's hospitality—and to this end, makes known her gratitude for your services, wishes you a pleasurable meeting and with heart in hand extends her earnest, kindly welcome.

Perfectly sure, perfectly pure, perfectly harmless is Simmons Liver Regulator.

IRA BRANDON,

NORTH MAIN ST., AUBURN.

It Was Different Last Year.

The Dispatch complains because Surveyor Hook is trying to do his part of the work of cleaning out ditches. Last year it complained because he didn't do it. Last year, Oct. 23, the Dispatch had the following on this subject:

"The last legislature passed a law requiring ditches to be cleaned between Sept. 1, and Nov. 1, under a penalty of $1 for each day after Nov. 1, remaining uncleaned, which the trustee may secure through judgment of a justice of the peace, for the benefit of the general township fund. In case of failure of owner to clean, the trustee shall cause the work to be done, and the cost shall go on the tax duplicate against the property. The trustee receives $2 per day for actual services. New allotments may be had every two years on the petition of half the interested property owners. This act does not apply to ditches extending into two or more counties.

So far as we have been able to learn surveyor J. M. Hook, has not furnished an abstract for a single trustee in the matter of any ditch. The surveyor must make the allotments under the new law before the trustee can do anything with the ditch. The time is almost up in which the ditches must be cleaned. Under the law a penalty of $1 per day attaches where ditches are not cleaned by Nov. 1st, and there is no exemption made where the neglect is the fault of the surveyor and not the trustee or owner of the ditch. The allotment must first be made by the surveyor and furnished to the trustee. It has now been almost two years since the law passed requiring these allotments for recleaning ditches to be made though it did not take effect as to the cleaning of the ditch until this fall, yet the surveyor has done nothing toward carrying the law into effect, or making it possible for the trustees to perform their part. Do the people want to re-elect Mr. Hook when his carelessness may cost the already-too-much ditch-taxed people of the county thousands of dollars?"

So it will be seen the Dispatch is not honest in the matter. If Hook should have done the work then, he should do it now. If he should not do the work now, he should not have done it last year. All the Dispatch cares is to make political capital. Last year it sang one song, to get up dissatisfaction among democrats. This year it sings to the exact reverse, but for the same reason—to get up a quarrel among democrats. So we repeat, it is dealing dishonestly.

Specimen Cases.

S H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with neuralgia and rheumatism, his stomach was disordered, his liver was affected to an alarming degree, appetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shephard, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O, had five large fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklen's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Some Reminiscences of Its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1855.

If spiritualism were true; if the departed which visit us only in dreams were permitted to look again upon the scenes where their lives had been passed, and if they as spirits were essentially the same as when corporeal, they would marvel at and admire human enterprise, find some things to vex and much to enjoy.

They would see their errors repeated and their efforts at progression imitated and they would have deep interest in the fortune of Auburn and the welfare of its citizens—their descendants and friends.

However it may be, it is difficult to idealize the town and its leading inhabitants in 1855 without a conscious feeling somehow called up, that faces and forms once, and long familiar at the homes, on the streets in the offices and stores and at the court house or in the churches and lodges, come like shadows, so depart leaving a sense of actual visitation.

We are still writing of a town and its people which in most respects has long since ceased to exist and which has become historical.

Old Auburn, dull village of the woods, has little in common with the new Auburn of 1891.

Circumscribed in area, small in population, difficult of access for considerable portions of each year by reason of bad roads, the county seat seemed to have but one substantial advantage, it was the seat of justice and the goal of the tax payer. It was proud of its one home printed struggling little newspaper with its peculiar motto, "A strict construction of the constitution." Its business interests were creditable to its size and opportunities and its religious holdings indicated good intentions by the few, hampered by lack of means and nullified by failure of leaders to rightly interpret the dispositions and feelings of the people.

The sun of prosperity did not shine on the churches and brief reference indicates a decadence. The Methodist outlying classes had dissolved or run down, while a very few of the members came again to Auburn where the "standbys" held steadily on without variation or loss.

There were no revivals, no conversions, some who connected themselves with the church, fell away, even the taxes on the property were allowed, from poverty in part and from indifference, to become delinquent, and it was later recovered through Wesley Park who on two several occasions purchased at tax sale. In the language of an aged staunch member of the church "everything seemed to go against us that year" and the minister in charge, satisfactory in the pulpit, was powerless to stem the tide.

Nor were the affairs of the Presbyterian society in better plight. Trouble had arisen, dissensions existed and a change was inevitable and desirable.

Auburn was "in the depths" and it was not surprising that a part of her residents removed elsewhere and it is to the lasting credit of those who remained that they so staunchly stood by and joined their fortune with that of the town.

The annals of the county seat reveal various mutations, some discouraging others inspiring hope, and upon such foundations established by the families of whom we write, rests our present thriving, progressive and beautiful town.

It is a noticeable fact that the offices were held successive terms by few men and although the records show that the best interests of the place have not always been in worthy hands, still the people could always be depended upon to quietly depose from position such as appeared derelict in performance of duty.

In 1855, the town board was composed of worthy and representative men and their acts on important occasions impress the pristine sterling truth that "public office is a public trust," and private gain a remote and secondary consideration.

During the spring at a meeting of the full board composed of Messrs. Waterman, Case, Brandt, Berry and Spangler, it was decided that if at any time, the marshal elected should became disqualified to serve, then any justice in the town was empowered to appoint his successor.

The corporation tax collected on the county duplicate was but $140.46 and the special school tax was only $119.49. These sums now regarded insignificant, small as they were still were burdensome to those who had but little, yet they were enough on settlement with the town treasurer to produce a balance in favor of the municipal fund of $91.98½ while the school fund was found to be over paid $34 36½.

There were outstanding, municipal orders amounting to $23.95 and of school orders $158.92. Later the school revenue levy was fixed at 60cts on each $100 valuation calculated by county auditor, there were $14, delinquent municipal tax collected and $182 18 of special school which sufficed to clear both funds of debt.

In consequence of the failure of the publisher of the Messenger to give legal notice of the general election, no election was held and the officers of the town continued to serve for another year, so saving expense and fully as satisfactory to the people.

The sum of $75 was appropriated to construct a ditch along the boundary line of the west side of town.

There was no tiling as now and the deep wide drain through which the water was drawn from marshy lands required three crossings which were built, two in the first ward, the third on the south side of 7th street to accommodate travel from Jackson to 8th streets. The necessity for drainage was urgent for public utility and on sanitary grounds, but the work was gradual, slow and ineffective and is yet incomplete in newer parts of the town.

It would be difficult to realize the condition of numerous town lots at this time, they were mere swamp holes grown to rank vegetation, colonized by frogs and exuding from their stagnant surface miasmatic vapors which gave rise to chills and fever. They gave no promise of that time coming when men like Nedry and Blodget would drain and fill them and build their homes upon the sites so reclaimed.

(To be continued next week.)

THE REUNION.

On the evening of Tuesday Oct. 13, quite a number of the members of the 100th Indiana Infantry had arrived to take part in the annual reunion.

Among these were Colonels Johnson, of Elkhart, Col. J. W. Headington and Captains Brown, Crocker, Barney and others.

The resident members had made excellent ararngements and the occasion was one to be pleasantly associated with Auburn.

Handsome badges had been prepared, the inner portion containing the long list of engagements, the outer fastened by a handsome pin, the bottom decorated with gilt fringe. Each comrade was supplied with one on Wednesday.

Henry Wolf, a member of the regiment led the drum corps to the Lake Shore depot and escorted the arrivals in gallant style through our streets.

The men presented a fine martial appearance, marched as veteran infantry would be expected to do who had had such practice, though so long ago.

In number there were about one hundred and their bearing reflected credit upon the organization. They were assembled at the Opera House and called to order about 11 a. m. A motion was made and carried to adjourn exercises until 1 o'clock. Meanwhile a box of persimmons was brought forward, the gift of an old army friend, and each veteran received two of this peculiar fruit, in shape like a small tomato and doubtless they will be preserved as souvenirs of the occasion.

An excellent dinner was ready for the boys at the Sebring building to which they did full justice. Then earnestly conversing of old times, in couples and squads, they made their way, in many instances accompanied by their wives, to the "Opera House" again.

The chairman called the meeting to order when Rev. Geo. Healy, of the First Presbyterian church of Auburn, opened the exercises by a brief, earnest prayer for the success of the reunion.

He was followed after music, by our townsman W. H. McIntosh in an address of welcome to which a pleasing response was given by Col. Johnson.

Enrollment and roll call by companies followed; the date of next reunion was set at Oct. 13, 1892, the place Elkhart, and Col. Johnson was elected president and Gill. Rhodes, secretary.

Excellent singing by the quartet, was heartily enjoyed and encored, and good speaking filled in the time.

The audience constantly grew in numbers and they came to stay.

Interesting reminiscences of the regiment were recalled by Col. Headington, a fine appearing gentleman, of pleasing address, and the proceedings of a meeting held by the 100th, at Raleigh, North Carolina on occasion of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, as printed in the Raleigh Standard, were read by Captain Brouse and brought vividly to mind the intense excitement, the news created in Sherman's armies.

Miss Mabel Hartman gave a recitation entitled the "Whistling Regiment" which was well received.

Speeches were made by Capt's. Sabin, Brouse and Barney, all of intense interest, not only to their old comrades in arms, but to the audience.

Just prior to adjournment, a soldier of the regiment, a type of the genuine veteran came upon the platform and asked the attention of the audience. He then with deep feeling stated that local history copied from Terrell's Report had recorded his name as a deserter and asked that the slander be refuted. The captain of his company stated that he had the muster roll at home and that it stated that in Feb. 25, 1863 he was "discharged" at Indianapolis and the substitution of "deserter" had done him a grave injustice. He was promised an investigation of facts and action on the result.

The regiment was then placed under command of Col. Johnson for the purpose of having the men properly grouped for a picture.

Several exposures were taken by our popular artist, J. G. Clapp, the first, of the veterans only, others of veterans and their wives, when they were ready for rations preparatory to the evening campfire.

In the evening the great hall was filled. The first on the program was the reading of a history of the regiment by Capt. E. J. Sherlock, of Kansas City, followed by a paper "In Memoriam," of the 100th, by Mrs. Col. Johnson. Then came interesting speeches by Gen. Blair, Capt. Hartman, Col. Johnson, and perhaps others whose names escaped us. There were also appropriate recitations by three little girls. They were: little Iss Upson, of Lagrange, Ollie Elson, of Jackson township and Pearl Kelley, of Auburn. All three did well and were applauded greatly. At a late hour the meeting adjourned, closing one of the most enjoyable reunions Auburn has had. They meet next year in Elkhart.

Science in Bread Making.

At the recent annual meeting of the American Chemical Society, held in Washington, D. C., the question of the value of carbonate of ammonia as a leavening agent in bread, or as used in baking powders came up for discussion, in which Prof. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, and President of the Society; Dr. Richardson, late of the United States Department of Agriculture in Washington; Dr. Wm. McMutrie late Prof. of Chemistry in the University of Illinois; Dr. E. H. Bartley, late Chemist of the Brooklyn, N. Y., Board of Health, and Prof. of Chemistry of the Long Island College, and others took part.

The consensus of opinion was overwhelming in favor of the employment of ammonia. It was stated as a fact that ammonia rendered the gluten of the flour more soluble than the original gluten, and that the bread in which this action was produced by carbonate of ammonia must be more digestible and hence more healthful, and because of the extreme volatility of carbonate of ammonia and its complete expulsion from the bread in the process of baking, is one of the most useful, most healthful and most leavening agents known.

These conclusions are borne out by the very elaborate and exhaustive experiments made by Prof. J. W. Mallet, of the University of Virginia, which show conclusively that bread made with a baking powder in which one per cent., of carbonate of ammonia is used, in connection with cream of tartar and soda, is not only of uniformly better color and texture, but a product more wholesome, because the ammonia serves to neutralise any organic or lactic acids present in the flour.

AGAIN ON THE WING.

A few Items of Interest as they were picked up by our Office Bird in his Flight Across the Country.

Our Office-Bird with glistening eyes and flushing cheek,
Took his flight across the country green and wide;
He has no wings, feathers or bending beak.
But is cunning and sleek to scale and glide.
Always found where you least would think,
Ever ready to talk business, laugh or chat;
When through he's gone as quick as wink,
And you'll be none the worse for having seen the brat.

With item book, pencils and pens
He goes where he may choose;
In city, country, dives or darkened dens
This precious privilege he does not abuse.

Our friend G. W. Wilcox is preparing to make some needed changes and improvements about his residence in Butler township. He has a very neat and well-proportioned house, and proposes to add beauty to convenience by putting on a slate roof.

Milford Clark is still at the front in farming interests. He has everything about the home aranged so it is handy, and I consider myself obligated to him and his estimable wife for substantial favors and profitably pleasant entertainment a few days since.

Jacob Fansler was at home the other day, where "the bird" was fed and entertained. Mr. F., is a prosperous farmer and his surroundings indicate that industry has marked his career, permitting him to now enjoy the pleasure of rewarded labors. He has a pretty grove on the farm in which the decoration ceremonies are held.

The old church on the corners is being overhauled and repaired, and several important changes made in its appearance. When completed, it will be a model of convenience.

Alex Baltz is now very low with some complicated disease, which seems to be beyond the skill of physicians to control. At times he is apparently better, and remains so for some time, then relaxes into a helplessly uncertain condition. But hopes are entertained for his recovery.

Anyone having been at New Era, a year ago and seen how delapidated, lonely and forsaken, everything about the place appeared, would be wonderfully and pleasurably surprised to see how things are now. The depot, postoffice and grain elevator building, has been tastefully re-arranged and looks as neat and clean as if some good housekeeper had been there fixing up things in that singularly attractive style understood only by members of the domestic departments of life. A new agent handles the mail, sells tickets and operates the mystic keys, while just a little to the north, the air is rife with the hum, whirr and ceaseless noise of a sawmill in active operation. Taking all matters into careful consideration, New Era is on a boom.

Our friend J. F. Housel, still continues to handle the mail as genteelly as ever, at DeKalb. He has been postmaster in that office for many years, and the little burg would not seem right if he were not around with the ever-present and incomprehensible mail bag. He is also, a prosperous farmer.

D. N. Terry was found in the field husking corn. He is a very pleasant gentleman and we were favorably impressed during the short conversation with him. He seems to be a successful tiller of the soil.

C. H. Baber can cry a sale as effectually as the next one. He announces in another column that he is at the public service in his line.

Philip Noel is the master wood man. He has been in the business about four years, and this time is supplying Auburn and Garrett, with large quantities of dry beech and sugar wood. His success as a farmer is excellent, and his social qualities go far toward placing him on a solid basis as a citizen of Old DeKalb.

O. C. Himes, of Cedar Creek, is one of those wide-awake business men, who have observed the "Tide in the affairs of men, which, if taken at its flood leads on to fortune," and taken advantage of the opportunities within his reach to successfully encircle the grocery and general produce trade in that vicinity. He is doing a large business, and a few weeks ago established a branch at DeKalb, Ind. He carries a stock valued at about $4,000. His prosperity in business has made it possible for the people of that community to be independent of the larger towns so far as having to go to them to trade, is concerned.

The acquaintance of P. P. Hossler, of LaOtto, was formed on Saturday. He appreciates the weekly appearance of the COURIER.

Our friend Richard Dudley, was not expected to live Saturday.

The farmers are busily engaged in preparing for the chilling blasts of winter.

Obtuary.

The funeral services of Catherine Gardner were held in the Evangelical church last Sabbath, there being a very large number of relatives and friends present. Services were conducted by Rev. W. S. Tracy, of Waterloo, assisted by Rev. Tedrow Butler, Ind. Catherine Ash was born in Somerset county, Pa., Oct. 1, 1814, died Oct. 15, 1891 aged 77 years and 14 days. She was first married to Jacob Beidler in 1837, afterward to Joseph Gardner, Nov. 4, 1849 She was converted to Christ in her 19th year and lived a faithful christian for over a half century and died in the triumph of faith. Her body was laid to rest in the Waterloo cemetery. Thy will, oh God be done.

County Buildings.

The grand jury went out to the County Home Tuesday, and also inspected the jail, and make the following report:

We have visited the county infirmary and county jail and find both well managed and in good order, but we find the sewerage of the jail imperfect, and should be improved, and we deem it of the highest importance that the proper authorities give it their immediate attention. We further find the County Infirmary building out of repair, to the extent that a new building is necessary. The roof of the present building leaks, the floors are broken through and worn out, no ventilation, no facilities for bathing, and the accommodations generally very bad, the building cold and unhealthy, and we earnestly recommend that steps be taken at once, looking toward the construction of the new building for a home for the poor of our county.

TROPHIES OF A CHASE

AFTER THE FLEETING ITEMS OF NEWS.

Troubled Times in Ireland—Natural Gas Explosion at Pittsburgh—Canada After Her Boodlers—Raum's Resignation Confirmed.

TROUBLED TIMES IN IRELAND.

A Veritable Kilkenny Cat Fight in the Streets.

Kilkenny special: When William O'Brien arrived in the city to attend the county convention which met here he was met at the station by a great crowd of people who, upon seeing him emerge from the waiting-room, greeted him with mingled cheers and hisses. A strong police escort was drawn up in front of the station, and as soon as Mr. O'Brien had taken his place in the carriage which the committee had provided for his use, the officers formed in a square about it and the progress to the town hall began. As policemen and carriage moved slowly along the enthusiastic cheers of Mr. O'Brien's admirers were met and sometimes drowned by the ugly hissings and derisive jeers of those in the crowd who insisted in looking upon the occupant of the carriage as one of the enemies of the dead Parnell. Presently the sinister cry of "murderer" was heard and until the arrival of the procession at its destination, this epithet fairly divided the honors of the occasion with both applause and hisses.

While the convention was in session numerous rows were taking place between the factionaries, and the streets were filled with fighting mobs. So savage were some of the attacks made by the partisans upon their opponents that the police were repeatedly compelled to separate the fighting men in order to prevent outright murder. In one or two instances the officers found it necessary to charge the crowds in force.

After the Boodlers.

Ottawa (Ont.) special: Considerable excitement was caused here recently among members of the civil service when it was learned that the Minister of Justice had started his criminal prosecution of those whose boodling propensities were disclosed before the Parliamentary Committee last session by the arrest at Montreal of Senecal, the late Superintendent of printing. The arrest of Senecal is a direct blow at the Hon. J. A. Chaplau, Secretary of State, whose influence had been used throughout to save his friend.

Wreck on the Panhandle.

A wreck occurred at the union depot, at Newark, Ohio. Panhandle freight train No. 67 was thrown from the track by the drawbar falling from the engine. Ten cars loaded with merchandise were completely demolished, the cars being thrown in every direction and the goods scattered over the ground. One car loaded with cash registers was smashed to pieces and almost all of them destroyed. All trains were delayed for a considerable time. Loss fully $20,000. No one was injured.

Conductors Consolidate.

So far as the members and officials are concerned the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors are consolidated, making an organization of 30,000 men. The agreement between the officials has been made public, giving the terms of consolidation, and the title, which will be known as the "Order of Railway Conductors of America." The agreement will be confirmed at the next annual meeting of the order.

Daisy Day Went Down.

Milwaukee special: Capt. Peter Adams, of the steamer Daisy Day, arrived here, and reports that his steamer went to pieces on Little Point Sable, in the northeast gale which sprung up the other day. The Daisy had just completed loading at Lee's peer, when the gale struck her. She was owned at Pentwater by Banker & Son, who purchased her at Marshall's sale in this city on Oct. 6, for $1,700.

Natural Gas Explosion.

An explosion of natural gas occurred in Snamen's large carpet store, at Allegheny City, Pa., setting fire to the building and seriously injuring three persons. The building is entirely destroyed. The injured are F. G. Hilliard, an employe of the Allegheny Heating Company; William A. Snamen, and an unknown woman. Hilliard was so badly burned the physicians think he will not recover.

The Irish Party.

The Dublin Freeman's Journal says that a strong feeling in favor of a determined effort in the direction of reconciliation exists throughout the country. The Journal adds that the measure of home rule granted by the Liberals is inadequate and it will again become necessary to coerce them into submission. This could only be done by a united party.

Lavelle's Defense.

County Auditor Lavelle's defense in the case of the attempted destruction of the court house and records of Daviess County, Ind., will be insanity. As the experts proceed in the examination of his books the accounts become more and more tangled and it will be some time before the full amount of his defalcation will be learned.

Raum's Resignation Confirmed.

The New York Herald prints a Washington dispatch which it credits to the Post, of that city, declaring positively that the resignation of Commissioner Raum is in the hands of Secretary Noble, to take effect November 30.

A Prize Fight in Ohio.

Celina (O.) special: Sports from Fort Wayne, Cincinnati and Dayton, assembled in a woods about three miles from here to witness a prize fight for the championship of Ohio, between James Johnson, (colored) of Cincinnati, and Dan Bailiff, of Lima. Johnson had won thirty battles and was the favorite. He was knocked down twice in the first round, five times in the second, and three in the third, and failed to respond when time was called and the fight was given to Bailiff. Several thousand dollars changed hands on the result.

Three Men Mangled by an Explosion.

A terrible explosion took place at Tucker's watch box, a short distance below St. Clair, Pa., in which three men were killed and one fatally injured. Mountain engine 955 on the Philadelphia & Reading road was drawing a train of empties up the grade when the boiler exploded, completely demolishing the engine, tearing up the tracks and doing great damage to the telegraph lines and surroundings. The names of the killed are: Charles Warnicker, brakeman, of St. Clair; Harry Wagner, engineer, of Port Carbon; Mahlon Keepe, fireman; Charles Bauer, brakeman, of St. Clair, fatally injured. The men were in the engine cab when the explosion took place. No cause is assigned for the explosion, the engine being just out of the shops.

ANOTHER COLLISION.

Two Men Killed and Four Others Injured on the Pan-Handle, at Steubenville, Ohio.

The limited express and a freight train on the Pan-Handle Railroad came together headforemost at Mingo Junction, near Steubenbille, Ohio. Two men were killed and four injured.

Killed—William Marshall, brakeman, Columbus, Ohio, and the express messenger, name unknown.

Injured—A. Stanley, postal clerk, Cincinnati; A. R. Keys, postal clerk, Trinway, Ohio; W. S. Davis, postal clerk, London, Ohio; Robert McPherson, baggagemaster, Columbus, Ohio.

The cause of the accident is not exactly known, as the piece of track known as the Gauntlet, where the accident occurred, is said to be so protected that only one train can be on it at a time.

A later dispatch adds that both engines and several freight cars were demolished. The combination baggage and express car caught fire and was consumed. Brakeman Marshall and Express Messenger Joseph Vestner, who were in this car, were caught in the wreck and burned to death. No passengers were injured.

Chinamen in Droves.

St. Vincent (Minn.) special: Within the last few weeks on account of the strict enforcement of the United States customs regulations in New York State, the tide of immigration has been diverted to the Northern frontier of Minnesota and North Dakota. Minnesota, between Lake Superior and Red River—100 miles—is guarded by only three customs officers, and North Dakota is not in a much better plight, consequently the celestials are coming on in droves, in spite of the best efforts of the officers. Collector Nelson, of the Dakota District, received a telegram from Killarney, Manitoba, informing him that fifty-two Chinese had just gone south toward the international boundry line, and Deputy Collector J. C. Williams, of St. Vincent, received intelligence that twenty-eight others are on their way south toward St. Vincent. This is but the beginning, and with about 400 arrivals weekly at Vancouver from China there will be a large increase in our population unless active measures are taken.

A Rain-maker's Joke.

Kansas City (Mo.) special: It is believed that Rain-maker Melbourne has played a trick on the local Signal Service observers, who are much mystified over a rain which fell here yesterday morning. The indications for a few days have been clear and warmer. At 6 o'clock the other evening there was not a cloud to be seen anywhere, but at 6:30 it was pouring down rain, with heavy wind and thunder. At 7 it was again clear, and there was no depression of the barometer. The observers say that the rain was purely from local causes, as there was nothing to indicate it. It is now asserted the rain was due entirely to the efforts of Melbourne, the rain-maker, who, it is alleged, has been working secretly here for the past week, and whose work has been crowned with success.

Wreck on the B. & O. Road.

Garret (Ind.) special: There was another wreck on the B. & O. road recently. The east bound train ran into a freight. Fortunately the fast train was vestibuled, and none of the coaches left the track, but the engine and baggage car were smashed into smithereens. The baggageman had just left his car to look into the smoker. The timely move saved his life. The rear sleeper stood upon the bridge over the Elkhart River. The freight cars were piled sky-high in a promiscuous mass, which required the united efforts of a large crew of wreckers nearly all day to clear away, and entailing a financial loss exceeding by far the wreck at Hicksville. No one was injured but a brakeman on the freight, who jumped from the top of a car and rolled down the embankment.

A Two-Edged Sword.

St. Petersburg special: Alarming news comes from Moscow, Kieff, and other cities of the Empire regarding the distressed condition of trade and commerce. The famine in the provinces has its counterpart in the general stagnation of business in the commercial centers. In Kieff alone the past week witnessed a score of failures, and in Moscow and St. Petersburg the situation is deplorable. The commercial troubles are in part due to the expulsion of the Jews, as Jewish merchants have been calling in their accounts and preparing for the apparently inevitable day when they would be ordered to the pale. The famine is the chief cause of business distress, as the trade with the stricken provinces has almost entirely ceased.

Not Downed Yet.

Dublin special: The prospectuses of two new papers to be published in the Parnellitte interest in this city have been issued. The capital is £60,000. The directors are: E. J. Kennedy, Pierce Mahoney, M. P. for Meath, north; Edward Holman, Timothy Harrigan, M. P. for Dublin Harbor; William Hopkins, Q. C., and Dr. James Fitzgerald, M. P. for Longford, south. The morning paper will be called The Irish Daily Independent, and the evening paper The Evening Herald. Both the journals will adopt the program of the Parnellite convention, which assembled in Dublin in July last, and will advocate full political judgment for Irishmen.

Base Ball Talk.

There are to be twelve clubs in the American Association next year. This is almost certain and is the scheme which Von der Ahe, Phelps, and the other magnates have been working upon of late. The following cities are those which will next year make the Association circuit: Louisville, St. Louis, Chicago, Kansas City, Cincinnati and Milwaukee in the West, and Boston, Baltimore, New York, Brooklyn, Washington, and Philadelphia in the East. As will be seen, Kansas City and Cincinnati are to be annexed in the West, while Columbus is to be dropped. In the East New York and Brooklyn are to be added. There is little doubt as to whether Kansas City or Sioux City is to be admitted. Outside of this the circuit has been about fixed up.

Attempted Train-Wrecking.

Findlay (O.) special: It is just learned that a bold attempt to wreck a train was made on the Nickel Plate Railroad between Stuartville and Arcadia, Ohio. Two pieces of iron had been placed between the rails in such a way as to throw the engine off the track and cause a wreck. Peter Williams, a farmer coming to this city, discovered the obstruction and removed it, at the same time notifying the agent at Stuartville. It is supposed that some one with a grievance against the road is guilty of the dastardly attempt and detectives are investigating.

Unknown Ship Wrecked.

There has probably been a disastrous wreck or collision at the entrance of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Signal Service has received a dispatch from St. Paul Island that wreckage, consisting of pieces of ship's rails, scantling and dials, has been washed ashore. St. Paul Island is mid-way between the northern part of Cape Breton and Cape Race, Newfoundland, and the probabilities are that there has either been a collision between incoming or outgoing vessels or a wreck of some sort.

Died from Fright.

Galente Medesto, an Austrian, escaped from officer Keech, at Alliance, Ohio, while being taken to the lockup for disorderly conduct. The officer fired two shots at the Austrian while in pursuit. After running a few squares Medesto suddenly threw up his hands and fell forward upon the sidewalk. In five minutes he was dead. The coroner found the man had died from sudden heart failure. He had started to run from the officer, and on hearing the pistol shots he became so terrified that he actually dropped dead from fright.

Balfour's Appointment.

The Pall Mall Gazette, referring to the appointment of Rt. Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland, as First Lord of the Treasury, and, therefore, as Conservative leader in the House of Commons, in succession to the late Rt. Hon. William Henry Smith, says:

"The appointment is no bad thing for the opposition. We prefer to meet fighting men. It will be nothing but a boon to the Liberals to have opposed to them a man specially identified with coercion in its most defiant form."

Opium Smuggling.

Washington special: It is said in certain circles here that startling disclosures will be made in regard to the smuggling of opium into this country from the British possessions. It is alleged that after six months' investigation officers of the Secret Service have made a ponderous report to the Treasury Department, showing the existence of an opium smuggling ring, which includes many prominent men and United States government officials, and that, in extent, it has not been equaled since the famous whisky ring of 1876.

Pity He Didn't Shoot the Tramps.

Dennis O'Brien was accidentally killed at South Point, Ohio, while defending himself from the assault of three tramps, who had insulted a lady in O'Brien's presence. When remonstrated with by O'Brien the three toughs attacked him. O'Brien attempted to defend himself by clubbing them with the butt of his gun, and when he struck one the weapon was discharged, the load passing through O'Brien's bowels. He lived but a few hours. His home was at Buena Vista, Ohio. The tramps escaped.

The Mafia's Work.

Gaelno Barrogann, an Italian lugger owner, was assassinated at New Orleans. The affair bears all the marks of the Mafia. There was a game of cards at an Italian saloon near the French market. A quarrel, a stampede, and as the victim reached the door he was riddled with bullets. The police have arrested the proprietor of the place and several others. It is a curious fact that the Mafia is heard of exactly a year after Chief Hennessy's death.

Ireland Flooded.

A hurricane prevailed in West Ireland. The Shannon has overflowed, submerging much land, destroying buildings and drowning cattle. The storm is the worst for twenty years. Thirty small boats have been wrecked and much property destroyed. Youghal is partly flooded. Much property has been destroyed by the overflowing of the Black Water River.

Removal of the American Wheel Company's Offices.

Judge Woods has ordered the removal of the American Wheel Company's offices from Chicago to Indianapolis. This was done on the petition of Receiver Butler. He says it will save $7,000 a year office rent.

Murder at a Dance.

ARRESTED FOR ARSON.

REVELATIONS IN A BASE INCENDIARY PLOT.

According to the Confessions, County Auditor Lavelle, of Washington, Hires Men to Burn the Court House—The Criminals in Jail.

Destroyed the Records.

The Court House at Washington, Ind., was recently set on fire. The Recorder's and Sheriff's offices were totally destroyed and a portion of the Auditor's office was ruined. An investigation proved that the interior of the Auditor's office, including all the important records, had been saturated with kerosene oil, and they were only saved by the prompt action of the fire department. The books had been taken from their shelves, placed in piles, and saturated with the oil.

The city soon filled with furious people from all parts of the county, and the wildest excitement prevailed until it became certain that the perpetrators of the deed were safely inclosed by the stone walls of the Daviess County jail. The conspirators who are in the toils for the crime, says a dispatch from that place, are County Auditor James C. Lavelle, Aaron B. Hawes, a prominent Steele Township farmer, and Basil Ledgerwood and Samuel Harbin, two day laborers of this city. A warrant is out for Michael Lavelle, the Auditor's brother, but he cannot be found by the officers, and it is believed that he has fled the country.

County Auditor Lavelle has been Auditor for eight years, and for the eight years immediately preceding he was Deputy Auditor for his brother. His term expires Nov. 1 and a few weeks ago the commissioners ordered an investigation of his books and accounts, appointing ex-National Bank Examiner Samuel H. Taylor and Edward F. Meredith, a prominent attorney, to do the work. To this Lavelle made strenuous objection, and used every means in his power to defeat or postpone the proposed investigation. This opposition was continued, and the time was set to begin the work, when but a few days before it was to have begun an alarm of fire was sounded and the Court-House was found to be in flames.

Suspicion pointed to Auditor Lavelle as concerned in the incendiarism, and the officers began work at once under the direction of County Attorney John C. Billheimer and Sheriff Charles Colbert. Five new jugs that had contained kerosene were found in an outhouse, where they had been thrown by the incendiaries. With this valuable clue the man who bought the jugs was easily found, and was arrested and lodged in jail. His name is Samuel Harbin. At first he denied all knowledge of the fire, but under a vigorous pumping he weakened and agreed to tell the whole story of the plot.

He stated that he was hired to do the work of destroying the court house records by Auditor Lavelle and Aaron B. Hawes. He and Basil Ledgerwood were to be paid $500 each for the work. Lavelle gave Harbin money to get coal oil and Ledgerwood money to buy a revolver. Lavelle took Harbin and Ledgerwood to the court house and told them where to set the fires and gave them keys to the court house and offices. That night they carried in the coal oil, flooded the offices, applied the torches and fled. The arrangement was to a certain extent abortive, as the Auditor's records, which make the investigation possible, were saved, although all the valuable records in the Recorder's office, fixing the title to all the landed property in Daviess County, were destroyed. The loss to the county by this is incalculable.

As soon as Harbin had completed his testimony, warrants were issued for the others concerned. Ledgerwood, when arrested, knocked under at once, telling the same story Harbin told. Every statement corroborates the evidence secured. Auditor Lavelle was immediately arrested. A. B. Hawes soon joined him, but Michael Lavelle could not be found, and has not been arrested. Ledgerwood and Harbin were arraigned in court, and pleaded guilty to the charge of arson.

Naturally the excitement is terrible in its intensity. No one can say that he has a good title to his real property, and indignation is at a white heat.

Auditor Lavelle's bondsmen, becoming frightened at the turn affairs were taking, required him to turn over all his property to them, and this was done, Hawes lives on a farm of 500 acres, owned by his wife, and is in good circumstances financially. He is a desperate character, however, and he was brought in at the muzzle of a Winchester.

A DEADLY WRECK.

Two Men Killed and Many Other Persons Badly Injured.

A portion of the Baltimore and Ohio fast mail No 8, from Chicago to New York, jumped the track near Hicksville, Ohio, killing two passengers, wounding five others fatally and twenty others less seriously.

The train consisted of baggage car, smoker, day coach, sleeper and private car of Vice President King. The smoker and baggage car remained attached to the locomotive, but the private car and the ladies' coach went over the embankment and were wrecked.

The day coach, which was well filled, turned over once and bounded right side up. In its aerial maneuver it straddled two of the telegraph lines, and the cross timbers were wrenched from several poles. The sleeper fared better, and after sliding off its trucks it lay right side up on the ground. Those in the smoker escaped with a severe shaking up and many bruises. Neither the smoker nor the baggage car left the track, but the former must have escaped very narrowly, the coach being tilted to one side in a threatening attitude. The most serious injuries were received by the occupants of the day coach. Nearly all the seats were wrenched from their places, as were the lamps, racks, and other furniture of the car, and the windows were all shattered.

The train was running fully sixty miles an hour at the time, and as near as can be ascertained the accident was caused by one of the drive wheels of the engine leaving the track at the switch near the water tank. This wheel spread the rails and all the cars excepting the baggage and smoker left the track. For a space of 800 feet the rails were absolutely swept off the ties. The locomotive, baggage and smoking cars remained on the grade, which, all along this place, is about eight feet high. After the coaches left the grade and went into the ditch the locomotive, baggage car and smoker went on several hundred feet, but did not leave the grade, although off the track.

In addition to three steel battle ships of 4,378 tons each and one torpedo vessel, nearly finished in France for Japan, the Japanese Marine Ministry will soon submit to Parliament a plan for building eleven heavy ironclads, at a cost of $45,000,000.

The cells of the human lungs are 75,000,000 in number, covering a surface from two and a half to three and a half times greater than the whole body surface of ten full grown men.

BY RAIN AND SNOW.

WHEAT SAID TO BE RUINED IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Grain in Stacks and Shocks Sprouting—The Reports Published in the Papers Do Not Half Cover the Devastation—Impossible to Get Teams and Machines Into the Fields.

Losses Reach Millions.

The weather of the past few weeks has undone much of the good that was done by the fine weather early in the season in North Dakota, and the farmers in the Northwest will suffer losses aggregating in the millions. The damage can as yet only be estimated, but that the loss will be very great there seems no doubt. The railroads had made special arrangements to handle a great crop, and the farmers considered their own plans amply sufficient. But so great was the wheat crop that, first, it was almost impossible to hire enough help to secure the crop, and a very large part of it had to be left standing in the shock. Then it was found that the supply of thrashing machines was insufficient, and that caused a delay which left fully half the crop still in the fields unthrashed when the rain came.

Rain has been general and abundant, and it is this which has caused the greatest loss.

At Jamestown, in the North Dakota Jim River Valley, rain and snow fell continually for a day and a night, and last week there was but one full day's wheat thrashing. Reports are received of grain sprouting in the stacks. At Devil's Lake, in the northern part of the State, a heavy rain fell, which will stop thrashing for several days. No grain has been stacked owing to the scarcity of laborers. Lakota (N. D.) reports snow, with thrashing stopped entirely, and fears that unless the weather clears soon much of the grain will be unfit to be thrashed. In the northern part of North Dakota there will, however, be more loss from lack of laborers than from bad weather.

Northwestern Minnesota gives about the same report as North Dakota. It commenced raining again about Crookston and continued all of one day. There have been only a very few days of dry weather in four weeks, and farmers are getting discouraged. In Traverse County and Central Western Minnesota the larger portion of the wheat has not yet been thrashed and men and machines are greatly needed.

Colonel P. B. Walker, of Minneapolis, says of the situation:

"I have just returned from a trip through that section. It made my heart ache to witness the ruin. In order to appreciate it one must actually see it. There are thousands of acres of simply wonderful wheatfields almost utterly destroyed by the rains. And the mud—it is perfectly execrable. Day after day we tramped in the slush across fields—slush half knee-deep. I went out with a Government surveying party to establish town lines, and the rain and mud broke up our party, and we were forced to abandon the work entirely.

"The reports published in the papers do not cover half the devastation. As far as the eye can reach in every direction are great big shocks of wheat, and it all would have graded No. 1 hard had it been thrashed out before the rains fell. Now nothing can be done. It is too late to save even a modicum. Were the shocks in a condition to be thrashed, it would be a physical impossibility to do anything with the crop, for the reason that teams cannot haul the wheat to the thrashers nor haul fuel to the engines.

"The difficulty in the first place arose over getting help to do the thrashing, but the railway companies succeeded in getting both men and machine into the fields. When they arrived they were powerless. The mud was so deep that the horses mired to their bellies, and nothing can be done now until the sun dries out both the soil and the shocks of wheat.

"It is painful to stand on a prominence and survey the situation. Everywhere thrashing machines are visible—all abandoned—and the wheat for hundreds of miles ruined."

His Part Was Too Heavy.

W. B. Arnold, an actor in the "Blue Jeans" Company, severed his connection with that organization at Zanesville, Ohio, upon rather extraordinary grounds. Mr. Arnold is 60 years of age. In his part as Col. Henry Clay Bisener he is obliged to seize and carry bodily off the stage Miss Jennie Endsly, who tips the beam at 177 pounds. This task was too much for the veteran, who was willing, however, as a compromise to drag the fair one off. To this she objected, and a younger and stronger actor will be secured.

Making Huge Guns.

Secretary Tracy and Commodore Folger, of the Bureau of Ordnance, made an official visit to the ordnance department of the Bethlehem (Pa.) Iron Company. They witnessed the pouring of a 180-ton casting, which is the largest ever made in this country. They also witnessed the forging of the first 13-inch gun made by the Bethlehem Iron Company. Armor plates were also forged. The visitors expressed themselves as highly gratified with the progress made on the $4,000,000 contract.

Half a Hundred Mangled.

At Tipton, Ind., one of the 75-horse power boilers in A. R. Dolman's barrel-heading factory exploded. Fifty hands were employed there, all of whom were injured to some extent, two fatally. The factory was valued at about $15,000. Afterward fire originated in the ruins of the Dolman factory and the surrounding buildings were destroyed, together with a large amount of heading.

A Berlin dispatch says that the Kaiser has expressed himself as deeply offended by the anti-Jewish agitation which the bestowal of an order on a Jew living in Bielefeld has aroused. In reply to the representations sent through Chancellor Caprivi that the man had a bad character, the Kaiser has replied briefly and pointedly, rebuking the anti-Jewish prejudice that prompted the action.

It was reported in Wall street that Russell Sage and the Goulds are out. The story did not come in exactly that shape, but was that stockholders of the Missouri Pacific who had seen dividend day go by without the receipt of a dividend check were getting together and pledging each other to gather proxies to be ready to oust the Gould regime at the first opportunity.

The London Times was graciously pleased recently to devote several columns to Chicago and the World's Fair. It thinks that Chicago is a good-sized town, and that the Exposition will be an affair worth seeing. And now if Mr. Rudyard Kipling and the New York Herald can be conciliated the only formidable obstacles in the way of a successful World's Fair will have been removed.

The Boston papers are so astounded at the success of their base-ball team in its recent contest with the New-Yorkers that they hint a suspicion that the latter were paid to "drop" the games. This is quite as complimentary to the skill of the local artists as it is to the honesty of the visitors.—Detroit Free Press.

Ireland cannot sufficiently honor his memory for the noble work he did for her.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Parnell failed only because he so willed it. His life, aside from the last sad months, was a shining success.—Buffalo Express.

Parnell being dead, perhaps wise counsels may prevail, and Gladstone, if he shall be spared, may become the great Irish leader.—Cincinnati Gazette.

It would doubtless have been advantageous to the cause which he represented, and better for his own fame, had he died a year or two sooner.—Pittsburg Gazette.

That the death of this man at this time should be, as it is, of momentous benefit to his country is a striking illustration of the irony of fate.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

None will deny the services he has rendered, and the future will doubtless forget his frailties in summing up his claims to remembrance as a benefactor.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

As simple as a child, as honest as the day, as intrepid as Richard of the Lion-Heart, mankind could not refuse him the homage of its admiration and pity.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

In spite of all the great things he did or strove to do for Irish freedom, this man never had one democratic impulse. He was in every impulse of his mind an aristocrat.—St. Louis Republic.

To succeed as he did required genius. No man of whom we read in profane history ever showed in his work higher qualifications for leadership than did Parnell.—Ottawa (Can.) Free Press.

When the labors of the successors of Charles Stewart Parnell are finally crowned by success and a Parliament meets on Dublin Green, no name will rank higher among all the patriots who made the way for Irish liberty than that of Parnell.—Detroit Free Press.

In the same grave with the frailties and mistakes will be buried the internal animosities that separated the Nationalist factions, and a united party, ready to co-operate with its great British ally, will remember only what is glorious in the lifework and memory of the greatest of Ireland's sons, Charles Stewart Parnell.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

Methodism.

It has been given to few men to exert the influence John Wesley did, and it is doubtful if the world will see his career duplicated.—Philadelphia Press.

This conference of Methodists is a notable gathering, one of influence and power in the religious world, and a sign and proof of the increasing strength of Christianity.—Memphis Commercial.

The day of the old circuit Elder, tracking his way through the "forest primeval," and pausing wherever the curling smoke told that some sturdy pioneer had settled down to clear the way for coming thousands, is past and gone. The term Methodist is no longer one of reproach.—Philadelphia Record.

As a consequence of such a meeting the horizon must necessarily widen and enlarge, opinions will be liberalized, new practical adaptations will be discovered, and more than ever Methodism will become an active and potent influence in the moral, social, and religious world.—Washington Post.

The fault of the religion of to-day is that it tends to exclusiveness; that there is too much Pharisaism about it; too many fine and expensive churches and cushioned pews, and too little recognition of the truth that the rich and poor should meet together for the reason that the "Lord is the maker of them all."—Philadelphia Times.

Methodism is about to confront new conditions and to face new problems that will test to the uttermost its capacity as a system of propagating Christianity. Thus far it has not been disturbed by the spirit of questioning unrest that has so profoundly affected some of the other religious bodies. But it cannot always hope for such immunity.—New York Tribune.

The second Ecumenical Conference is in itself a striking illustration of the power of Methodism to-day, numerically and otherwise. The assembly for the time will attract the interest and attention of all Christendom, and its deliberations are quite certain to have far-reaching effect in the way of renewed inspiration to those engaged in the great work of evangelization.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Cheap Enough.

Rainmaker Melbourne proposes to water 2,000,000 acres of Kansas land for 10 cents an acre. If the proposition is accepted Mr. Melbourne will be in the way of receiving a handsome reward for his faith in providence.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

It takes a great deal to shake the faith of some people. Melbourne seems to have secured a firm grip on the credulity of the farmers of Western Kansas, and, though he has done nothing to confirm their faith, they still stick to it.—Kansas City Journal.

The citizens of Western Kansas are about closing a contract with Prof. Melbourne to water some 2,000,000 acres of farms at 10 cents an acre for the season. This is cheap enough, surely, and at the same time it is very remunerative to Mr. Melbourne; but how are they going to decide whether it is the Professor or Jupiter Pluvius that does the watering?—Philadelphia Press.

Rainmaker Melbourne says that the weather is conspiring against him, and has given up his temporary control of Jupiter Pluvius for the present. Kansas people seem to have every confidence in him, and have invited him to make propositions for watering the forty western counties in the State. Melbourne says he will do it for 1 cent per cultivated acre, and if he succeeds will make a very comfortable fortune out of it.—Boston Record.

Our Ill-Fated Navy.

The United States ship Dispatch is no great loss from any point of view. She would have been out of place in the new navy.—Rochester Post-Express.

The loss of the United States ship Dispatch is a serious one. The Dispatch was the most accomplished unkempt craft in the navy. She could scarcely be floated in the liquors that have been consumed in her cabin.—St. Louis Republic.

The United States ship Dispatch was only a Government pleasure boat and was never intended for fighting, but there may be some inquiry to find out whether the naval officers are capable of keeping the new cruisers off the shore.—Buffalo Express.

SAVED AT LAST.

AUBURN, IND., Oct. 3, 1890.

Dr. J. W. Bergen:

Dear Sir:—By this time, I presume, you will want to know how I am getting along with Bergen's Asthma Cure.

Well, you have heard of persons obtaining a new life. Now I really feel that way myself. When I began taking Bergen's Asthma Cure, I was just coming out of a long siege of it, and was reduced to 115 pounds; weak, short of breath, chills, fever, and badly demoralized generally, coughing from half an hour to an hour every night.

Since commencing, from the third night, I have not lost ten minutes' sleep all night, cough gone, gained seventeen pounds, chills gone, fever gone, shortness of breath and difficulty of breathing gone, consequently I feel a thousand per cent. better. I thank God every day that I ever saw your advertisement, and that I was induced to write to you.

This is peculiarly encouraging in my case, as I had suffered so long and was so discouraged about my case, having tried everything. I am telling the good news every day.

Push on the good work; you are on the right track.

Yours Very Gratefully,
R. McDOUGALL.

DOUBLE DICK AND JOE;

—OR—

The Poorhouse Waifs.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XXIII—Continued.

"See here, young fellow—this is a square deal, now."

"Perfectly square," said Dick quietly.

"We'll get the rhino right away as soon as the gal's found."

"You'll get it to-morrow before ten, if she's discovered through your aid to-night."

"That's the cheese. Now then. There's a rookery round in the alley here—old—no matter, we'll show you where it is. If it's the way we think, why, the gal's hid there. But see here, young feller, it don't suit us to go in if it can be helped—if the place is pulled!"

"Pulled?"

"Yes—raided."

"Raided?"

"Yes—gone through as clean as a whistle."

"Gone through?"

"Well, you are fresh. Tom, let me tackle this feller. He means the bobbies will come down on them."

"The bobbies?"

"The p'lice—don't know nawthin' at all"—with a contemptuous drawl. "The p'lice I said. If they arrest everybody after we've been in and got out, they'll blame us—see?"

"I understand very well—why didn't you say so before?" said Dick dryly.

"You can go in. You've got to let on ——"

"Never mind—I'll manage that. But first, I want to borrow a shoe box—and blacking brushes."

"O! he's playing it down fine, Pete."

"Yes, he is—he's not so fresh as he looks. We'll get you the things—if you'll pay interest on 'em."

Peter disappeared and speedily reappeared with the brushes and box, and Dick followed them to a few yards of the door of the house where he had reason to believe he would learn something of Joe.

When he entered the place, the smell of vile tobacco almost overpowered him. The air was thick with smoke. There were other vile smells. One or two looked at him sharply as he lounged in, and one man—a man with a very brutal face—eyed him as if he would kick him into the street.

"Hello, baby, what are you after?" this coarse fellow demanded.

Dick did not answer. Instead, he looked at the unpolished shoes and boots in the room, and, going from one to another, said:

"Shine, shine, shine!"

"Shine the devil!" said one ruffian.

"I will, if you pay for the time lost," said Dick, whereat even the man who scowled at him laughed loudly, and Dick, going to the greasy bar, said:

"Gimme glass beer."

He munched a cracker and a piece of sausage, and kept his eyes and ears wide open. He heard—saw all that transpired. Nobody dreamed that the bootblack, sidling around, looking at the horrible woodcuts on the walls, and whistling softly to himself, was noting every movement—listening to every work uttered.

But so it was, until Dick found an opportunity to scribble the note, and to toss it in to poor Joe, whose cheeks were wet with tears. He managed it very adroitly, indeed, and he was not too eager to run away once he found the opportunity to fling his warning note in to Joe.

He remained long enough to see the meaning shrugs exchanged by Mr. Jenks and his fellow conspirators, to hear all that was said, and then he went all around the room, crying "Shine, shine!" until he was repulsed, when he coolly opened the door and walked out.

CHAPTER XXIV.

DOUBLE DICK'S DEEP MORTIFICATION—"A PROVIDENTIAL INTERFERENCE."

To return to Old Isaac's, pay the other half-dollar and another on top of it, dress himself, and set out for Mons. Dufaur's occupied very few minutes.

Dick was in a perspiration with excitement; he was running, in his haste, when a stern voice hailed him.

"Hi! hi! there—stop thief—head him off there! Stop that boy there!"

Dick halted and looked back. An old man grasping a grip-sack was running after him, shouting "stop thief!" after him.

A crowd gathered in a minute. It was wonderful how speedily the street was blocked up by the people. They flocked from all quarters. A policeman appeared—two, three policemen—all bearing on poor Dick.

One seized him by the shoulder roughly. Dick shook his arm. The policeman scowled at him.

"None o' that, my boy," said the policeman, angrily.

"What have I done? You've no business to touch me—I ain't a thief."

"You ain't?"

"No. And if you don't let me go you'll pay dearly for it. Ben Brown and Mr. Buckett will make you sweat for it if you arrest me."

Dick was unabashed. He looked at the officer boldly. The officer grew white with rage.

"Shut up! Shut up your trap, or I'll make you!"

By this time the old gentleman had reached the boy's side.

"Now, see the fix you're in for stealing my wallet. Mr. Policeman, I guess you needn't take him up if he'll promise never to do it again."

The crowd laughed, and the policemen—there were three of them together now—smiled.

"Come along," said the man who grasped Dick's arm.

"No, no! Let him off. Just take my wallet from him. It's not worth while putting yourself to any more trouble."

The crowd roared, and the policemen gathered around Dick as they pushed forward.

"I'll go with you quietly," said Dick, "but you've all been warned—Mr. Buckett will make you pay for this."

"Who's Buckett?" demanded one of the officers.

"He owns the circus, and he's got plenty of money."

"What do you know about Buckett?" The officer gave Dick a shake—"none of your humbugging. 'Buckett!' I'll Buckett you, talking about Bucket."

"He'll make you shake more than you you shook me. I tell you he hires me, and he'll make you all sorry for this."

"See here," said the farmer, "let him go—only take my wallet from him."

"I never saw your wallet, sir. You're mistaken, sir."

"Well—maybe I am."

The farmer plunged his hand into his pockets, and shouted, "It's all a mistake—it's all a mistake! I put my wallet into the wrong pocket, that's all—here it is."

He held it up, the crowd saw it, and began to jeer the officers. The officers made demonstrations that scattered the crowd right and left, and soon the way was clear. Then they consulted each other and turned on the farmer.

"Are you sure you've got your money?"

"Here it is—you can look, officers."

"Why in thunder don't you know what you are doing, making all this racket, and blocking up the streets, shouting stop thief?"

"You ought to stay in your cabbage-patch, old man."

"Or get yourself a new head before you come to town again."

After delivering themselves of these opinions, the officers get Dick free, with an admonition to "be more careful in future" (?); then went about their business. The crowd had dispersed almost as speedily as it had gathered, and the farmer and Dick were left almost alone.

"See here—I'm awful cut up. I am, sure as you live, my boy. You run agin me so hard—and I'm afraid o' thieves—and when I clapped my hand in my pocket, and missed my wallet——"

"Don't say any more—it's all right now. I don't blame you. Most any one would do the same—only I ain't that sort of a boy, and it makes me feel mean to be stared at by a crowd."

"You said you were with Buckett, the circus man."

"Yes, sir; I am."

"Do say! And now—what do you do in the circus?"

"I am not at liberty to tell."

"Phew! Sho! now—that's queer. You dassent tell! Well, I can tell who I am, and what I'm hyer for—where I'm goin', and all about it. I'm on my way home lickety spit—my name's Job Wonder, and——"

"Wonder!"

"Yes—Wonder. Ever hear it before?"

"You are the man that came to see Joe."

"Yes, I be—just that man. But what do you know about Joe?"

"Don't go home—not now. Go along with me to Monsieur Dufaur's—quick. Joe's in trouble. I've just come from her."

"What's the matter, eh? Anything serious? If there is, I'm not going home till it's straightened out. I may as well hang over to-morrow: I'll not leave Joe in trouble."

As they hastened to Monsieur Dufaur's, Dick endeavored to explain the situation to the farmer, but Job Wonder couldn't grasp the truth; the perfidy of the lawyer's clerk, the audacity of the scheme were not comprehended fully by Job. But he was terribly excited on learning that Joe was abducted—held against her wishes—and in the power of a wretch who was evidently capable of any crime.

"Dod blast 'em all, I say!" he exclaimed time after time, as Dick narrated, in outline, all he had learned in the disguise he had assumed. "Dod blast 'em! I'll not leave New York till I've put the hull gang of them in the penitentiary!"

"I'm glad its happened this way," said Dick as they neared Monsieur Dufaur's. "There'll be such a lot of us when we go 'round there with the police that they'll all be captured. I don't want one to get away—I want them all arrested."

"Yes; and I'll see they are all punished, if there's any law in York State. You make up your mind to that! Why, it's a providential interference—my meetin' you. Blamed if it ain't. Yes, after this I'll believe in Providence. If I hadn't thought you—no matter—I'd been to the depot by this time—like as not trav'lin' home."

CHAPTER XXV.

DOUBLE DICK TURNS THE TABLES ON IKE.

"I've found her!" Dick shouted when he was admitted to Monsieur Dufaur's, with Job Wonder stamping along at the boy's heels.

"Thank heaven!" exclaimed Madame Dufaur, who was pacing the room. "Thank heaven! My prayer is answered. I was afraid the poor girl was lost to us forever."

"Where is Monsieur Dufaur—where is Ben and Mrs. Brown? We want to be quick and take a lot of police, or they'll run away."

"Bless me, how the dear boy runs on. My husband—why, he was here this minute, but Mr. Brown I have not seen this hour."

"We can't wait on him, we must go at once. You come, too."

"Me! Me! I cannot go with the police, child; but, yes, to be sure I will go; why not? To save the poor child, perhaps."

The door opened at that instant and Monsieur Dufaur stood on the threshold. Madame Dufaur flew toward him with outstretched hands.

"She is found—found."

"Where—where is she?"

"Come at once," said Dick. "Get the police to come along—there's a lot of them."

"But where—where is she?" demanded Monsieur Dufaur, looking meanwhile for his hat and cane.

"Your hat is in my room—your cane is in the dining-room. Oh, we are on our heads this night," said Madame Dufaur as she placed her hat on her head and glanced in a mirror. "Come, come."

"Yes, and get the policemen," said Dick.

"Oh, yes, I will be sure to have the officers; but just tell me which way we are going."

Dick gave him the necessary directions as they set out. As they were leaving the house they met the clown and his wife, whose faces were downcast, but on seeing the others they instantly brightened up.

"You have heard of her," said Ben.

"We are going to rescue her," said Madame Dufaur.

Then Dick was called upon by the clown to relate the facts again briefly.

The clown grit his teeth.

"We'll teach them! We'll make it warm for them before we are through with them!"

Meanwhile Monsieur Dufaur had secured a squad of police, or, rather, the officer he took into his confidence had assembled his fellows quickly, and then, while they were on the way, a plan of operations was mapped out; each one understood exactly how the rescue was to be conducted.

Meantime fortune smiled upon Ike Jenks. He had no difficulty finding his friend the notary, to whom he explained what he wanted. The notary was thinking of a fee that would swell his month's receipts largely, and did not scruple in the least as he listened and nodded. He accompanied Jenks to the house Joe was confined in, and was introduced, as Joe was induced to believe, by the exercise of extraordinary strategy.

When Ike appeared in the room with the notary, he was beaming with joy he endeavored to conceal. He realized fully the demand of the hour. While his bride was under duress—a prisoner, and fearful—it ill became him to exhibit joy; so he pulled on a sober face as he said:

"Well—this seems a dull sort of marriage, but it will soon be over."

"A mere formality," said the notary in a low tone, designed to reassure her.

"Yes—but unavoidable. Well, we are ready now; begin," said Jenks.

But to his amazement Joe turned her head aside.

The notary looked at Jenks; Jenks looked at the notary, and a scowl settled on his face.

"What's the matter now?"

Still Joe was silent.

"Why don't you speak?"

"Because I don't want to."

"But you must now the notary is here."

"I won't."

"You won't! Why?"

"I won't do anything."

"See here now—there's something at the bottom of this. You've been thinking since I went out, and changed your mind."

"Yes."

"Well, I haven't changed mine. If you don't want to go back where you came from, you've got to go on with the marriage."

"I don't want to get married."

"You must, though."

"And I say I won't!"

Joe's eyes were flashing now. She confronted him with red cheeks, defiance in every action.

"You go on and marry us," said Ike to his friend.

"I can't. It takes two to make a bargain."

Ike whispered in the notary's ear. The notary shook his head.

"It is a dangerous business. If she assents, all right. If she refuses—that's the end of it."

"Curse you!" exclaimed Jenks, seizing Joe in his rage. He had grasped her wrist and twisted it so that it pained her.

"Help! Help!" Joe shrieked.

As if in response to her cry, the outer door was burst open and a rush of feet was heard. The next moment the door of the room the notary, Jenks and Joe were in was thrown wide open, and Dick stood before them. Behind him stood two policemen—the same that had been called upon by Job Wonder when he cried, "Stop thief!"

Joe rushed forward and grasped Dick's hands.

"I knew you would come; I knew it!"

Ike and the notary left the room and found in the outer apartment two other policemen, while two more guarded the entrance.

The occupants of the bar-room were silent, sullen, vengeful. They glared at the newcomers—at the officers—but held their peace. Ben Brown and his wife, Monsieur and Madame Dufaur, Job Wonder—these stood in the foreground, and Joe in turn extended her hands to all saying she "never, never could forget their kindness to her."

A policeman tapped Jenks on the shoulder, saying, "Come, we're ready now."

"Ready! What do you mean?" exclaimed Jenks. Then he said something in a low tone to his companion. "Of course I'll make no resistance, but I warn you all I shall proceed against you for false arrest. And don't you influence my wife to go away."

"His wife!"

Madame Dufaur elevated her hands.

"Yes, my wife," said Jenks boldly. "She is my lawful wife—here is the certificate."

Don't Be Afraid to Praise.

One of the greatest evils of our modern life is the fear to give credit where credit is due. We are always ready to criticise, but never to praise. We love to point out a mistake, but how loth we are to applaud a thing well done. The employer withholds the word of praise from his employe. He either fears an application for more salary, or the risk of spoiling with praise. How short-sighted is such a policy! What is there more stimulating in the hard business world of to-day than honest approval openly given? Many a man and woman is there to-day in factory, store, office or banking-house to whom an honest "you have done well" would mean more than any addition to salary. Everybody's goal is not the almighty dollar; some of us think just as much of a hearty word of approval. A good man or a good woman is never spoiled by an honest word of praise. There are enough people in this world ready to criticise and find fault; let you and I, my dear friend, counteract matters and be ready to give the word of praise when occasion requires it. In your business, be frank and open with those you employ. If a man does a thing well, tell him of it. And when you go home, keep your eyes open, and see whether your wife is not wearing something or has put something on the table which she knew would please you. Notice it, and tell her you do. Don't let her imagine your pleasure—your wife is no more of a mind-reader than you are. We do not want to leave too much to be inferred in this world. Some things are best left to the inference; but there are others which will make this world better, brighter and more beautiful if told "right out in meeting."

If you, as husband, withhold honest praise from your wife, she, unconsciously, perhaps—for habits at home are contagious—will, in turn, withhold it from your children, and they will transmit the spirit to their children. Each of us is more of an example to others than we sometimes think. A wise writer has made famous the proverb that the smallest action in our lives is reflected in some one else, and there is a great deal of truth in the old saw. We are all of us an example to some other fellow creature, and a trait in us is often transmitted, and made immortal to succeeding generations. And thus, as others are apt to do as we do, let us do well.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Facts in Short Order.

The male of the silkworm moth travels at the rate of one hundred miles a day.

The average cost of constructing a mile of railroad in the United States at the present time is about thirty thousand dollars.

The number of passengers carried by all the railroads in the world averages six millions a day.

It would take all the Lancashire cotton factories four hundred years to spin a thread long enough to reach the nearest star at the present rate of production of about one hundred and fifty-five million miles per day.

Teachers' salaries in the United States annually amount to more than sixty million dollars.

To effect the respiration of a carp, thirteen thousand three hundred arteries, vessels, veins, bones, valves, etc., are necessary.

In average condition, a turnip seed may increase its own weight fifteen times in a minute.

A Familiar Proverb.

Ancæus, King of the Leleges in Samos (an island in the Grecian Archipelago) planted a vineyard; and so heavily did he oppress his slaves, that one of them, it is said, prophesied to him that he would never live to taste the wine thereof. When the wine was made, the king sent for his slave, and said: "What do you think of your prophesy now?" The slave made answer, "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." The words were scarcely uttered when Ancæus was informed that a wild boar had broken into his vineyard, and was laying it waste. Ancæus, setting down the cup untasted, hastened to attack and drive out the boar, but was killed in the encounter.

"I BEGAN keeping a diary this year—an honest diary—and I wrote it in French, but I've dropped it." "Why?" "My wife has begun taking French lessons."

At the Glove Counter.

The hard life of the saleswoman at the counter of a great retail store is often rendered less burdensome by the kindly acts of fellow-workers, and sometimes by the generosity of employers.

It is not infrequently the case that girls are at their posts in these stores who are not strong enough to do the work properly. Under such circumstances the public which must be served is generally less indulgent than the employer.

At a great retail store in Boston, the girls at the glove counter work almost constantly in fitting gloves to customers' hands. The work is arduous, for the saleswoman must lean over the counter in doing it, and her back often aches with the strain upon it.

At one of these glove counters a young girl was employed who was in consumption, though perhaps neither she nor her relatives were fully aware of the fact.

Though she knew she was ill, she hesitated to leave off her work, for the loss of one of her parents and a subsequent marriage had made the circumstances of her home life unpleasant to her; and, moreover, she did not know where she should turn for the six dollars a week which she earned.

The lunches which she brought to the store indicated extreme poverty or else unkindness at home, and the other girls at her counter often shared nourishing and delicate bits that they had brought. One day she came to the store looking unusually pale and weak, and when an exacting customer required her services in fitting gloves, she was slow in making the effort which the customer—a woman—seemed disposed to exact.

The customer scolded, and possibly the girl, weak and ill, answered impertinently. At any rate, the customer went to the superintendent and complained sharply of the saleswoman's conduct.

"I am very sorry, madam," said the superintendent, "but the girl is ill to-day."

"Then she ought not to be here," said the lady.

There was nothing more that could be said; but that there was no unkindness on the part of the saleswoman's superiors is evident from the fact that within a day or two her case was reported to the head of the firm, Mr. Jordan, as one worthy of benevolent action.

"Send her to me," said Mr. Jordan.

The poor girl turned pale when she was told that Mr. Jordan wished to see her, and became suddenly faint. She feared that her discharge—a thing much more to be dreaded than any hardship of her daily task—was coming. But she was quickly assured that no harm would come to her.

The proprietor questioned her kindly about her work, her family and her health. Learning from her that she had friends in Maine, he asked her to ascertain how much it would cost her to go thither. When she had learned, Mr. Jordan gave her money for her fare and expenses; and not only this, but paid her wages regularly, until, two months later, her strength failed her utterly, and death came.—Youth's Companion.

Swimming a Horse.

Pictures are often seen representing horsemen sitting bolt upright in their saddles while swimming their horses across a stream, the whole line of the horses' backs being visible above the water. The artists who make these pictures can hardly have ridden a horse while the animal was swimming, or seen the thing done. A French cavalry officer, in a military journal of Paris, the Revue du Cercle Militaire, gives this account of the way a horse should not be ridden, and of the way he should be ridden, in swimming a stream:

To begin with, it must not be supposed that a horse always swims naturally, and with ease, the moment he is off his feet in the water. The animal under such circumstances has but one notion—to keep his head out of the water and to lift his shoulders as high as possible.

In doing this his hind quarters sink, and he finds himself almost standing upon his tail, or at least in a position three-quarters erect.

In such a position, if the rider draws upon the reins, or throws his body back in the least, the animal's hind quarters will sink more and more, his body will take a vertical position, and, beating the water uselessly with his fore feet, he will finally sink.

As soon as the horse gets off his feet in the water, let the rider grasp a handful of the animal's mane, leaning at the same time well forward upon his shoulders, but without touching the horse's head. The rider's knees should be pressed tightly to the horse's sides; otherwise he is likely to be swept off by the water.

This is the only position which will enable a man to remain in the saddle, and the horse to swim at the same time.

The reins must be held loosely, and each well to one side. If the horse is to be guided in the water, give the loose rein a little jerk in the direction desired. But it is in the highest degree important never to pull on the reins.

"I Am the Author."

From Walter Besant's paper, the Author:

Two men were discussing a book that had just been handed to them by a newsboy. First man: "That's a great book, sir, a masterpiece of work." Second man: "I wonder how it is selling." First man: "Selling? I never say anything like it. I am the publisher and ought to know." Second man: "Your information delights me. I am the author." First man (with fallen countenance): "Well, that is, it hasn't had much of a sale yet, but I think it will have. A great deal of risk, you know, getting out this sort of a book."

THE belle of Charlotte, a fashionable summer resort near Rochester, N. Y., was recently won heart and hand, and married a dashing young stranger. The impromptu wedding feast was hardly cold before the groom was arrested as a common sneak-thief. He is in a prison cell and his bride is bowed down with humiliation.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN

NERVINE TONIC

—AND—

Stomach AND Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years.

The Great South American Nervine Tonic

Which we now offer you, is the only absolutely unfailing remedy ever discovered for the cure of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and the vast train of symptoms and horrors which are the result of disease and debility of the human stomach. No person can afford to pass by this jewel of incalculable value who is affected by disease of the stomach, because the experience and testimony of many go to prove that this is the ONE and ONLY ONE great cure in the world for this universal destroyer. There is no case of unmalignant disease of the stomach which can resist the wonderful curative powers of the South American Nervine Tonic.

HARRIET E. HALL, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed for five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors, with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly."

MRS. ELLA A. BRATTON, of New Ross, Indiana, says: "I cannot express how much I owe to the Nervine Tonic. My system was completely shattered, appetite gone, was coughing and spitting up blood; am sure I was in the first stages of consumption, an inheritance handed down through several generations. I began taking the Nervine Tonic, and continued its use for about six months, and am entirely cured. It is the grandest remedy for nerves, stomach and lungs I have ever seen."

No remedy compares with SOUTH AMERICAN NERVINE as a cure for the Nerves. No remedy compares with South American Nervine as a wondrous cure for the Stomach. No remedy will at all compare with South American Nervine as a cure for all forms of failing health. It never fails to cure Indigestion and Dyspepsia. It never fails to cure Chorea or St. Vitus' Dance. Its powers to build up the whole system are wonderful in the extreme. It cures the old, the young, and the middle aged. It is a great friend to the aged and infirm. Do not neglect to use this precious boon; if you do, you may neglect the only remedy which will restore you to health. South American Nervine is perfectly safe, and very pleasant to the taste. Delicate ladies, do not fail to use this great cure, because it will put the bloom of freshness and beauty upon your lips and in your cheeks, and quickly drive away your disabilities and weaknesses.

For some time past Seventh street has had the reputation for keeping up the population in this community. But now it must step behind the curtain while the South end removes the misty veil of obscurity and makes its debut upon the stage of action. Clyde Oberlin was stepping lightly, with a box of cigars under his arm and a long smile on his face, on Saturday. On being questioned as to the cause of his jovial mien, he replied, "It's a girl." Billy Stamets had a similar experience earlier in the week. Its a cold day when the South Side stays long in the background.

Poor brutes! We mean the horses not the drivers. We noticed a span of horses hitched on Ninth street south of the jail Monday, that reliable men told us had stood there from eight o'clock that morning and it was then about 3 p. m. We heard afterwards that they were cared for by some one about a half hour l ter. It was the team that runs the wagon with Chamberlain's Relief for sale, and the driver was on a drunk, so we were told, and asleep in a saloon. He should have been fined. The Chamberlain Co. is we believe, a respectable and responsible firm, and their remedies are said to be good, but they will not find it profitable to keep such a man on the road, whether it is his horses, or those of the company, that are so grossly abused. The man should be discharged and a more humane driver furnished for the poor dumb brutes. And this was not the first offense.

Dr. Buchtel was at Chicago last week, and while there witnessed some valuable surgical operations done by some surgeons fresh from Europe.

Mrs. Dr. Allen entertained a number of lady friends to tea Friday evening. The meeting, we believe was in honor of Miss Barton, who soon goes back to Ohio.

Rev. E. Miller preached his inaugural sermon at the Church of God, Sunday. He expects to be here again in three weeks.

Chris Cloy's married daughter died at his home here Tuesday. Her home was at Ft. Wayne, but she has been here for treatment. She leaves five small children.

Our old friend Adam Weirich and his son of Fairfield, were up to see their COURIER friends Monday. He found it handy to pay his paper ahead, while paying taxes.

Prof. J. V. Coombs delivered a very forcible temperance lecture at the Court house Sunday afternoon, in behalf of the W. C. T. U. The Hoosier Quartet furnished the music.

Ed. Kelley of Ft. Wayne, secured a job as an iron moulder in the Eagle Iron Works. He is a good workman and speaks of having been here when the B. & O. road was built.

Marshal Pfefferl has bought the Boland lots on the low ground southeast of the jail, and sold those near the bridge to Mr. Lockwood, who will put up a house or two on them.

T. P. Scott and Fred. Shaffer were ceiling in the new block Tuesday, when the scaffold gave way, and down they went. Fortunately neither was hurt, but there was a big noise.

R. H. Cobb who has been for a month or two in the northwest, came home as announced last week. He will be off again this week for another trip, this time we believe to the Pacific Coast.

Salyer's "ready roaster" for peanuts is always filled with nice hot "Goobers' the very fragrance of which will make one's mouth water. It don't cost any more to get nice warm peanuts than cold raw ones. Try them.

Prof. Coombs and wife are making a very favorable impression upon our people. They have been holding a series of meetings and our people have listened to some able sermons and sweet music. Mrs. C., is a very sweet singer.

A. J. Bell, so long the agent, for the B. & O. at the Junction is to go to Tiffin to take Charlie Woods place there. This is a promotion for both, and we are glad to note it, though we dislike to lose such citizens as Mr. and Mrs. Bell.

The Auburn Mills are humming a sweet melody of success. The proprietors Rickel & Sprott, are sparing neither pains nor expense to put upon the market the best grades of flour, corn meal, etc., manufactured. That they have succeeded is no longer a question.

A most appropriate and eloquent sermon, was that of Sunday at the Presbyterian church. "We all do fade as the leaf," and at a time when the leaves are just fading and falling, and the conclusions and lessons drawn—all were in striking harmony with the season.

We have recently had the entire series of Art Tours by Mrs. Kate Crary and I can earnestly commend her to all who are seeking to cultivate a taste for what is pure, instructive and elevating in public entertainments —Chas. E. Williamson, Sec'y. Y. M. C. A, Omaha, Neb.

In an article on cancers and other tumors, to appear in Harper's Magazine for November. Drs. B. Farquhar Curtis and William T. Bull, while endeavoring to dispel some of the false notions which are prevalent with regard to these diseases, will present strong arguments in faver of a prompt and more generally intelligent treatment of them.

Last Wednesday afternoon a bad wreck occurred at Hicksville. The east bound fast train that passes Auburn about 2 p. m. was going at a high rate of speed, when passing through town, the rails of the track spread, and the train was sent down the embankment. Two were killed at once and about twenty injured. Vice-President King, of the B. & O., was among the injured.

The Dispatch's reason for the defeat of its party in the Indianapolis election, is very characteristic of the bigotry of reppublican papers in general. It says "the saloon element all went with the democrats." The facts are the other way. The citizens who wanted good government voted our ticket, while the saloons were industriously worked each evening by the republican candidates. And that curse of the democracy down there, the notorious Sim Coy, deserted his party, and himself a saloon keeper, carried as many of his followers as possible into the republican camp.

Court.

Much work has been done, and much partly done, some of which like foreclosure and partition cases are not of general interest. A bastardy case took some days, but it is not fit for publication. David Stahl, was sent to the reform school. Zeal Christophet Sailor was adopted by John T. Wilson. Milas V. Osburn was divorced from Cora, and had to give $25 for her attorneys, and $100 alimony. Alice was divorced from Smith Williams, and ordered not to marry for two years. Such is the law, but most of them don't wait at all. The grand jury is dismissed and gone, and several we know of can breathe easier. They found several indictments in matters most of which originated during the fair. Some of the cases they brought in have had the usual fine put on, and some are not done. Plain drunks, and gambling, added to the school fund quite a sum. Trial jury has gone home till next Tuesday.

A Fine Cider Mill.

Ruhl's cider mill in Stametstown, is one of the best we have seen. It has all the modern improvements and does extra good work. The apples are shoveled from the wagon into a hopper, where they roll onto an elevator that carries them to the grinder. There they are literally cut fine and when they reach the great press, are ready to yield up the last valuable drop they contain. The press is the largest we have seen, and constructed so as to get an enormous power, but which, great as it is, is under perfect control. The cider flows from the press into a tank, and is ready to go into barrels. The quality made is the best we ever saw, and they are kept busy almost night and day, working up apples for farmers from far and near. To those familiar with the old fashioned mill, only, this improved one will be quite a surprise.

A comfortable smoke can be had, by investing a nickel in a Bill Head. Give it a trial and you will smoke no other when it is to be had.

Lieut. Gov. Hoffman started home to Dakota yesterday, after a regular handshaking visit with the old friends here. He takes many good wishes from the the friends here.

Ed. Morell was in town for a brief visit last week. He had been out a good deal of the time lately to assist in putting up a new sort of brick machine made in Chicago. It presses the bricks while the mixture is perfectly dry. They are then burned, and become a sort of "vitrified brick."

Kessler Bros are hustling the market in this neck o' the woods with their now absolutely famous Bill Head cigar. They have been unable to fill all the orders which come in for some time, and in consequence have enlarged their force of cigar makers. The firm is doing a large and profitable business, which increase as time goes on.

Clyde Brandon has a letter from Allen Weaver, at Oakdale, Wash., in which he says they are prospering. A $15,000 school house has just been finished there, and they have eight wheat elevators, which shows the richness of the land. Wheat is 73 cents, and oats $1 per hundred pounds. Now if Mr. W., should write a letter for the COURIER, we believe it would give us light about that new country.

A short ramble on the outskirts of the city will bring many beautiful and attractive scenes to the rambler's vision. The wheat fields all covered with a rich mantle of verdant green; corn fields, which but a few weeks ago were a broad sheet of emerald, now stand in long rows of shocks from which will soon be taken the golden ears; the great forests, which but a short time since presented an enchanting picture of natural grandeur, now beautifully illustrate the power of Jack Frost to change the rich foliage to to numberless shades of gold, green and red. Surely one can at this time drink deep in the grandeur of nature. The brush is useless to paint, the pen is powerless to describe the beauteous landscape as it is to be seen in the autumn sunlight.

THE Hopkins-Searles will contest will support a regiment of lawyers for some years to come. It is thus that many a large fortune goes back to the people. In the old days, when under the Roman or Florentine republic privileged citizens amassed fortunes so enormous that they became tremendous powers in the state, they had not carried litigation to the point of development which it has reached in our day. Perhaps we shall owe to the lawyers the preservation of the republic yet.

EVERY dog has his day, and the big dog's day has come in the world of fashion. All men and many women will be sincerely glad that the little wheezy, spindle-shanked caricatures of dogs which fashionable ladies carried about with them everywhere are remorselessly banished. There is something noble about huge St Bernards and Pomeranians, such as Queen Victoria has just declared for. Miss Eastlake has adopted the St. Bernard as her especial pet. Royalty and a popular actress having made big dogs the proper thing we may expect the market for St. Bernards to rule high.

SPAIN, once well wooded, has been stripped of its forests for the past ten centuries, and the long, sloping mountain ranges of Southern Spain stand hard, bare, and sun-baked. The valleys are dry in summer, torrents in winter, and change on the instant from one condition to the other. Destructive floods are certain in such a region, and those which have just swept through a part of New Castile have coursed down valleys whose usual water supply is a trickling stream. The terrible loss of life and property ought, but we fear will not, arouse public opinion here to the necessity of preserving our forests from the destruction which has overtaken those of Spain, with results from which it suffers and has suffered for centuries.

THE New York Press gives a profile group of the highes roofs and spires in Gotham in 1891, and particularizes as follows: St. Patrick's Cathedral (spires), 330 feet; Pulitzer Building, 309 feet; Produce Exchange, 225 feet; Washington Building, 250 feet; Trinity Church spire, 284 feet; Madison Square Garden, 300 feet; Tribune (tower), 260 feet; Statue of Liberty, 305 feet 11 inches; Brooklyn Bridge towers, 272 feet. The top of the spire of the Cathedral, New York, eclipses the highest point in Chicago, the lantern and flag-staff of the Auditorium tower, by a few feet. When it comes to a general average of high buildings, the city on Manhattan Island cannot compare with Chicago, where there are ten business blocks with towers in the 220 foot class.

A DUEL, not of the French kind, was fought in the southern part of Delaware recently and resulted in placing both of the combatants in a critical condition. The affair grew out of a disparaging remark made by one of the duelists about the other's sister. No doubt the brother of the girl was justly indignant, but if he recovers from his wounds he will probably realize that a resort to the code did not afford a remedy for the trouble, for he has only proved his own confidence in his sister's honor without convincing the world of the fact. Nineteenth century intelligence has grasped the idea that violent actions cannot take the place of proof, but there is an occasional instance which seems to indicate the existence of the belief in some quarters that it is only necessary to kill some one to prove that you are right, or to be killed in the attempt.

IT does not follow that because a man enacts two distinct and widely different parts in life, at the same time, he is therefore a hypocrite. The truth is that seven-eighths of us do this very thing. Just as the Blue and White Niles run parallel with each other for hundreds of miles, without mixing, so do two natures quite as strongly contrasted sometimes seem to be in operation simultaneously in the same individual, he being all the while unconscious of his own duality. Of course, such a one cannot be called a dissembler. The butcher who feels no compunction about slaying the lamb that looks pleadingly in his face as he applies the knife to its throat may be the kindest and gentlest of husbands and fathers; the hero of the battle-field may be mortally afraid of the tongue of his wife; even the executioner who ties the fatal knot with perfect indifference may be a merciful man to his dog and quite amiable in his general behavior.

THE fact that the Iowa firm which made the lowest bid for the new torpedo boat has an establishment capable of building it, and accordingly gets the contract, brings up the old question in regard to naval construction on the lakes. When Congressman Wheeler's ship-building firm in Michigan made the lowest bid for the Naval Academy practice vessel, it was rejected, after much Cabinet deliberation, on the ground, as then stated, that its construction at Bay City would violate the treaty of 1817. It becomes a question whether, with repeated evidences of the ability of the ship-yards on the great lakes to construct the smaller government vessels, they are to be cut off from this occupation by the ancient treaty. It is true that after prescribing the force that shall be "maintained upon the American lakes," the Rush-Bagot treaty declares that all other armed vessels there shall be dismantled, "and no other vessels of war shall then be built or armed." It was this latter clause that settled the case of the practice vessel. But does not the phrase properly refer to the maintaining of vessels on the lakes, and would it apply to the construction of a ship which, before receiving any part of its armament, should be taken through the canals and the St. Lawrence to the Atlantic? It would seem probable that the British Government might, if applied to, concede this liberal interpretation; but our own government has evidently been so well satisfied with the operation of the treaty as it stands, in keeping light-draught English gun-boats out of the great lakes, as to hesitate even at suggesting so slight a modification or mutual understanding.

Didn't Take After His Father.

It was in the police court and the prisoner was the 15-year-old son of a well-known sneak-thief. "So," inquired the court, stenrly, "you are Slick Tom's son?" "Yes, yer honor," replied the boy, with, say, pardonable pride. "And you take after your illustrious father, I see?" observed the court, sarcastically. "No, your honor, I don't, beggin' your pardon for contradictin'. My father ain't that kind of a man. He don't leave nothin' after him fer me nor nobody else to take." And the young one drew himself up with more pride than ever.—Detroit Free Press.

A Startling Lesson.

A temperance lecturer once threw upon the screen the micro-organisms in a drop of water, to the astonishment of his audience. Then, on the slide, he put a minute portion of whisky. About to make his point, a voice from the rear shouted out, "I'll never take another drink of water without a drop of whisky in it."

A WOMAN 60 years of age plunged into the river at Rathway, N. J., and rescued her 3-year-old grandchild, who was drowning.

WHY WOOLS ARE LOWER

WHAT THE SENATORS SAY ON THE SUBJECT.

All Grades of Wool Are Lower than a Year Ago—Manufacturers of Cigars Form a Trust to Take Full Advantage of the McKinley Bill—Failures Since Jan. 1.

Why They Have Fallen.

High tariffs lower wool prices; low tariffs raise wool prices. So say Senators Sherman and Allison, Thomas Dolan, the high-tariff woolen manufacturer, and the organ of the Manufacturers' Club.

That high duties on the foreign fine wools needed by our manufacturers to mix with the wools of domestic production lower the prices of our own wools is fully shown by the course of wool prices since the enactment of the McKinley tariff. The truth of this assertion is admitted by such leading men as Senators Allison of Iowa and Sherman of Ohio.

On March 24, 1870, Senator Allison said, in debating the wool tariff: "I allude to the wool tariff, a law the effect of which has been materially to injure the sheep husbandry of this country. As the law now is, the tariff upon fine wools of a character not produced in this country is 100 per cent. on their cost. Before the tariff of 1867, our manufacturers of fine goods mixed foreign wools with our domestic product, and were thus able to compete successfully with the foreign manufacturers of similar wools. But, being prohibited from importing this class of wools, these fine goods cannot now be produced in this country as cheaply as they can be imported. If they could afford to manufacture these fine goods, they would make a market which we do not now have for our fine wools to be mixed with other fine wools of a different character from abroad. The want of a market, as I understand it, is the reason why our fine wools command so low a price."

The following from Senator Sherman's speech in the Senate, Feb. 7, 1883, on the wool schedule of the tariff of 1883, will show that he agrees with Senator Allison as to the effect of high duties on wool. Senator Sherman said: "In 1867 the price of wool was 51 cents: in 1870, 46 cents; in 1880, which was an abnormal year, 48 cents; this was the result of the policy of protecting the wool-grower, as it is in all industries, to gradually reduce the price. Under the operation of the existing law (the tariff of 1867) the price of wool has gradually gone down."

Thomas Dolan, who was associated with Lawrence and Delano, of Ohio, in the preparation of the wool schedule of the McKinley tariff, wrote a letter to the New York World a short time ago, in which he said: "It is an interesting fact, deserving much emphasis of statement, that the prices of wool are lower now than they were one year ago. This result was distinctly promised by the Protectionists during the discussion which accompanied the framing of the tariff bill."

In nearly every issue last year the high-tariff Manufacturer advocated increased duties on wool, declaring that the result of such action would lower wool prices. Thus on Jan. 1, 1890, it said: "When duties have gone up, prices have gone down; when duties have declined, prices have advanced. The domestic manufacturer has always had an abundance of superior fiber at low prices under tariffs which imposed light duties upon wool, and he is to-day paying more for wool than he would have paid if the defective tariff law of 1883, administered by a free trade administration, had not practically cut down the wool duties."

On Oct. 16, 1890, after the McKinley tariff had gone into effect, it said: "The prices of wool have always declined when the duties have been advanced, and no doubt exists in the mind of any well-informed man but they will again decline now that the new tariff law has put the duties up."

No wonder that McKinley avoids the wool question in his speeches in justification of his tariff bill when his associates in Congress and the journals, while supporting his tariff, declare that high tariffs lower wool prices and low tariffs raise them.

Who Pays the Tariff Tax?

The American Economist, organ of the Protective Tariff League, asserts that binding twine has fallen in price from 14½ cents per pound in October, 1890, to 11 cents per pound now. And a Kansas paper, taking up the cue, says, "Will some free-trader kindly tell us why the best binding twine costs only 10 cents per pound now, where one year ago it was sold for from 15 to 17 cents per pound? Does an increase in the tariff always result in reducing the price of a commodity to the consumer?"

True, binding twine has fallen in price, but not because, as the Kansas paper thinks, of an increase in the duty. McKinley and his associates tried hard to keep the duty on binding twine where it was in the tariff of 1883, but the same forces which compelled him to put sugar on the free list, namely the Representatives of the Northwestern States, also demanded as the price of their votes on his tariff that manila, sisal grass, jute, and sunn, the materials from which binding twine is made, should be put on the free list, and that the duty on binding twine should be lowered.

The following were the changes made in these duties:

Materials.	Old Tariff.	New Tariff.
Manila	$25 per ton	Free
Sisal grass	$15 per ton	Free
Sunn	$15 per ton	Free
Jute	$20 per cwt	Free
Binding twine	2½ cents per lb	7-10 ct

Protected by a high tariff of 2½ cents per pound, the twine trust was able to charge the farmers high prices and force them to pay besides the duty on the raw material. Now, however, since the materials have been put on the free list and the duties on twine reduced the farmers get their twine cheaper. The American Economist and the Kansas organ of high tariffism are at perfect liberty to get all the consolation they desire from this. All the farmer wants is the facts in the case, and he can be trusted to draw his own conclusions. In short he has already begun to learn who pays the tariff tax, his first two lessons being on sugar and binding twine.

IN May, 1890, the McKinley bill was advocated by its author on the express ground that it would check the business here of foreign merchants and diminish the importation of competing foreign goods. Then its advocates did not want to conceal the fact that this was its chief purpose; they wanted their countrymen to know it. In October, 1891, they not only seek to conceal this purpose, but try to make people believe that the real object of the bill was to increase the importation of foreign goods. McKinley himself, who a year and a half ago "viewed with alarm" the figures giving the value of our imports, and promised that his bill would check such importations, now "points with pride" to the fact that imports have really increased, and applauds Senator Sherman while the latter boasts that the law comes nearer the ideal of free trade than any previous tariff act. Evidently the lesson of the elections of 1890 was not lost even upon McKinley.—N. Y. Evening Post.

A CORRESPONDENT asks the Cleveland Leader where the money required for the payment of the sugar bounty is obtained, "from the duty on imports, or, directly or indirectly, from the people of the United States." This inquiring person appears to have been taught that the "duty on imports" is not paid by the people of this country, but is contributed to the National Treasury by foreign manufacturers. The Leader makes this reply: "Most of the money paid as bounty to the producers of sugar comes from the duty on imports, but it is a direct outlay by the people of the United States." How can it be a direct outlay by the people of this country if the duties are paid, not by them, but by foreigners?—New York Times.

A TRUST IN CIGARS FORMED.

How the Manufacturers Will Take Full Advantage of the McKinley Tariff.

This time it is the cigar manufacturers. McKinley added several boards to the already high fence around the cigar industry. The duty on ordinary cigars is now from 150 to 200 per cent. Of course, only expensive cigars are imported, on which the duty, being mostly specific, is much less. Domestic prices have been advanced several points, but they are still often below the level of the top of the new tariff fence. The situation is tempting to manufacturers who consider it a disgrace to their calling to let such an opportunity go to waste.

Large cigar manufacturers of New York, Poughkeepsie and Binghamton held a meeting early in October. The objects of these meetings, as reported in the papers, were to form a cigar trust, with a capital of $25,000,000, to crush the life out of small manufacturers and labor unions, and to raise prices.

Mr. Theodore H. Allen, of 18 Broadway, in whose office the meetings were held, is the reputed father of this immense trust. He admits that meetings were held, "but," he says, "they were to discuss business prospects and possibly to devise some means of reducing prices."

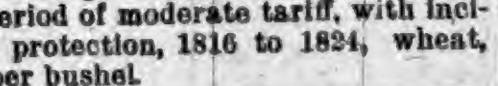
Millions of smokers will await with anxiety the outcome of this attempt to "devise some means of reducing prices." They know how extremely difficult and risky it is for a single manufacturer to lower prices when profits become so high as to impinge upon his sensitive conscience. The people are becoming accustomed to these meetings held for their benefit. They expect philanthropic manufacturers to go to much trouble and expense to lower prices. Consumers might at first resist reductions if they thought that only a few firms were concerned.

There are 15,000 to 20,000 cigar manufacturers in the United States, but less than 200 control the majority of the capital. Whether or not these 200 can so unite as to kill out, or buy out, the majority of the smaller manufacturers, and suppress cigarmakers' unions, it is certain that the McKinley tariff bill has greatly favored large and discouraged small manufacturers. One of the ways in which it did this was by increasing the duty on tobacco to be used as wrappers from 75 cents to $2.75 per pound. As Sumatra tobacco (about the only kind heretofore used as wrappers) costs only from 40 to 60 cents per pound in Amsterdam, the rate of duty is nearly 500 per cent. Small manufacturers, with little credit and less capital, were unable to buy more than a few bales of Sumatra tobacco before the duty was advanced. These were exhausted in a few months and now these unfortunate manufacturers, unable to pay $3.50 per pound for wrappers that cost their competitors $2, have been trying to convince the trade that domestic are just as good as imported wrappers. The trade is only convinced against its will and is inclining more and more towards the wealthy manufacturers who still have on hand from one to two years' supply of Sumatra tobacco, and who take pleasure in supplying goods in familiar wrappers. The small manufacturers are now weakened from heavy loses of McKinleyism and can offer but feeble resistance to the attacks of their more fortunate and aggressive brethren.

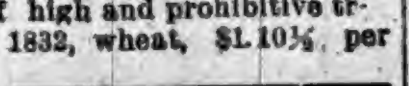
TARIFF SHOT.

Since 1816 we have had three periods of high tariffs, one period of a moderate tariff with incidental protection, and three periods of low tariffs. How the price of wheat has been affected by the tariffs during these periods is as follows:

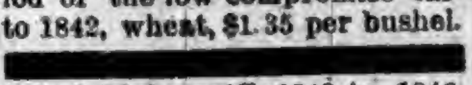
1. Period of moderate tariff, with incidental protection, 1816 to 1824, wheat, $1.26 per bushel.



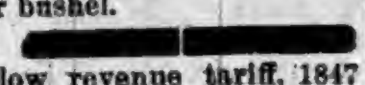
2. Period of high and prohibitive triffs, 1825 to 1832, wheat, $1.10½ per bushel.



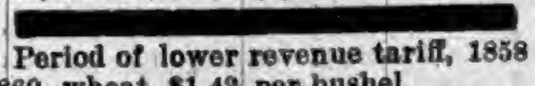
3. Period of the low compromise tariff, 1833 to 1842, wheat, $1.35 per bushel.



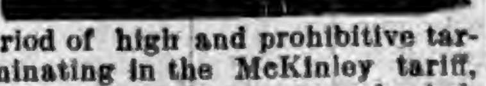
4. Period of high tariff, 1843 to 1846, wheat, $1.02 per bushel.



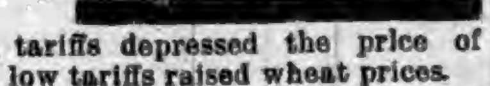
5. Period of low revenue tariff, 1847 to 1857, wheat, $1.51¼ per bushel.



6. Period of lower revenue tariff, 1858 to 1860, wheat, $1.42 per bushel.



7. Period of high and prohibitive tariff, culminating in the McKinley tariff, 1861 to 1890, wheat, $1.22 1-6 per bushel.



High tariffs depressed the price of wheat; low tariffs raised wheat prices.

Two Pictures Contrasted.

During the last fifteen or twenty years farm values all over the East have declined from 25 to 100 per cent. Many have been abandoned and others are mortgaged for all or more than they are worth. Several Eastern States already have abandoned-farm commissioners, to devise means for resettling these farms. Many Eastern farmers think this agricultural depression is caused by the opening of immense farming tracts in the West, where cattle and grain can be raised so much cheaper than in the East. But during this same period the West has suffered in the same way, and mortgages have been even more numerous here. There must be some cause that operates alike in both East and West.

It is barely possible that we have had too much "home market" during this time for the benefit of our farmers. If the "home market" theory be true it would naturally be supposed that farmers nearest to protected manufacturing centers would be most prosperous. Mohawk valley is filled with highly protected mills. Three-fourths of the knitting mills of the United States are at Cohoes, Amsterdam, Little Falls, and at other points in the valley. These mills are protected by duties of from 50 to 100 per cent. Some of the biggest carpet factories are in the valley. The duty on carpets will average 80 to 100 per cent. Remington guns and typewriters are made at Ilion. Edison's electric works at Schenectady employ 3,000 or 4 000. Linseed oil is manufactured in large quantities at Amsterdam. These are but a few of the highly protected industries that flourish in this valley.

Now what of the farms along this valley? Have they fared better than those in other parts of the East? The greatest decline in farm values in New York has occurred in this valley. Many farms have been abandoned, and the average decline in values probably exceeds 60 per cent. In Schoharie County it will average nearer 80 per cent. The population of this county has declined considerably since 1880.

The case of the Mohawk Valley is no exception to the rule. Wherever protected manufacturers congregate, there farm values decline most rapidly. This phenomenon can probably be explained by the class who have up to date made the farmers believe that they should tax themselves on all the manufactured articles used to purchase these invaluable "home markets."

Manufacturers understand the beauties of these home markets. Do the farmers understand them as well?

NEW LIES REFUTED.

All Grades of Wool Are Lower than a Year Ago.

Just as early in the year when wool prices were falling the McKinley organs denied it, so now they are trying to prove that only a few grades of wool are lower now than when the McKinley tariff was enacted, and that other kinds of wool are higher in price. They are, however, very careful not to quote prices. The truth is that not a single variety of wool grown in the United States from Maine to Texas is higher in price than a year ago. On the contrary, every variety is lower now, as shown in the table of comparison of prices for the weeks ending Oct. 9, 1890 and Oct. 8, 1891:

Kinds of Wool.	Price Oct. 9, '90. Cts. per lb.	Price Oct. 8, '91. Cts. per lb.	Cts. l'w'r '91.
Ohio and Pennsylvania XX and above	34@35	30@31½	3¾
Ohio X and above	33@34	29@30	4
Michigan X	29@30	27	2½
Ohio delaine	36@37	34@35	2
Michigan delaine	34@35	32@33	2
Kentucky, Maine and Maryland ⅜ bld	27@29	27@29	..
Missouri and Illinois ⅜ bld	27@28	26@27	1
Texas fall medium	22@24	21@22	1½
East Oregon choice	19@21	18@20	1
Valley Oregon, No. 1	24@ 5½	22@24	1¾
Kansas medium	20@22	20	1
Colorado fine	14@16	14@15	½

This covers all the chief grades of wool grown in the United States. The prices in every case are lower now than a year ago.

On the other hand foreign wools command higher prices in the chief markets of the United States than last year.

On Oct 9, 1890, the Wool Reporter said: "The tone of the wool market has continued strong and active. There is no weakness perceptible on any line of wool, prices being fully as strong as they were a week ago."

On Oct. 8, 1891, the same authority said: "The tone of the market continues quiet."

But this is just what, according to Mr. Dolan, the high tariff woolen manufacturer, was distinctly promised by protectionists.

Failures Since Jan. 1, 1891.

The number of failures increased 17 per cent.; liabilities increased nearly 50 per cent. over same period last year. The McKinley tariff has been geting in its work since January last. Says Bradstreet's: "The total number of mercantile failures in the United States for nine months of 1891 (South Dakota excluded, owing to a law there practically prohibiting the collection of the information) was 8,866 as compared with 7,538 in a like portion of 1890, a gain of 1,328, or 17 per cent. The 1891 total is the heaviest on record."

The amount of liabilities was $92,541,950 in 1890, and $138,811,510 in 1891, or an increase of over 49 per cent.

It must be remembered that the greater part of these failures have all occurred since the immense harvests here and poor harvests abroad were practically assured. Nothing but this good fortune has been able to prevent a panic and depression far more intense than any which have ever occurred in our history. What, in view of this heavy increase in failures, becomes of the wild and sweeping statements so often asserted in the speeches now being made in the State campaigns and in the high tariff organs that the McKinley tariff has brought the United States another period of great prosperity?

Supersensitiveness.

A person who has not done anything to distinguish himself is generally not allowed queer habits. Eccentricity is not for common people. But for Washington Allston, one of America's most noted painters, all things were right. His excessive sensitiveness was shown in many ways.

When India rubber overshoes began to be worn he was induced to purchase a pair for his health's sake, but he could never put them on or remove them except with a pair of tongs.

But that same delicate sensitiveness showed itself in another way. His scrupulous conscience was illustrated by an incident occurring in 1816, when he was in urgent need of money.

He had just found a purchaser for one of his pictures, but thinking the matter over alone in the evening he concluded that the subject of the painting was such that at some time it might have an immoral effect on some perverted imagination.

He immediately went to his patron's house, paid back the money, took the picture home and burnt it.

This was sensitiveness worth having.

THERE is no more hurtful plan for any young man than to buy a thing on the installment plan, especially things of which he has no pressing need, such as watches and jewelry. When you have the money to spend and are not in a mood to invest it so that it will increase your wordly possessions, we can certainly not object to your spending it as you like. But to run into debt for things you can easily get along without is simply suicidal. The Arkansas girl who was without shoes and stockings, and comfortable clothing for the winter, felt that she could get along without those presumed necessities of life, but feelingly remarked she "was suffering for a bosom pin." Too many young men seem to be suffering for gold watches. Buy what you can pay for and defer some luxuries till you can afford to pay for them.

THE Empress of Austria is said "to smoke Turkish cigarettes," sometimes destroying as many as forty a day. This article of cigarette is by no means the vile component bought by boys for five cents a fistful, and is no argument in favor of cigarette smoking. The brand of the article used by the Empress might not shorten life more than twenty years, while those used by the pallid young idiots on our streets shorten life by one-half. Let the process of removal go on.

I WOULD rather dwell in the dim fog of superstition than in an air rarefied to nothing by the air-pump of unbelief, in which the panting breast expires, vainly and convulsively gasping for breath.—Richter.

THE birth of her child brought presents of a dozen cradles to the Duchess of Fyfe, a pointed encouragement of an "infant industry."

THERE is nothing which this age, from whatever standpoint we survey it, needs more—physically, intellectually, and morally—than thorough ventilation.—Ruskin.

BOUND FOR AMERICA.

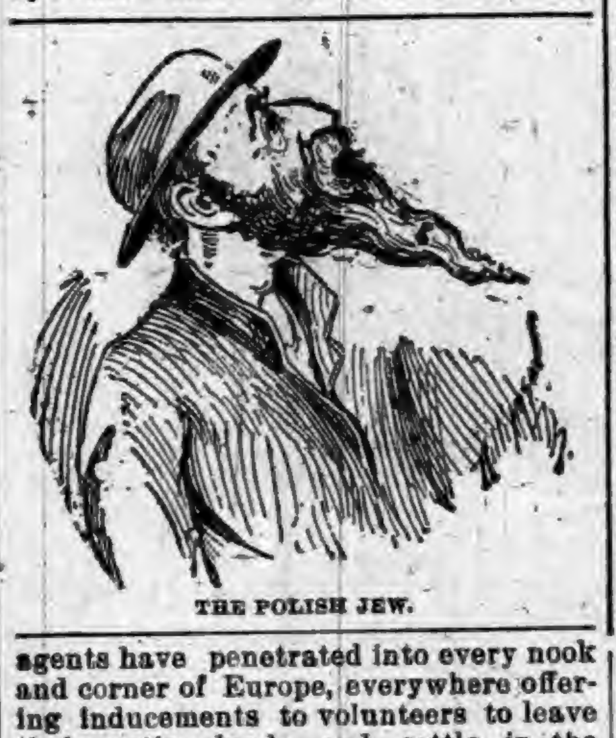
SCENES ON AN AMERICAN PACKET.

A Gathering of All Nations—How the Undesirable Secure Passage—Rows in the Steerage—A Concert in a Dozen Languages.

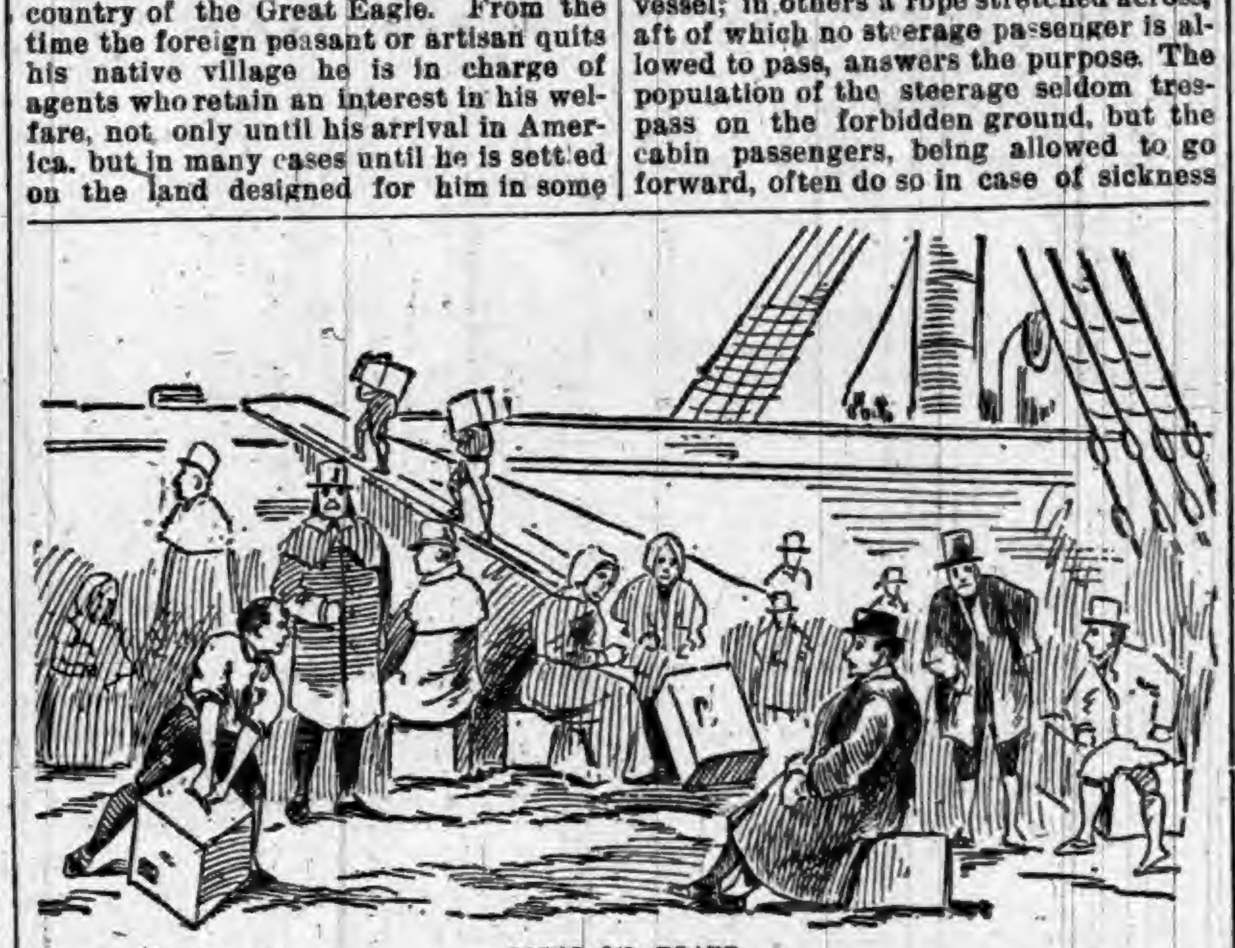
Our Immigrants.

Public attention is at present being called with no little emphasis to the extent of foreign immigration to this country. The number of those who come is attracting serious consideration from legislators and statesmen, while the character of the immigration is causing moralists and publicists no little concern. Something has already been done in the way of restricting the influx of an undesirable element of foreigners, but what has been accomplished in this way is probably very little compared with what will be done soon after the assembling of the next Congress.

Whatever may have been the advantages or disadvantages of wholesale immigration such as we have for a few years past experienced, it is certain that no more interesting study of human nature in all its phases is presented than in the steerage of a large steamer bound for the United States. For months before the sailing day immigration agents have been at work. Sent out by States desirous of settling uninhabited tracts of country, by immigration societies anxious to call attention to particular districts or to sell blocks of ground, by steamship lines and railroad companies wishing to profit by the fares of travelers, the agents have penetrated into every nook and corner of Europe, everywhere offering inducements to volunteers to leave their native lands and settle in the country of the Great Eagle. From the time the foreign peasant or artisan quits his native village he is in charge of agents who retain an interest in his welfare, not only until his arrival in America, but in many cases until he is settled on the land designed for him in some Western State. As the sailing day of any particular steamer approaches the cheaper lodging houses in the vicinity of the wharves and docks are filled up with men and women whose baggage proclaims the character of its owners. Men of all descriptions appear on the streets, carrying trunks, chests, and boxes containing the worldly property of the bearers. They are followed by their wives laden with bedding, clothing and various necessaries, and on the morning of the steamer's departure a singularly heterogeneous crowd is gathered on the wharf waiting admission to the steerage. Germans, with wooden shoes and long, loppy pipes are there, their baggage redolent of various odoriferous articles of food, Frenchmen are there, displaying even in poverty some evidences of taste and refinement. There are Italians, black-bearded, fierce, each probably having a stiletto concealed somewhere about his person. There are Hungarians from the Valley of the Danube, Poles from North Austria, Russian Jews, Spaniards, Portuguese, Swedes and Norwegians—all going to the Land of Promise. Should the steamer touch at an English port, the little assemblage is increased by the addition of a few hundred Irishmen, sorrowful at leaving their beautiful island, but soon forgetting their trouble in looking to the future. Side by side with them are Scotchmen, always ready to turn an honest penny, and Englishmen, always in the peculiar smock-frock so much worn in the country districts of South England. The cockney, with his tweed suit and tourist helmet encircled by a veil, has no place in the steerage; he may be seen looking from the cabin quarters, but must be much reduced, both in pride and fortune, if he will condescend to take passage in the steerage.



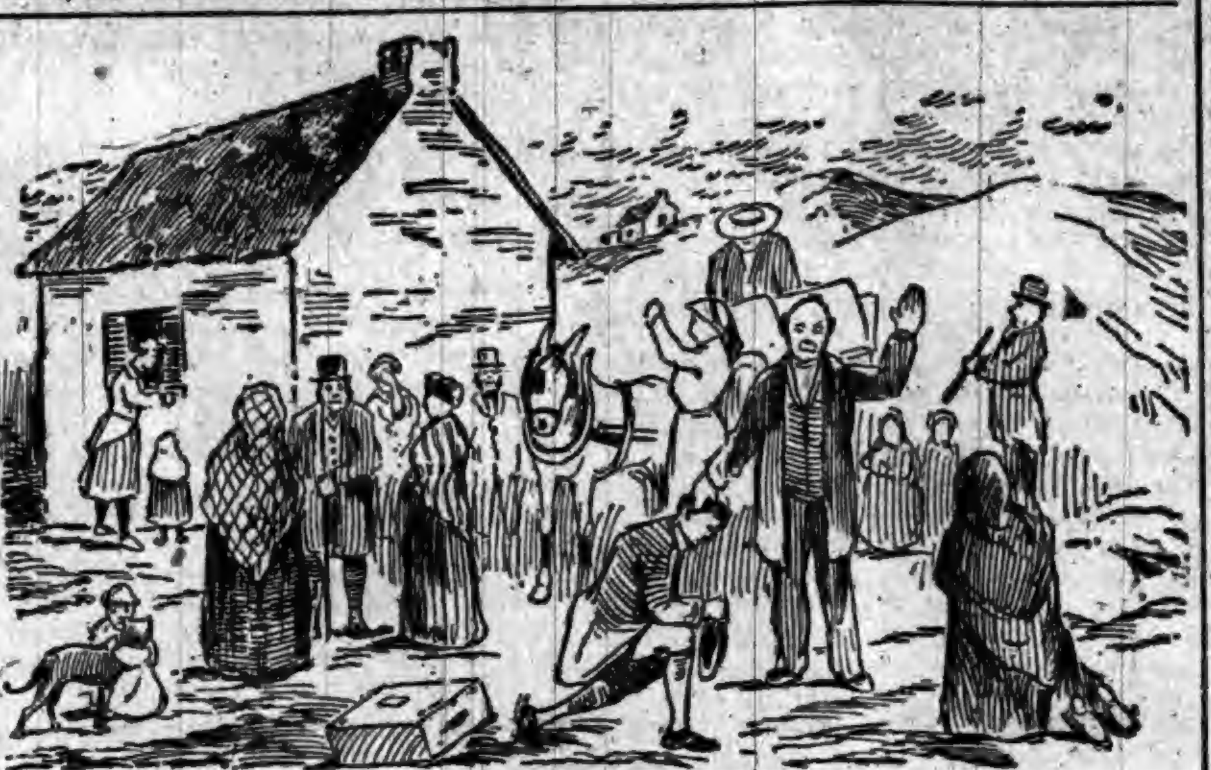
THE POLISH JEW.



GOING ON BOARD.

The vessel sailing from an English port must, before finally clearing, submit to a thorough inspection by Board of Trade officials. This is not an inspection of passengers, but of crew, and every outward-bound steamer is obliged to comply with the regulations laid down by the Board of Trade. Usually, as the vessel passes down the harbor, the crew is paraded on deck, a Board of Trade Commissioner calls the roll, while his associates scrutinize the members of the crew to ascertain if they are all present and if all are able-bodied men. This ceremony, which is by no means a formality, being over, the boats are examined to see if food and water are stored in them, and the Commissioners designate one which shall be launched. It is let down from the side, two or more seamen take their places in it, and row around the ship to prove the seaworthiness of the little craft. All these operations, so directly in their own interest, are watched with eager eyes by the passengers, both cabin and steerage, to most of whom the ceremony is entirely new.

Among the 1,200 or 1,500 passengers of a great packet there are usually representatives of every nation in Europe. Twenty or thirty languages are spoken, and as the quarters are crowded there is apparently no end to the disagreement among the occupants of the lower regions in the bow of the ship. Every little while, as preliminaries for sailing progress, and generally every day during the voyage, the cabin passengers are entertained by various disputes in languages to them unknown, about matters of which they are equally ignorant. There is perpetual bickering about the quarters, about the food, about the bedding; innumerable small thefts occur, which give rise to noisy wrangles, participated in by both men and women. "Only a row in the steerage," is on board ship a sufficient explanation for any unusual racket that may chance to be overheard. Though there is much talking there is very little fighting, for steamer regulations are very strict, and when brawls go beyond the limits of wordy warfare interference by a petty officer and two or three brawny sailors usually settles the difficulty in short order.



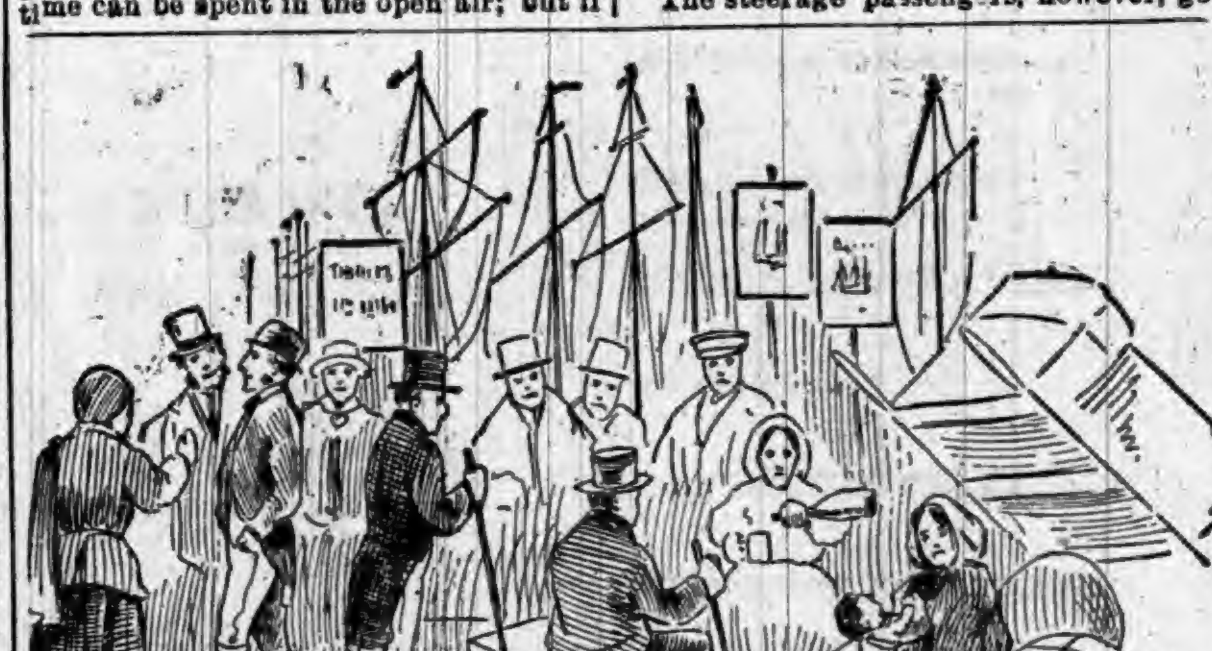
LEAVING A HOME IN THE EMERALD ISLE.

The population of the steerage is generally composed of working people, men and women of active habits, accustomed to much outdoor life, and who are, as a consequence, extremely impatient of being shut up in the narrow space allotted to their daily life on board ship. During their week or two of confinement they find themselves hard pressed for amusement. In their effort to entertain themselves and pass the time, they are commonly assisted by the cabin passengers, who frequently make up small purses for races and for contests in wrestling and boxing. The "tug of war" is a favorite sport, a long rope being provided; two champions, generally of different nationalities, choosing their sides and the followers of each side pulling against each other. National emulation in these contests is usually strong, and the Irishman will exert himself far more when pulling against an Englishman, just as the Frenchman feels it necessary to redouble his vigor when pitted against the German. It does not take much to awaken an interest in anything on board ship, and contests of this kind invariably have for an audience everybody who is not seasick.

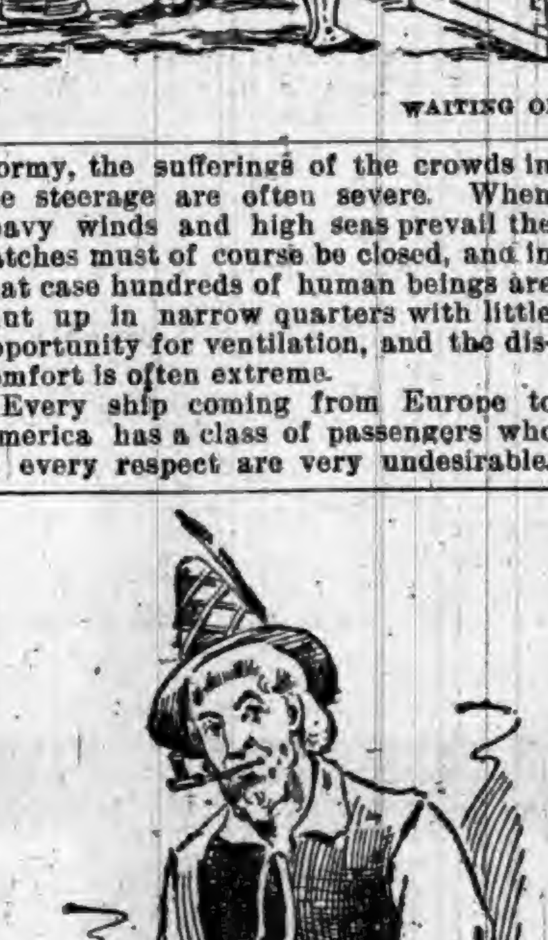
The distinction between the steerage and the cabin passengers is sharply drawn. In many ships a barrier is erected between the two portions of the vessel; in others a rope stretched across, aft of which no steerage passenger is allowed to pass, answers the purpose. The population of the steerage seldom trespass on the forbidden ground, but the cabin passengers, being allowed to go forward, often do so in case of sickness among the humble inhabitants of the front. The lack of employment renders the immigrants both ready and willing to do any work that presents itself, and the short-handed gang of sailors, pulling on a rope, invariably finds a number of willing helpers among the able-bodied passengers.

If the weather is good the passage is generally enjoyable, for most of the time can be spent in the open air; but if stormy, the sufferings of the crowds in the steerage are often severe. When heavy winds and high seas prevail the hatches must of course be closed, and in that case hundreds of human beings are shut up in narrow quarters with little opportunity for ventilation, and the discomfort is often extreme.

Every ship coming from Europe to America has a class of passengers who in every respect are very undesirable.

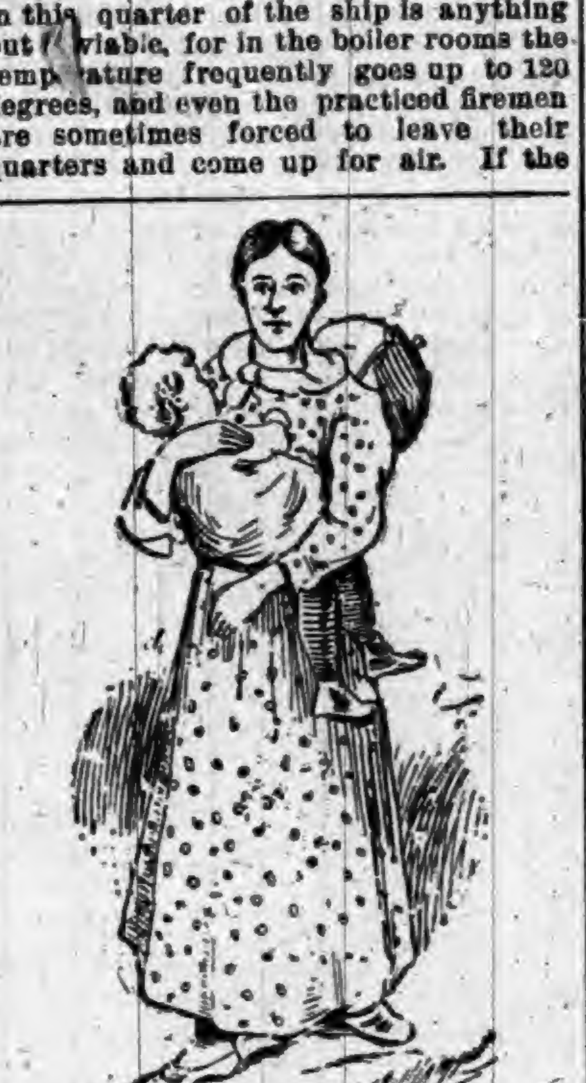


WAITING ON THE DOCK.



AN OLD TYROLEAN.

No matter how close the watch or how scrupulous the inspection before the ship leaves the dock, persons are almost certain to conceal themselves somewhere about the vessel, to be discovered only when the ship is well out at sea. If found before the pilot is dropped they are sent back in the pilot boat, but knowing that a rigid search will be made for them they generally conceal themselves effectually, and do not appear until the ship is a day or so out of port. When found they are roughly treated, and are generally sent down and put to work in the furnace room shoveling coal. Their fate in this quarter of the ship is anything but enviable, for in the boiler rooms the temperature frequently goes up to 120 degrees, and even the practiced firemen are sometimes forced to leave their quarters and come up for air. If the stowaway refuses to work he is kicked, beaten, starved, often put in irons and thrown into the hold, there to remain until the end of the voyage. In spite of the fact that he is likely to be returned to Europe on the same vessel that took him out, he comes on every voyage, and in some of the large packets as many as seventeen stowaways have been found when the ship got fairly to sea.



A STRANGER IN A STRANGE LAND.

But every stowaway, immigrant and cabin passenger has an equal interest in the end of the voyage, and when passing up the harbor to New York all look with eager eyes at what to them is a new world. At Quarantine the ship is stopped and the examining physicians go on board. The cabin passengers are usually exempt from the inspection at Quarantine, unless there be sickness among them which requires the attention of a physician; but the steerage passengers are paraded on the forward deck, and one by one they file past the doctors, who turn aside from the line for further examination every case by them considered to be in the least degree suspicious. If the ship arrives at night, she is anchored in the stream and a Custom House guard put on board to prevent anyone entering or leaving. The passengers are questioned as to their property, and required to declare whether they have anything new or dutiable. They make their declarations, and the next morning, when the steamer moves up to the wharf, their statements are placed in the hands of the Custom House examiners, who search their luggage for articles liable to the customs duties.

The steerage passengers, however, go through a different ordeal. The cabin passengers are landed at the wharf; the entire population of the steerage is taken in a barge which, towed by a tug, proceeds to Castle Garden, where the immigrants are penned up, brought up one by one and examined. After ascertaining their age, and some other particulars, they are catechised as to the amount of funds in their possession, in order to ascertain whether they are likely to become burdens to the public, and the stowaways and paupers are singled out and sent back from whence they came, for, the steamship company being under heavy bond, is required to return them. The others are released after their examination and inspection, and scatter to all parts of the country, soon to become citizens.

That Flowery Theologue.

One must resort to description when a name is to be spoken that has slipped entirely out of mind. The Northern Christian Advocate says:

A certain young theologue went down from Princeton to Philadelphia to preach. He was one of those extremely flowery writers who dazzle rhetorically the tender souls of the younger members of the congregation, and the elders were besieged to have him down again. They at length consented, but, alas! they had forgotten his name. So they wrote to one of the seminary professors, saying: "Please send us that floweret, streamlet, rivulet, starlight man to preach for us next Sabbath. We have forgotten his name, but we have no doubt you will be able to recognize him."

He was recognized. He was sent. He became pastor of the church.

THERE are two bearing apple trees in Indiana County, Pennsylvania, that were planted in 1792. One of them is ten feet in circumference.

Court Etiquette and Ambassadors.

The etiquette as to the precedency of Ambassadors at court was happily settled once and for all by the Congress of Vienna, in 1815, which decided that Ambassadors and Ministers were to take rank by seniority according to the dates of their appointments. By courtesy, however, the representative of the Pope is always allowed to hold the first place in the diplomatic body and to act as its spokesman. Before 1815 the wrangles between envoys about precedency were incessant, and the servants of rival legations very often came to blows and blood-shedding to determine whose coach should go first in a state pageant. In 1812 the French artist, Isabey, having been commissioned to paint a picture of the Congress of Aix la Chapelle, was sorely exercised in grouping his plenipotentiaries so as to offend none of them. He was particularly perplexed in settling who was to be the central figure of the picture. Prince Talleyrand, the representative of France, insisted on having the place of honor, and Isabey, as a Frenchman, desired to give it to him. On the other hand, the arbiter of the Congress was the Duke of Wellington; and Isabey, being a conscientious worker, wanted his picture to be historically as well as artistically correct. At last he bit upon the really-happy thought of putting Talleyrand in the center of the group, while making him and all the other plenipotentiaries face toward the door to greet the Duke of Wellington, who was walking in. Nowadays, diplomatists, though no longer so touchey about the places they are to fill in banquets and pictures, still hold tightly to some privileges which are hardly in keeping with the spirit of the age. Not only the envoys themselves, but their servants, are free from arrest in the countries where they reside, and an assault committed on an envoy's servant is regarded as an injury done to the envoy himself. It was only fourteen years ago that Baron Turgot, being French Minister to Madrid, wrote indignantly to his Government: "I have this day received a kick in the back of my servant." The servant had been molested in the riots that followed the overthrow of Isabella II., but an apology and fine were demanded pretty much as if the Minister himself had been kicked.—Chamber's Journal.

The avant-port, or entrance harbor, is nearly dry at low-water, and our tender, even with her light draught, stirs the mud as she proceeds. But when the tide is in, the large steamers and sailing ships can safely proceed to the docks, that have been dug from the money with an enormous expenditure of land and muscle. The docks and basins of Havre are all of man's creation, and owe their existence to his industry and perseverance. They are eight in number and a ninth, and perhaps a tenth, will be added before long. Altogether the existing docks will accommodate 2,000 vessels, and by crowding them closely another hundred or two might be taken in. The largest is the dock of the Eure, and it has a superficial area of fifty-three acres, with a mile and a quarter of quays. The water in this basin has a depth of thirty feet, and a dry-dock opens from it capable of holding any of the ships that visit the port. Think of the labor necessary for making this dock and building the massive walls that form its sides, and then say if Havre is not deserving of all her present prosperity. An older and smaller dock than this is the Bassin du Commerce, which is generally filled with sailing ships, and sometimes has held as many as 200 of them without impeding circulation. At one end of this dock is the square named after Louis XVI., and on pleasant evenings we will find a dense crowd there to enjoy the military or other music, and to lounge under the trees. Beyond the square and in full view from the dock rises the principal theater of Havre, and at the water's edge is the machinery for removing the masts of ships or restoring them to their places. The oldest dock of all is the Bassin du Roi, or Vieux Bassin, and it is also the smallest; it was made in 1669, and has latterly been enlarged so as to adapt it to the ships of the present day. It is difficult to ascertain the cost of the docks of Havre, as the old accounts no longer exist, and we have only the modern figures to guide us. Within the last twenty years more than $50,000,000 have been expended on them, and the work is still incomplete.—Thomas W. Knox, in Harper's Magazine

What Napoleon Cost England.

The steward of Napoleon I.'s household at St. Helena, received £1,000 a month for living expenses. Every fortnight there landed, for the table of his ex-Majesty, eighty-four bottles of ordinary wine, 266 bottles of strong wine (Constantia, Teneriff, etc.) and forty-four of porter. In all, the period of his stay on the island is said to have cost England £2,080,000. Of course, there were no poor wretches starving either in England or in France at the time.—Notes and Queries.

Smell of Paint.

On closing the premises at night, place on a stone in the center of the floor a pan of lighted charcoal, on which a handful of juniper berries have been thrown. Leave this until the following morning, and when the doors are opened all the disagreeable vapors will disappear. Another method is to use a pail of water in which a bunch of hay is soaking, but this takes a longer time to effect the same result.

Worth Knowing.

The difficulty of distinguishing certain forms of comatose sleep from actual death has suggested all sorts of ingenious tests, such as holding a bright looking glass in front of the nostrils, or forcing a spray of water against the closed eyelids. A still more decisive experiment, however, consists in injecting the pale skin of the upper arm with a strong solution of ammonia. If a spark of life lingers it will betray itself by the appearance of a red spot.—American Druggist.

Profits of New York Newspapers.

The profits of the big papers of New York are enormous. They are gold mines to their owners. All the daily papers are said to be making money except the Recorder and the Advertiser, the new papers. The Herald is supposed to be the most profitable of them all, and is followed by the Sun, the Morning Journal, the Tribune, and the Staats-Zeitung, in the order named. Mr. Bennett's income from the Herald is estimated all the way from $800,000 to $1,200,000 per year. The Sun is said to be paying 40 per cent. per annum on the capital invested. The profits of the Morning Journal and the Tribune are probably very near as large.—New York Letter.

Rescued from the Depths of Misery.

The misery endured by unfortunates whose livers are derelict in duty is unspeakable. Sick headaches, nausea, costiveness, disorder of the digestive apparatus, heartburn, vertigo, unrest, sourness of the breath, uneasiness beneath the short right ribs and right shoulder blade, fickle appetite, are among the hateful indicia of biliousness, which, however, speedily vanish when Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is employed as a regulator. Most effectually is its work of disciplining carried out, as a complete renewal of the digestive, secretive and evacuative functions satisfactorily proves. In cases of malarial disease the liver is the principal gland involved, and for maladies of a malarial type Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is an absolute specific. As a laxative—painless but effective—it is unrivalled, and it is an admirable preventive of chronic kidney trouble and rheumatism, and a superb general tonic and corrective.

Age of Trees.

Some German scientists, interested in forestry, have recently furnished information in regard to the ages of trees. They assign to the pine tree 500 and 700 years as the maximum, 425 years to the silver fir, 275 years to the larch, 245 years to the red beech, 210 to the aspen, 200 to the birch, 170 to ash, 145 to the alder, and 130 to the elm. The heart of the oak begins to rot at about the age of 300 years. The holly oak alone escapes this law, it is said, and there is in existence near Aschaffenburg, in Germany, a tree which has attained an age of 410 years.

The Magnetic Mineral Mud Baths,

Given at the Indiana Mineral Springs, Warren County, Indiana, on the Wabash Line, attract more attention to-day than any other health resort in this country.

Hundreds of people suffering from rheumatism, kidney trouble, and skin diseases, have been cured within the last year by the wonderful magnetic mud and mineral water baths. If you are suffering with any of these diseases, investigate this, nature's own remedy, at once. The sanitarium buildings, bath-house, water works, and electric light plant, costing over $150,000, just completed, open all the year round.

A Goodly Heritage.

On the civil pension list of Great Britain may be found: "Heirs and descendants of William Penn, £4,000 per annum." This pension was granted in George III.'s time "in consideration of his meritorious services, and of the losses which his family sustained in consequence of the American war." A Col. Stewart is the heir and descendant who now draws the pension. Surely a nice little sum—$20,000 a year—in consideration of being a great man's descendant.

Sleeplessness Cured. IV

E. FRANK, Pastor,

LOGAN, Ohio, Oct. 18, 1890.

I used Pastor Koenig's Nerve Tonic in the case of a 13-year old boy for a case of St. Vitus Dance of two years' standing. His condition was most lamentable, as his limbs were constantly in motion, and at table his hands could not hold knife, fork or spoon. The effect of this medicine was at once noticeable to all, and the boy himself remarked, "I know it helps me," and before the second bottle was used up, he insisted that there was no necessity of taking more as he was entirely cured.

"German Syrup"

A Throat and Lung Specialty.

Those who have not used Boschee's German Syrup for some severe and chronic trouble of the Throat and Lungs can hardly appreciate what a truly wonderful medicine it is. The delicious sensations of healing, easing, clearing, strength-gathering and recovering are unknown joys. For German Syrup we do not ask easy cases. Sugar and water may smooth a throat or stop a tickling—for a while. This is as far as the ordinary cough medicine goes. Boschee's German Syrup is a discovery, a great Throat and Lung Specialty. Where for years there have been sensitiveness, pain, coughing, spitting, hemorrhage, voice failure, weakness, slipping down hill, where doctors and medicine and advice have been swallowed and followed, to the gulf of despair, where there is the sickening conviction that all is over and the end is inevitable, there we place German Syrup. It cures. You are a live man yet if you take it. ●

How wretched is the man who has fallen a victim to Biliousness, Indigestion, Sick Headache, or diseased Liver, with all the horrible attendants. Look upon the picture. Poor man, being tired of dragging out a miserable existence, he is the picture of despondency; altogether, he is rather a forlorn specimen. Do we pity him? A sure, safe, speedy and easy cure can be found in Simmons Liver Regulator—Nature's own remedy. Sad Suicide.

Silas Feagler whose home is about 3 miles west of Auburn, committed suicide by hanging, last Wednesday afternoon. We are indebted to Coroner Miser for the facts in the case. It appears that for a month or so, he had been in poor health and despondent in mind. His wife testified that they often talked over matters, and she tried to cheer him up but often in vain, though sometimes he would take her advice and try to be himself again. Thinking a rest would be good, he went to North Manchester and visited his brother William for about two weeks, and on his return seemed better. But he soon fell into his former condition, and they concluded it would be best to leave the farm, so he could have freedom from work or worry. So they rented the farm to Wesley Grogg and got ready to move to Garrett. Wednesday last they took over one load in the forenoon, but as a near neighbor, Mrs. David Olinger, was to be buried that day, concluded to wait further moving till next day. The funeral was to be at one o'clock, and as it was now noon, they hurried to get ready for Mrs. Feagler to go. Noticing that she did not stop to eat dinner, he spoke to her about it, but she excused herself by saying she would not have time, which seemed to satisfy him, and she soon after left. After the funeral was over she returned and going to the house, found no one there. This alarmed her, in view of the fact that he had at times mentioned self-destruction, although he had asserted he would never do such a thing, as he thought it wicked and wrong. Mrs. Feagler at once called to Mr. Grogg who was husking in a field near by, and received answer from him that Mr. F. was not with him Still more alarmed she asked Mr. Grogg to come and help search for him. After looking about other places they went to the barn, and then saw a ladder leaned against the hay mow. Mr. G. went up that and and onto the hay, but said it was dark and could see nothing. She suggested that he go further back, which he did, and as his eyes got used to the darkness, he saw Feagler hanging, dead. He informed her, and they called in the neighbors and took him down. It appeared he had gone up onto a platform in the loft and near the track of the hay carrier and put an 1½ inch rope over the hay track and bringing the ends down, had fastened them securely, even using binder twine to secure it. Into this large rope, he had in a similar manner, securely fastened a half-inch rope, leaving it double and passing it through so as to leave a slip knot in the lower end, which he also fastened so it would work right. Then with this noose about his neck he had evidently jumped off the platform, falling so heavily as to loosen the fastenings of that end of the hay track, and breaking his neck. Of course he died at once, and when found his feet were resting on the hay, the knees partly doubled up. He was undoubtedly insane, caused partly perhaps, by ill health. We believe Dr. Casebeer who had treated Mr. F. lately, testified as to his mental and physical condition, making the case all the more positive and plain. The Coroner was called that evening, and a full investigation had, resulting in a verdict based on the above facts, that he came to his death by hanging, at his own hands, while in a state of mental aberration. It is a sad affair, and his wife and family deserve sympathy in their terrible affliction.

Queer Ears.

On the tibia of grasshoppers' and crickets' fore legs may be seen a bright shiny spot, oval in form, which has been found to be a true ear. Old naturalists supposed these strange structures helped in some way to intensify the penetrating, chirping sounds of crickets. No one for a moment thought they might be ears.

Sir John Lubbock and other modern naturalists have decided that crickets, bees, ants, and other little animals shall not keep their sense-organs a secret from us any longer; and although these are often in the least suspected places, still by careful experiments they are sure to be discovered as was the crickets' ear. Some grasshoppers have no ears in their legs, and as a rule these cannot sing.—St. Nicholas for October.

A FIGHT FOR LIFE.

Shall we Drive Slow Poison From our Breakfast Table?

Alum and Ammonia in our Bread.

A nuisance that troubled England fifty years ago is now rapidly spreading in this country, that is putting Alum in the bread we eat. This question is causing a great deal of discussion at the present moment, as it revealed that alum is being used as a substitute for cream of tartar in baking powders. A story is told that a very large percentage of the baking powders sold on the market contain either alum or ammonia, and many of them contain both these pernicious drugs. Much timely alarm is felt at the wholesale use of alum in bread, biscuit and pastry. To young children, growing girls, persons of weakly frame, alum bread eaten every morning, noon and evening is the most harmful. It is the small quantities taken at every meal that do the mischief. Alum is cheap, costing but two or three cents a pound while cream of tartar costs 30c., and the high price of cream of tartar has led cheap baking powder to be made of alum. If the reader wants to know something of the corrosive qualities of alum let him touch a piece to his tongue then reflect how it acts on the tender, delicate coats of the stomach.

BUTLER.

Manie and Emlin Campbell started to school at Angola last Monday.

The construction of the deep ditch east of town progresses slowly.

The report of our public schools shows an attendance of over 500 pupils and average attendance of over 480.

Business on the Wabash is quite dull, and many of the employes are getting a long rest. Better times are hoped for soon.

About 8:50 o'clock, last Saturday evening, our quiet town was aroused by the fire whistle at the Wabash shops, and hundreds hastened from their homes, some bareheaded and others indifferently clad, all hurrying toward a small, red, ominous patch of smoke rising in the vicinity of the Wabash shops and each asking the other where the fire was. It was soon learned that the large coal chute of the Wabash railroad had caught fire from the explosion of a torch in the hands of an employe and a small blaze that might have been extinguished with a pail of water, soon became a roaring, seething conflagration. The company, we believe, employed but a single man, and before he could get a pail of water, the flames were beyond control. The structure was a very large one, perhaps one hundred and twenty-five feet in length about twenty five feet high and about thirty feet wide; built of square timber and bolted together with iron rods, and was supported by a net work of posts and cross timbers. There were four cars of coal on the chute at the time of the fire, a part of which might have been run down and saved but for the lack of any authority, they were all suffered to perish. The fire burned with intense fierceness for nearly two hours, cutting off the passage of trains for a number of hours. No. 54, the Chicago and Detroit express, just got there in time to be unable to pass. Its engine succeeded in pulling down a part of the structure, thus hastening its destruction. Dennis Collins' dwelling stood in close proximity, but a shower of rain just before the fire, and a favorable wind saved it. Kinney's immense lumber piles and his large saw mill, filled with costly machinery, came very near succumbing to the avalanch of flames and cinders that fell upon them like a heavy snow storm for more than an hour, but the heroic work of a hundred men aided by the engine in the mill and the switch engine in supplying water and the timely rain saved this valuable property. The dock was totally destroyed, entailing a loss to the company of many thousands of dollars.

Dr. D. O. Fruth.

We are pleased to note the return visit of Dr. Fruth the chief examining physician of the Chicago Medical & Surgical Institute, to our City, Monday October 26, 1891, at the Swineford House. The Doctor's time is almost entirely taken up at the Institute, so much so that he finds it almost impossible to visit Auburn professionally as often as his many friends and patients desire. The Doctor has been visiting here for four years and we do not think any sensible person would require any stroger evidence of fair dealing and ability on his part than this fact; neither has one word ever reached our ears of the least dissatisfaction from any one. The Doctor has removed his family from Fostoria, Ohio to Chicago and expects to make the latter place his future home. He has on account of his large practice in Indiana and Michigan established the suitable corner of Wabash & VanBuren streets, with a staff of 18 specialists, physicians, surgeons and assistants and is succeeding in building up the finest practice in Chicago. We join the Doctor's host of friends in wishing them the success and prosperity he so justly deserves. The afflicted should not forget the date.

AUBURN AND VICINITY.

Some Reminiscences of its Early Days and Pioneer Citizens.

1855—Continued.

J. C. Somers, now of Pueblo, Colorado found on occasion of his recent visit here such changes as we indicate when eastward via the 9th street bridge, he saw the addition prematurely laid out and bearing his name, once again and permanently platted as the "Natural Gas Addition" and rapidly filling with comfortable dwellings.

John Somers who had been transferred to Auburn for school purposes by 1855, had then enough of town taxed privileges and was re-transferred to Union township. Again history repeated itself a few years ago when quite a number of farmers living in the town's vicinity found it too costly a luxury to be enumerated in Auburn and like Lewis Spangler and Peter Shaffer were glad to return to more economic township rule.

The schools now closed and the teachers were paid their salaries. E. P. Ketchem received $48, Mrs. F. E. Ring $54 and James Colgrove $83.28 which is explained by the fact that Mr. Colgrove being offered a situation as engineer on the proposed Air Line railroad, was released from his school engagement and accepted the position on the road. He later surveyed the lands which now constitute the original plot of the town of Waterloo or as it was at the time called, "Waterloo City." We believe he platted the town site for Miles Waterman the projector of the enterprise but that some question having arisen repecting th deed of right of way and depot site, Mr. Waterman sold out to Crane, Jarvis and Frothingham, by whom the town was founded.

The name of John D. Burr appears in an allowance for sawing wood for the schools and to those who knew him later, spruce, genteel, well-bred, the fact appears to his credit. Burr was in 1866 clerking for the dry good and grocery, firm of Case & McIntosh and the next year was employed by L. J. Blair in the county treasurer's office, as his deputy.

It was not for a number of years that the private or select schools finally gave way entirely for the free schools and even yet the normal summer terms of Messrs. Harrison and Coe continue in sort the system for the advantage of intending teachers, ambitious country young men and women and to enable some backward in their classes to come into place.

At that time, S. D. Long and others were granted permission to occupy the existing school rooms till needed for public school use.

The necesity for better school accommodations had now become pressing and the entire attention of the town board was centered in obtaining a site for a school house and in preparations to build thereon, On Sept. 20th, Messrs. Berry, Spangler and Long were delegated the duty of selecting such site and of preparing plats and estimate of probable cost. This committee made choice of lost No. 56 and 56, centrally situated in the western addition and paid for them $150. These lots still owned by the town have steadily enhanced in value from their localion and character, being high and in a desirable residence locality. They are not likely to be available for public purposes and they would furnish ground for two fine residences if sold, thus realizing funds the town needs for improvements and building up the locality.

Some years since, trees were planted on the lots and a pretense of a park suggested, but the space is too restricted to answer the demands of the Auburn of the future and the coming city will not be content with a two-lot park.

Miles Waterman, as well as many succeeding county officers temporarily or permanently residing at the county seat, largely identified and interested himself in measures for the welfare of the town.

As agent of the town board he attended to the purchase of the school grounds and, also, made sale of the town's school lot No., 16 to Joseph Stiefel and Aaron Wolf for $200. $100 cash, and $100 April 1, 1856.

The site obtained, the Board, to indicate good faith with expected contractors for building, at a meeting held on Dec. 18: "Resolved, that all school funds that may come into the treasury of the town be appropriated to defray the expense of building a school house and the town is hereby pledged to refund so much of the same as is public fund as soon as the building is far enough completed to accommodate schools."

To correspond with the plan adopted, Messrs. Barney and Houghton drafted a bill of specifications and particulars of the proposed building, which plan included the frame, its enclosure and painting same.

Sealed proposals were invited till Jan. 1, 1856 by publication in the Democratic Messenger.

Seeing the old parsonage of Presbyterian Society on the street in its travels to the McIntyre Addition there to stand on some good lot, the home of a family for years to come and noting the ex-Methodist church building secularized and doing excellent service for its business owners in its retiring place on Ninth and Cedar streets, recalls the town and times of which we are writing.

The Methodist society stood in need of a parsonage and as early as March, the trustees of the church, Messrs. Park, Johnston, Kline, McCune and Altenburg were empowered to procure a lot and thereon to be caused to be built a parsonage for the use of the preacher of the Ft. Wayne District, Northern Indiana Conference.

Attention has been called in the annals of other years to the free ranging of stock in village street, on country road, upon vacant lots and uninclosed lands.

Brand or ear marks distinguished ownership of cattle, horse and swine and it was a familiar sight along the highways to come upon the livestock of the farmers in herd or drove felicitously grazing by the road side.

In 1855, stock were commoners at law by order of the county commissioners who authorized stock to be allowed to run at large upon uninclosed lands or public common within the bounds of the several townships and in town and county, it was a gradual process, contested at every step by which the streets and roads were cleared for purposes of travel and the not always, poor men's lease of pasturage was closed.

This year marks the inauguration of the township library of which much was hopefully expected and which has had its day. The ephemeral issues of the press came and went but the township library came to stay.

The funds to buy books were raised by a tax of ¼ of a mill on property and 25c on the poll and distribution of books was based on the number of children of school age in each township. The expense of distribution was lessened and promptness secured by shipments direct to county auditors. On May 22, M. Waterman made distribution of six of these township school libraries to as many townships and in time all were supplied. Their reception awakened a new interest and imparted a fresh impulse to the reading spirit of the community at large.

(To be continued next week.)

Obituary.

Miss Alda Barclay, was born Dec. 15, 1870, and died Oct. 20, 1891, at the early age of 20 years, 10 months and 5 days. She was the daughter of Frank Barclay and Malinda (Grogg) Barclay, and passed all her brief life at or near this place. About a year ago, she fell into ill health, from which all the efforts of skillful physicians and the care of a loving mother and kind friends could not save her. At the time of her death, she was visiting relatives at Dayton, Ohio, and receiving treatment which it was hoped would benefit her. But all in vain. She gradually became worse, till death relieved her sufferings. She was brought back to her old home, the home of her grandfather, Jacob Grogg in this place, where since her father's death, she and her mother had resided. The funeral services were on Thursday, Oct. 22, at 3 p. m, conducted by Rev. G. W. Healy of the Presbyterian church, of which she was a member. Her remains were laid to rest by the side of her father in Evergreen cemetery. Her father had also died away from home, while at Detroit, Mich., Jan. 11, 1874. As mentioned, she was a member of the Presbyterian church, and was also a member of the Chautauqua Literary Circle of this place, and a general favorite in society, for her lady-like and gentle manners had endeared her to all who knew her. Her early death has cast a gloom over the social circle in which she moved, and a double sorrow falls on her bereaved mother.

A CANARD.

The New York Press Exposes that "Important Bill" Business.

The article credited to the New York Press, going the rounds of the papers, in which it is alleged that unfavorable action has been taken in the New York Legislature against the Royal Baking Powder, proves to have been a canard, gotten up and circulated by opposition baking powder makers for purposes quite apparent to every one.

The New York Press, in exposing the fraud, says: "No such legislation as that stated in this article has ever been had in this state—or in any legislation to our knowledge." The lie is made from whole cloth. The Press disclaims any responsibility for the publication, and objects to being made a party to such methods adoption adopted by some baking powder manufacturers in their efforts to substitute their goods for others now in use, Buildings Burned.

Wm. Krise who resides in the northeast part of Concord township had all the buildings on a farm he owned near there burned at once, on Friday night, Oct. 16. Between 11 and 12 that night, the neighbors discovered the buildings on fire and hurried to them, but too late to save them, as the fire had too much the start. The buildings were, the house, barn and hen house. It was plain they had all been set on fire, as there were traces of straw that had been carried from the barn to the house, which stood about 100 feet away, a garden being between the two buildings. Back of the barn was the hen house, but as all were burning at the same time, it is evident all had been fired separately. Mr. Krise can think of no good reason for such an act, as he does not know who could have a grudge against him. Still he has an idea as to the guilty parties and proposes to sift the matter to the bottom. If he finds out to a certainty it will go hard with them for Mr. K. is decidedly in earnest.

AGAIN ON THE WING.

A few Items of Interest as they were picked up by our Office Bird in his Flight Across the Country.

The Collector, with spirits so gay,
Started for the country once more;
He found many friends every day.
But had no time to linger at friendship's door.
He saw the people were pleasant natured and good,
And ready to do business on the square.
Everybody was in a talkative mood,
Allowing him in their joys to share.

The Collector and Solicitor found himself, this week, among the good people of Concord township. He is one of that sort of fellows who love to create pleasant affinities with people in the country. That he has been largely successful in that direction, is no longer a subject for questioning. This trip, however, possessed many features of special interest, as it enabled him to renew many acquaintances of his boyhood.

When the itinerant got off the train at St. Joe, about the first man he met who recognized him was James Abel, the postmaster. Mr. A. is an all-around, good-natured man and makes it pleasant for those who visit his place of business.

Among those who gave the inquisitive ink-slinger a warm grasp of the hand and a hearty welcome to his office, was Dr. B. S. Sheffer, who is a very pleasant gentleman and a reliable physician. He does a good business and enjoys the confidence and support of a large community in and surrounding the town in which he resides.

A. Kinsey, the popular furniture dealer, gave us a very pleasant reception, and by his well-stocked business room we were forcibly impressed with the fact that he is doing a good business in his line and the people there appreciate his enterprise.

Next, the man of news found himself on the threshold of the extensive sawmill of Simon Wineland. From a common sawmill, this institution has been enlarged until its capacity accommodates a large cider mill and feed mill in connection with the sawing department. The cidermill is of the improved style, and the work done by it is apparently as easily and systematically performed as by some of the very best machines in the country. There being no other mill within easy range, the farmers haul immense quantities of apples there to be worked up. Aside from his business enterprise, Mr. W. is a real gentleman, and all persons doing business with him will, we believe, be treated properly and get value received for their money.

Mahlon Baker is one of that sort of fellows, who possess that peculiar characteristic of making one feel at home in his presence. He is now connected with the Wineland institution.

J. D. Ferguson was found busily engaged in handling slate at the depot. He is an earnest laboring man and appreciates the beautiful country in which he lives and reads the COURIER to keep posted, which to say the least, is a very wise conclusion upon the part of any DeKalb county citizen.

Elijah Saylor, commonly known as "'Lige", was found at the rural home, where the brawn and muscle of his stalwart frame, indicated that he would not be an easy fellow to handle in a hand to hand setto. Hence, "Inky" approached him slyly and carefully, and effectually renewed the acquaintance of former years. He is a whole-souled, genial spirited fellow. and his hearty laugh alone, would dispel an ordinary case of the blues. He is a good farmer and reads the COURIER.

James W. May is another of the prosperous farmers of Concord township. He owns a large farm northeast of Concord, on which the crops this season have been reasonably abundant. He has a large barn filled with the choicest kind of hay, which will no doubt bring him good prices. His surroundings indicate him to be a farmer whose prosperity has been in a measure due to his industry. A good farm and the COURIER will bring success to any intelligent and industrious man.

Henry Baker, formerly storekeeper at Concord, is building him a store on the corner, opposite the old store building. (occupied at present by Richard Irvin) in which he will place a stock of goods. The building is of modern architecture, and when completed. will be very convenient. Mr. B. is a gentleman, and a good mechanic, and we hope to see him succeed.

Israel Wyatt has erected a very neat, tasty, and roomy house just south of the station. Just what "Is." will do with that fine residence, nobody knows. but people are presuming that ere long he will divide the sorrows and cares of this life with some fair damsel of the St. Joe valley. If taste and industry go for anything, we feel that some young lady will get a good husband.

Our acquaintance with A. S. Ricketts was renewed. Sherm. is papa to as fine a looking boy as Concord township possesses. He and his estimable wife have the "inkslinger's" thanks for royal entertainment.

James Hennesy, who has been section foreman on the B. & O. for many years, was found to be a good fellow. He is a good railroad man, and enjoys the confidence of the company and his several men under him.

James Peters, a section man, will develop his intellect in the future, concerning county affairs, by reading the COURIER. A good idea, and a thing that always pays.

Stephen Lutz is another of our farmer friends, whose business is prospering.

Great Stock Man.

A reliable stock dealer of Missouri, Mr A. M. Fisher, writes, and says that one dollar bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup completely cured him of a very annoying cough and pains in the chest, bordering on lung fever. Financially Embarassed.

A large manufacturer, whose affairs were very much embarassed, and who overworked and broken down with nervous exhaustion, went to a celebrated specialist. He was told that the only thing needed was to be relieved of care and worry, and have a change of thought. This doctor was more considerate of his patient's health than of his financial circumstances. He ought to have advised him to use Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the best remedy for nervous prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness, headache, ill effects of spirits, tobacco, coffee, opium, etc. Thousands testify to cures. Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The Buckeye State comes imposingly to the front in the November number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly. The opening page is adorned with a new and admirable portrait of Senator John Sherman, who contributes a scholarly and thoughtful paper upon "Ohio: Its History and Resources." There are, moreover, thirty-four portraits of distinguished sons of Ohio, living and dead, and numerous interesting views. In this same number, Clara Morris, America's foremost emotional actress, writes interestingly about "The Modern Emotional Drama, and its Exponents," and Andrew J. Symington, the eminent British writer, gives a picturesque account of "Iceland, and its Thousand Years." Other illustrated articles are: "Old Fort Laramie," by Major W. H. Powell; "Under the Palms," by F. Fitz-Roy Dixon; "Five British Authors," by Neil Macdonald; "The London Literary Hive," by Florence Fenwick Miller; "The Cottage and Grave of John Brown," by Frederick G. Mather; and "Arachne, and her Cunning Ways," by Colonel Nicholas Pike. Also "A Terrible Case," and half a dozen short tales.

SUMMARY OF EVENTS.

A CYCLONE ALMOST DESTROYS CONNEAUT, OHIO.

A Section of Indiana's Tax Law Unconstitutional—Dreadful Explosion at Cleveland—Prairie Fires—A Murderer Surrenders.

WILL EXPLODE.

Powder Factories Will Go Up, and the Result is Always Disastrous.

Cleveland special: The factory of the United States Mine Supply Company was completely destroyed by explosions, followed by fire. Three men were killed and seven injured. The factory was recently established in an old brick stable on Wilson avenue, which originally cost $10,000, and made fuses, cartridges, etc., for mining operations, using different preparations of gun cotton, dynamite, nitro-glycerine and gun powder. The first explosion was a heavy one, blowing the roof nearly off and shattering the walls. The shock was felt half a mile away. Shouts and screams were heard inside the building and then all of the twelve employes, excepting four, tumbled pell-mell out of windows and doors. Several other lighter explosions followed, sending the bricks in all directions, and in a few minutes the flames were at work. The fire was subdued and in a few hours the charred bodies of John Fink, 14 years old; Alfred Schaeffer, 17 years old, and Paul Pfannkuche, son of the president of the company, were dug out of the ruins. Minnie Peck, an employe, was severely cut and bruised, and other employes were injured, but not severely.

TERRIBLE CYCLONE.

It Cuts a Wide Swath Through Ohio, Leaving a Wake of Ruined Cities and Farms.

A special from Conneaut, Ohio, dated the 28th inst., says: A terrible cyclone struck this town shortly after 6 o'clock last evening, destroying about thirty houses and causing a loss of $100,000. The terrific wind storm was accompanied by very little rain. Record's Butter Tub Factory, worth $50,000, was completely wrecked. The Lake Shore depot was also demolished and the wreckage strewn upon the tracks for half a mile, rendering them impassable for several hours. Both the Nickel Plate and Lake Shore telegraph wires are tangled up on the ground. Many fine residences were unroofed and otherwise damaged. It is thought that no lives were lost. The storm was very severe all through Northern Ohio, and much damage to shipping is reported. In Cleveland the velocity of the wind was from thirty to forty miles an hour all night, and Lake Erie was literally "turned inside out." Several vessels are reported to have been wrecked, but no definite news has yet been received concerning them.

Prairie Fires.

Guthrie (O. T.) special: Prairie fires have been sweeping over a large part of Oklahoma and have done great damage south and southwest of this city. A large number of farmers had their hay and fodder burned, and three or four lost their barns and outbuildings. It was only by hard work that many farmers saved their homes. From that neighborhood the fires swept on east into the Iowa country, where many of the new settlers were compelled to fly for their lives. A number of them lost their houses and contents and several had all their wagons and implements burned.

Unconstitutional and Void.

In August the Indiana State Board of Tax Commissioners created by the last Legislature fined Phillip C. Decker, acting President of the German Bank of Evansville, in the sum of $500 for refusing to give the names of his individual depositors and the amount on deposit to the credit of each. He instituted habeas corpus proceedings and Judge Taylor, before whom the case was argued at Indianapolis, rendered a voluminous opinion in which he holds that the section giving the Tax Board the right to fine and imprison for contempt is unconstitutional and void.

Sale of the Whitely Reaper Works.

At Springfield, Ohio, the East street shops, known as the Whitely Reaper Works, which have been offered for sale for some time, were sold to Mr. Scott Bonham, attorney, of Cincinnati, for $200,000. This does not include the Toronto Reaper Works, which were sold to the Herb Medicine Company, of Weston, W. Va., for $12,333. Mr. Bonham does not disclose the names of his principals, but they are believed to be Seasongood, Meyer & Co., of Cincinnati, who will re-establish Mr. Whitely in his place.

His Papers Sealed Up.

At the particular request of Mrs. Parnell the papers of the late Mr. Parnell have been placed in sealed boxes and deposited in the vaults of the Bank of Brighton.

Innocent of Crime.

New York special: Gov. Hill has signed a full pardon for Edward Kohut, who has been in Sing Sing six years for a crime of which he is innocent. Kohut and his brother were convicted of firing a tenement in this city by which four persons lost their lives, and were sentenced to imprisonment for life. Kohut's brother confessed that he and another man were guilty, but that Edward was innocent.

A Steam Barge Burned.

The steam barge Alpena was destroyed by fire on Lake St. Clair. The crew is thought to have escaped. Loss, $24,000; partly insured.

Peace Follows War.

The Island of Crete is reputed to be more peaceful than for several years past. The Turkish Government has enlisted the more active brigades in gen d' arms and has broken up the bands, the new gen d' arms showing great eagerness in hunting down their former comrades.

Succeeds His Father.

Frederick Smith, conservative, son of the late William Henry Smith, has been elected a member of Parliament for the Strand division in succession to his father.

'Twasn't Jones.

Several days ago a man was found drowned in the canal at Indianapolis, and the body was identified by a granddaughter as the remains of J. E. Jones of Philadelphia. She ordered the body prepared for burial, and the coffined remains were left at the morgue to await further instructions. Next day a stranger called to see "the fellow named Jones, of Philadelphia," who was found in the canal. After viewing the body he expressed his indignation "that anybody should think he looked like me," and the explanation followed that he was the only living J. E. Jones, of Philadelphia, and that the granddaughter was terribly mistaken as to the identity of the drowned individual. The body still remains at the morgue unidentified and unclaimed.

A TERRIBLE MISTAKE.

Father and Son Respond to the Alarm Bell and Receive Serious Wounds.

Aberdeen (Ohio) special: Abut 10 o'clock the other night, Marshall Harover, a prosperous and well-to-do farmer living about two miles from here, shot two of his neighbors, Eben Davis and son Frank. Marshall Harover lives with his wife and mother, on a farm about two miles from this place, his wife was away from home. And he, with his mother and the house girl, was alone in the house. A few yards from the Harover residence lived a tenant by the name of Botts. About 10 o'clock Harover heard some one endeavoring to effect an entrance into the house. He called to Botts, who came out and frightened the parties away. It was then determined to follow and capture the burglars, and, with this end in view, the servant-girl was instructed to ring the dinner-bell for neighboring help. In the meantime Harover loaded an old musket with a heavy charge of No. 6 shot. After loading the gun he stepped out the door and, seeing three men approaching, fired into the group when they were not over five yards away from him. At the discharge of the gun one man fell and another staggered. Harover then discovered that he had shot two of his neighbors.

Eben Davis is a near neighbor to Harover, and, hearing the ringing of the bell, aroused his two sons and started for the Harover place. Harover mistook them, in his excitement, for strangers, and being very much excited fired upon them. The father received most of the charge, while the elder son, Frank, was but slightly wounded. The younger son escaped unhurt. The shot took effect in the left arm and side of the father, and he lies at home in a critical condition. The very sad affair is much regretted by the friends of both families.

IT MAY BE WAR.

Secretary Tracy Will Take a Hand in the Chilian Riots If They Do Not Cease.

Washington special: Interesting international difficulties are likely to ensue as a result of the recent cowardly attack on the American men of war's men in the streets of Valparaiso. Capt. Schley, of the United States vessel Baltimore, has cabled the Navy Department the details of the affair, from which it appears that the attack was both cowardly and uncalled for. Secretary Tracy laid the report before the President and it will be considered at a cabinet meeting. The opinion is prevalent that Minister Egan will be instructed to demand immediate reparation and indemnity from the Chilian Government. The President said: "I mean to have no more of this business from any nation, and the demand upon Chili must be immediate and peremptory." Capt. Schley informed Secretary Tracy in his report that it has become impossible for American officers to go ashore without being insulted, and that hereafter they mean to go armed, and to resent insults in the proper way. "We are losing our respect by permitting these things," says Schley, "and the younger officers are wild with rage, and cannot be much longer restrained." "I do not want them to be further restrained," said Secretary Tracy to one of the commodores on duty at the head of a great supply department, "and I have told Schley so." Therefore, any day may bring news of a serious riot between the Americans and the Chilian mob, instigated and secretly encouraged, it is believed, by persons high in authority there.

BURIED ALIVE!

Terrible Struggles Disclosed in a Coffin.

Erie (Pa.) special: Two weeks ago farmer Geo. Heideker, of Green Township apparantly died very suddenly of what was supposed to have been heart failure. The remains were buried four days later from St. Johns Lutheran Church of this city, and temporarily interred in a neighboring cemetery lot, pending the purchase of a lot by his family. The transfer was made the other day, and when the remains were exhumed the casket was opened at the request of his family, and a horrible spectacle was presented. The body had turned around, lying on its face, and it and the interior of the casket bore traces of a terrible struggle with death in its most awful shape. The distorted and blood-covered features bore evidence of the horrible agony endured. The clothing about the head and neck had been torn into shreds, as was likewise the lining of the coffin. Bloody marks of finger nails on the face, throat and neck told of the awful dispair of the doomed man, who tore his own flesh in his terrible anguish. Several fingers had been entirely bitten off and his hands torn with the teeth until they scarcely resembled those of a human being.

Uncle Sam Means Business.

The United States Government has, through Minister Egan, formally demanded reparation from the Government of Chili for the attack recently made in Valparaiso upon a number of seamen of the United States cruiser Baltimore. The demand made by the United States Minister is no informal suggestion that the Government at Washington expects some kind of satisfaction for the killing and wounding of the Baltimore's sailors. It is friendly, but the notification is given according to directions received from the State Department at Washington that the United States demands an immediate explanation of the whole affair and reparation for the injuries inflicted. Acting upon the instructions sent him from Washington, Egan presented the Chilian junta with a detailed statement of the results of the investigation made by Captain Schley, of the Baltimore, and Egan himself.

Hunters Shoot a Man in the Wilderness and Leave Him to Die.

West Superior (Wis.) special: A most unfortunate accident happened a half mile distant from Dedham. While Adam Miller and J. L. Showers were hunting in the above vicinity, the former observed a movement in the underbrush and thinking it was a deer directed a shot. One cry of pain followed the shot, but it was the cry of a human being. Too frightened to investigate, Miller and his companion fled to the station where they knew a train was soon due for Superior. This they took and upon arrival proceeded at once to police headquarters where Miller requested Jailor Kenfield to lock him up. This the jailor refused to do as there was no charge preferred. In the evening a dispatch was received stating that the man who had been shot near Dedham was dead. His name was D. Sitlz.

Gross Irregularities.

Three ex-city officials of Denver, Col., realize that the way of the alleged transgressor is hard. The grand jury has brought in three bills of indictment against ex-City Treasurer William Bliss, ex-Deputy Treasurer James Hadley, and Deputy Auditor George R. Raymond, charging them with embezzlement, malfeasance in office and forgery. The accused were arrested and lodged in jail where they will remain until the amount of bond required is fixed by the court. These indictments are the result of the work of the investigating committee, which reported some time ago, that it had discovered gross irregularities in the books of the City Treasurer and Auditor. The alleged amount said to have been stolen is $45,000.

Many Sailors Lost.

Gloucester (Mass.) special: The schooner Percy, owned by James S. Ayer, with a crew of twelve men, and the schooner City Point, owned by Cushing & Kenney, of Portland, with a crew of fourteen men, sailed on codfishing voyages about August 25, the Percy to the Georges and the City Point to Le Have Banks. Neither has been heard from since, and there is little doubt that they have been lost with all hands. The men are mostly provincials and foreigners by birth, but many of them leave families in New England.

The Levee at New Orleans Continues to Cave In.

New Orleans special: The levee and wharf at the foot of St. Philip, Dumante and Ursualine streets continue to cave in, the land having already sunk from six to eighteen feet, covering five acres in extent. The Louisville and Nashville railroad has abandoned its depot at the foot of Canal street and transferred its business to the Ponchartrain depot because of the danger that its line, as far up as the French Market, would eventually go into the river.

Train Wrecked.
